The regulations for the government of the home have grown until it requires quite a volume to contain them—

The old soldiers are expected to know and to obey these regulations.

There are now 662 paragraphs in the regulations. Many of these regulations were made 25 or 30 years ago. They may have been adapted to the conditions then, but they are not adapted to the conditions now.

Under this present system with the local manager of the board having complete say as to what should be done, these are the conditions that were found. The committee makes a number of recommendations, and this is one of them, that this home be taken out of the control of the board of managers and turned over to the War Department. When a suggestion is made here to abolish conditions that produce such a report as this, and to make a board that will be efficient and to improve conditions, gentlemen complain that we are trying to hurt the old soldiers.

Mr. Speaker, as to the Togus Home, in Maine, this delightful spot to which these old soldiers are yearning to go, I was never more surprised in my life to learn that it was built on a hill in the middle of a swamp, one of the most unhealthful places in the State of Maine. It was put there because somebody discovered a spring to which some unusual medicinal qualities were assigned. The old soldiers go to Maine and get malaria, and then they go traveling about the country to the homes known as sanitariums, trying to get rid of the malaria. The most active and most consistent antagonist of this proposition to reduce the number of the board of managers from 11 to 5 is the local manager from Maine, whose term expires in 1914.

Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the welfare of these old soldiers. I desire these homes conducted by an up-to-date, energetic, live board of men who will not take somebody's statement as to conditions and as to policies, but who will travel about the country, from home to home, seeing for themselves, and basing their policy and action on information gained from personal observation and inspection. It is time that a change was made, and made in the interest of the men who are the beneficiaries of the homes.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not know where the gentleman got his information about the swamps at Togus, but certainly it is misinformation. There is absolutely nothing of the kind at Togus, and the best possible proof that I know of the healthful conditions of the spot is that the gentleman's own colleague from New York, Mr. GOULDEN, just said that some 200 of the old soldiers in New York left New York and went to Maine to live, and are there in the home now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I got my information from the members of the board of managers when they appeared before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I live there and I have seen it, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that Gen. Smith, the local manager for the home, was present when the statement was made. I have neither anything to hide nor do I desire to conceal the sources of information.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND] asked a question designed, or perhaps not designed, to show the necessity of disposing of the sundry civil bill to-day. My recollection is it is about five weeks since Congress met. The sundry civil bill could have been passed the first week. Will the gentleman say how long since the bill did pass the House? The bill, of course, will show.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we passed the bill early in the session; I do not recall, however.

Mr. MANN. The bill passed the House April 22. If there has been any such urgent demand for the funds provided in the bill in the opinion of the Senate, the bill would have passed the Senate before May 7, as the only change made in the bill by the Senate was adding the letter "s" to some place in order to make it "departments" instead of "Department of Commerce and Labor" and this one amendment, and if the Senate thought it necessary to wait two weeks in order to insert those amendments, does the gentleman think there is any objection to the House considering it for 24 hours?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. My opinion is that it is of very great importance, Mr. Speaker, both for the management of the homes and the welfare of the men who live in them, that the board of managers be reduced. I ask for a vote upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House further insist on the amendment reported by the Clerk, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]——

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if, in his opinion, these iniquities exist as shown by the report, would they not continue perhaps quite as likely under a board of 5 as under a board of 11, and if the personnel of the board is not more responsible for it than the number of the board?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, Mr. Speaker. If I thought that by reducing the number of members of the board we would increase the evils, I would not advocate reducing the membership of the board, but I should favor abolishing the board and turning the control of the homes over to some other organization.

Mr. REED. If there is iniquity, why is it not just as easy to correct these evils existing under a board of 11 as under a board of 5?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have endeavored in the hour which I have more or less occupied on the floor to explain the reasons that make me believe 5 members would be better than 11, and if I have not convinced the gentleman I can not do so now. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to further insist on the disagreement and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] makes the preferential motion to recede and concur. The vote is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. GILLETT.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, May 20, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

Branch National Citizens' League and Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, favoring immediate consideration of currency-reform laws; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 19, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT EXPRESSAGE ON LAND-GRANT RAILROADS (S. DOC. NO. 39).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 15th ultimo, reports received from the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, the Auditor for the Treasury Department, the Auditor for the War Department, the Auditor for the Post Office Department, the Auditor for the Interior Department, and the Auditor for the Navy Department, giving information relative to the payments made out of public moneys to express companies for transportation of property of the United States over lines of railway companies which received grants of land from the Government upon the express condition that such lines shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of sundry journeymen cigar makers, residents of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Real Estate Exchange of Massachusetts, relative to the administration of the provision in the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill relating to real estate, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of J. B. Kuntz and Hugo Mayer, of Huntingdon, Pa.; John Garland Pollard, of Richmond, Va.; H. G. McCormick, of Williamsport, Pa.; A. S. Reed, of Wilmington, Del.; Thomas E. Reynolds and M. Nathan, of Johnstown, Pa.; and of George S. Washington and Frank W. Renninger, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NEWLANDS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Reno, Osceola, Goldfield, Elko, Carson, East Ely, Lovelock, Manhattan, Virginia City, Fallon, Austin, and Winnemucca, all in the State of Nevada, and of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kopperl, Grand View, and Fort Worth, all in the State of Texas, praying for a reduction in the duty on sugar, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOLLIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hanover, N. H., and a petition of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., praying for the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal act exempting American coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls, which were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

of a national department of public health, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the passage of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the selectmen of East Livermore, Me., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on print paper and pulp, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented petitions of Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Chelsea, Washington, and Vershire, all in the State of Vermont, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the closing of the gates of the Panama Canal Exposition on Sundays, which were referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

PAPERS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Mr. JONES. I have received a letter from Dr. J. Edward Buckley relative to access being denied to secret papers held by the Department of State and requesting that certain communications and papers which accompany the letter be placed on the files of the State Department. I move that the letter and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. REED, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 73, authorizing the Committee on Naval Affairs to employ an assistant clerk, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 80, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, to hold hearings, etc., reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 42) thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 60) to provide for agricultural entry of oil lands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 43) thereon.

THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 85, authorizing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, to hold hearings, and so forth, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. PENROSE. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD on the 16th instant, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MRS. A. E. GRANT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate joint resolution No. 30, and I submit a report (No. 44) thereon. It is a very brief resolution, but a very important one, which, I think, will appeal to every Senator. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 4, after the word "extend," to insert "for a period not exceeding six months," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they hereby are, authorized to further extend, for a period not exceeding six months, with pay the leave of absence to Mrs. A. E. Grant, a clerk in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY POSTAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1913, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Postmaster General to carry out effectively the provisions of sections 5 and 8 of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, approved August 24, 1912, the following additional sums, being deficiencies for the service of the fiscal year 1913, namely:

For temporary and auxiliary clerks in post offices, $300,000.

For substitute, auxiliary, and temporary city delivery carriers, $300,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire why this additional appropriation for clerk hire is necessary? Was no money for this purpose provided in the appropriation act?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is in connection with the parcel post and covers expenses which were not necessary or estimated for when the regular appropriation bill was passed. The amount appropriated has been exhausted, and this deficiency is an existing one. The law department has decided that it can not be carried as a deficiency, and the proper dispatch of the postal business is being materially interfered with. If the Senator desires it, I will have read a letter from the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to inquire if it really is not due to the legislative provision which requires 8 hours' work to be done in 10 and provides pay for overtime that results in additional clerks being necessary in a great many post offices to do the work which heretofore has been done without hardship to the clerks or carriers?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is the case to a large extent. Three hundred thousand dollars of this appropriation is intended to meet that exigency. The law limited the work of carriers to eight hours, and they can not in the eight hours do the work.

Mr. BRISTOW. There had been an 8-hour law previously to this; they have been on the 8-hour system all along; but this requires that 8 hours' work shall be performed within 10 hours. I have a number of requests from my own State asking additional help where it had not been needed, because it is now necessary either to employ additional carriers or to let the work go undone. It is not due to any excessive amount of work imposed upon the carriers, but because they could not arrange the 8 hours within 10 so as to make it convenient to do the work. It is the fruits of what appeared to me to be an unwise provision at the time in requiring the carriers and the clerks in many offices, where the trains did not run conveniently, to do their 8 hours' work within the 10 hours. To illustrate, say Monday is a heavy day and Friday will be a light day. Under the old system a carrier might work over half an hour on Monday, and he would be permitted to deduct that from some other day during the week, putting in 48 hours during the week instead of exactly 8 hours each day. The repeal of that provision has necessitated this additional expense even where the burden of the service is no greater now than it was then.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. To some extent that may be true.

Mr. BRISTOW. It will in the end aggregate, I am advised, about three and a half million dollars a year.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think that is correct. That will be the additional expense incurred by the legislation referred to; but the legislation has been enacted; it creates a liability on the Government to carry out the law which has not been appropriated for, and $600,000 is asked for to cover only two months. It is a deficiency for two months, and it is a deficiency that arises under laws that Congress saw fit to enact.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that he ask permission to have incorporated in the RECORD the letter from the Postmaster General, so that it may be demonstrated, while we are considering this deficiency bill, that the estimate of the Post Office Department for this eight-hour provision in the Post Office appropriation bill of 1913 is approximately correct. It will add about $1,800,000 a year. In the act for the current year Congress foresaw that by providing as follows:

For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay, and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices where city delivery is already established, $2,285,000.

And also:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $1,000,000.

Of course, not all of that million dollars is because of the provision put into the Post Office appropriation act last year, but we might just as well understand now that the result of the Senate yielding to that House provision will cost the Government $2,000,000 a year at the lowest estimate. This is only an estimate for less than a third of the year.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. For two months.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will inquire of the Senator——

Mr. BRYAN. It will be $3,600,000, if the estimate is correct for the next nine months, and it is growing. It ought to call to our attention that necessity of changing that provision of the law in line with the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], or in line with the amendment which I had the honor to offer, which in effect was that instead of paying the extra money for an hour or two overtime of service we give compensatory time. I understand that the men themselves before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads did not claim that they wanted more money for the service, but that they did not want to be required to work overtime. But this provision invites the department to work them overtime, and is an inducement to the men who are to stand for it because they get more pay.

No business man would submit to that kind of thing. It is a very different proposition to say to a man who has to earn his living by manual labor, you shall not be required to work more than eight hours a day, from saying to a clerk in the office that although your employer may find it necessary to stay there beyond that time, if you are required to do so you shall be paid additional, although the day before you might not have been required to work eight hours.

It seems to me that we are following a dangerous precedent. Of course, I understand perfectly that it is the duty of Congress now to make the appropriation, but the fact that here for two months' work we are appropriating $600,000 of money for a deficiency ought to make Congress stop and consider whether that provision ought not to be repealed.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Florida if it is not a fact that the department did not ask for this provision and suggested the wording of a provision that would have maintained the eight-hour day as perfectly as it is now maintained, which would not have imposed any hardship upon the carriers and that would have avoided this unnecessary deficiency.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, that is true, Mr. President. The representative of the Post Office Department objected most strenuously to that provision being incorporated into the bill. Nevertheless it was incorporated by the committee, but when it came into the Senate it was stricken out, and it was put back again in conference. The prediction of the Second Assistant Postmaster General is borne out by the necessity for this piece of legislation.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word on this subject. When the Post Office appropriation bill came to the Senate last winter it was estimated that $3,000,000 would be required to provide for giving clerks and carriers 8 hours in 10, and the Senate added $900,000 to an appropriation made by the other House for that purpose. The probabilities are that some part of that money has been needed in providing for the additional expense incurred in carrying on the parcel-post operations, but there was never any doubt in the minds of either the House or Senate Post Office Committees, I think, that substantially $3,000,000 would be required to pay the clerks and carriers for the additional expense incurred in giving them 8 hours in 10.

The question whether that was justifiable or not is quite another matter. Senators have just said that they thought it was not, and that the provision should be repealed. My judgment is that it was justifiable. Before the enactment of that law very frequently clerks and carriers were required to perform what amounted to 10 or 12 hours of service on account of the difficulty in fixing their routes, so that they were obliged to remain at the post office between the morning and afternoon service. Such investigation as I made of the subject at the time made me come to the conclusion that this provision in the law is justifiable; but, of course, you can not impose an additional obligation of that sort without providing the necessary money to pay for it; and we can not incur the burden of the parcel post without paying for the expense of the service. Senators must expect, in my judgment, that such provisions in the law will require additional appropriations; and this particular additional obligation was provided for in the bill when it was in the Senate, and agreed to in conference.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that while I believe there were occasional cases where hardships were imposed upon carriers and clerks in the application of the 8-hour law, that is, 48 hours a week, they were very rare. Occasionally in cities like New York, Boston, or Chicago, the way the law was administered was a hardship, requiring 8 hours to be taken in 12 hours or 14 hours, and in undertaking to correct a few isolated abuses, we have enacted a law which requires the employment of additional clerks and carriers where they never were needed and are not needed to-day. To illustrate: I have in mind now a city in my own State where the heavy mails come in at night. The clerks and carriers are at the office, say, at half past 7 or at 7 o'clock in the morning to distribute the mail that accumulates during the night. The next heavy mail comes in at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. After the first delivery was over the carriers were given two hours in the middle of the day and they would go to their homes to work about their places to do their gardening or any other personal service they might want to do. That was a convenience to the carriers, not a hardship. It was a desirable period for them to have in the middle of the day. Then they would come back in the afternoon and finish their work and serve 8 hours. Now, because of this provision, additional carriers and additional clerks have been required in that office when there is no need for them whatever except for the getting of the 8 hours within the 10 hours or to let the people go without service. Applying this law to thousands of offices imposes upon the Government additional expense without relieving anyone from hardship, because there was little or no hardship and there had been no complaint. It is done in order to relieve some hardship, because of—I will not say maladministration—but unintelligent administration of a few large offices.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, this is not a matter that can be determined at this time, and I do not care to take the time of the Senate, therefore, to discuss it, but I am not in accord with the Senator from Kansas in his expression of opinion that these cases were isolated and that there was really no demand for this law, because I think there were a great number of such cases and there was an active demand for this legislation, both from associations of carriers and clerks engaged in the postal service.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have come into the Chamber since this discussion began; but in support of the view expressed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], I will simply add that what he has said of the post offices in Kansas is also true of the post offices and service in Vermont. At the capital of the State, a town of perhaps 10,000 inhabitants, the effect of the imposition of this rule has been such that mail that reaches there at 5 o'clock in the afternoon on Saturday is not delivered at my house until half past 11 o'clock on the following Monday morning, though my house is only 10 minutes' walk from the post office. The night mail that comes into that town at half past 3 in the morning is not distributed in the business section of the town until half past 11 in the forenoon, so that the evening papers from Boston reaching there at half past 3 the next morning are not distributed until half past 11.

I looked into the matter when I was last at home, because the inconvenience there was so great, and the postmaster told me that with the amount of labor he had assigned him under this rule of 8 hours in 10 it was impossible for him to make schedules to meet the demands of the public. I think the complaint has been very general throughout that section of the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that the letter from the Postmaster General, which is incorporated with the estimate certified to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury, may be printed in the RECORD. I have an unofficial copy of that communication in my hand, but the communication is on the desks of Senators in its official shape. That communication explains very fully the urgency of this appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paper referred to by the Senator from Virginia will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 14, 1913.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Senate to House joint resolution 80, which passed the House of Representatives on the 10th instant, appropriating the sum of $300,000 for temporary and auxiliary clerks in post offices, and the sum of $300,000 for substitute, auxiliary, and temporary city delivery carriers, being deficiencies for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1913.

In this connection I forward herewith the communication of the Postmaster General to the Secretary of the Treasury, of the 6th instant, setting forth the immediate needs for these additional funds in order to avoid serious embarrassment to the service of the Post Office Department.

Respectfully, W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM G. McADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: Section 5 of the postal-service act of August 24, 1912, provides—

"That on and after March 4, 1913, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices shall be required to work not more than eight hours a day: Provided, That the eight hours of service shall not extend over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours, and the schedules of duty of the employees shall be regulated accordingly."

Section 8 of the same act made provision for the establishment of a general parcel-post service on January 1, 1913.

For the purpose of administering section 5 the estimate for temporary and auxiliary clerk hire submitted by the Post Office Department for the year 1913 was increased $500,000 and that for auxiliary and temporary carriers $400,000, but no increase was made in either of these appropriations for administering section 8.

The appropriations for temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and auxiliary and temporary carriers have not been sufficient to carry out the provisions of section 5 and to provide for the parcel-post service and are exhausted. It is estimated that $300,000 additional will be needed in each of these appropriations to provide for the service during the remainder of this fiscal year.

In the opinion of the Attorney General a deficiency can not be incurred in these appropriations, and to avoid serious embarrassment to the service the department finds it necessary to ask Congress for additional funds to meet the immediate needs of the service.

It is therefore recommended that a joint resolution of Congress embodying the following draft of legislation be passed at the earliest possible date.

"To enable the Postmaster General to carry out effectively the provisions of sections 5 and 8 of the act approved August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000 for temporary and auxiliary clerks in post offices and $300,000 for substitutes, auxiliary, and temporary city delivery carriers, which shall be immediately available."

Owing to the exigencies of the case, may I ask that this matter receive your prompt attention?

Respectfully, A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As has been stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], this law can not now be executed. Whether it was wisely enacted or not, I need not now discuss; but it is the law of the land, and it can not be executed without additional money. The communication from the Postmaster General which was sent to the Senate with the estimate not only explains the matter fully but makes manifest its extreme urgency. The law officers have decided that it can not be provided for as a deficiency, and the department is without any way of obtaining the money to meet this exigency. About one half of it is due to this provision of the 8-hours-in-10 law and the other half is due to the increased service under the parcel-post system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] as to the urgency of this appropriation, and I apprehend that there will be no objection to its being acted upon immediately.

I want, however, to supplement what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has said, Mr. President, by calling attention to another change that was made, which I think was absolutely without rhyme or reason, and that is the inhibition of delivering mail on Sunday at the post office when patrons call there for their mail. I never discovered that there was any objection to that; there certainly was not in my own city; and business men were enabled to get their letters by calling for them at the post office, and the clerks were quite willing to perform that duty; yet in our great zeal to change the law, to reduce the hours, and do what had been requested of us by the associations of clerks and carriers we went to the extent of denying the patrons of the office the privilege of going to the post office and getting their mail on Sunday. As a consequence letters which come to the post office on Saturday evening are not delivered until Monday forenoon. I believe that it has been ruled that if a patron hires and pays for a private box his mail will be put into that box; but I sincerely regret that in our great earnestness to make these changes that uncalled for, as I think, change was made in the law. The patrons of the office are denied a privilege which they have always had and which is of very great value, particularly to business men. I do not know that there is any remedy—there is no remedy now, certainly—but I trust that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will give that matter consideration before we are called upon to consider another Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, since this matter has come up, I believe that I will offer an amendment to the joint resolution, to come in as section 2. I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read section 5 of the act approved August 24, 1912, as I have interlined it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the joint resolution a new section, to be known as section 2, and to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after March 4, 1913, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices shall be required to work not more than 8 hours a day: Provided, That the 8 hours of service shall not extend over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours and the schedules of duty of the employees shall be regulated accordingly.

That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of 8 hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be allowed compensatory time on one of the six days, Sunday excepted, following the day on which they perform such service.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it will appear from an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 13, 1912, that the Senate sent the Post Office appropriation bill to conference with section 5 amended exactly in the words of the proposed amendment I have offered. Of course, the effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to discontinue the policy of paying men for overtime.

A great deal has been said, Mr. President, about the 8-hour day, but the agitation for the 8-hour day has not come about because of overtime work of clerks in offices; the agitation for the 8-hour day came about because men engaged in manual labor were worked beyond their strength. I undertake to say there is not a Senator here who, in his own affairs, would apply or would submit to a provision similar to that. What man in an office would allow his stenographer or clerk to walk out immediately upon the completion of 8 hours work to-day, and if required by him to remain longer? What employer would submit to paying him for overtime to-day when to-morrow he might let him off an hour or two earlier?

We might as well be reasonable about this matter. The men engaged in the work of the post office in offices and as letter carriers seek these positions; they are desirable positions. As I understand, there is hardly any complaint by the letter carriers. Imagine the Government running a post office; it hires clerks in the office to do the necessary work, and it is a remarkable proposition for this Congress to subscribe to, that if a train happens to be half an hour late to-day and necessitates a clerk in the post-office staying a little beyond the ordinary time, the Government is going to pay him additional compensation, when, if on to-morrow the train is on time and the work is finished within less than 8 hours, the Government gets no concession for it.

This amendment was offered because it would correct an abuse by providing that "instead of giving you money we will make good to you the time we make you work beyond the 8 hours to-day by allowing you an equal amount of time off from your work to-morrow or within 6 days," and in order that the postmaster may not impose upon a clerk we except Sundays.

I asked the representatives of the clerks, when they were before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, if this section 5 was put into the bill at their demand because they wanted more money. The fair way to meet that was to investigate and see if they deserved more, and if so, to pay it. They said that they did not ask for more money, but it occurred to them that was the only effective way to insure the fact that they would not be worked beyond 8 hours within 10. Then, this amendment would cure that as effectually as the payment for overtime, and the department, through its Second Assistant Postmaster General, says this way is entirely feasible. If this amendment is adopted, we send back to the House now a provision covering the position taken by the Senate and abandoned by the conference committee, but insisted upon by the Senate over the recommendation of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at the last session of Congress, and call the attention of the country again to the fact that we are spending uselessly here, under the guise of protecting these men from working more than 8 hours a day, $3,000,000 a year.

Why, Mr. President, how many bookkeepers will it take simply to find out how many minutes a day each clerk works over 8 hours and to send all that up here to the Postmaster General? It would be a very simple matter for the postmaster to write down if a clerk has worked overtime to-day and allow him compensatory time to-morrow, but if all these records of overtime are to be sent to the department and thrashed out—in the first place, it would require an army of clerks to do the work; and, in the next place, we would be simply inviting the men not to finish the work within 8 hours. It becomes not a question of principle that men shall not be worked beyond 8 hours a day, but it becomes a question of mere hire and salary for the money there is in it. That is all there is to the proposition as finally agreed to in conference.

I proposed at the time the bill was here the inclusion of the provision that was finally agreed upon, and the Senate on a yea-and-nay vote decided they would not pay for overtime, but would allow compensatory time within six days. The bill went to conference in the closing days of the session, and the House provision was restored. Here we have an opportunity to state again the position taken by the Senate—the sensible and right position to maintain.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Florida, before he takes his seat, if it would not be practicable to put an amendment onto this provision appropriating this money, so that in the future the system of compensatory time will be established in lieu of money?

Mr. BRYAN. That is exactly what my amendment proposes.

Mr. OWEN. I have not heard the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. I offered an amendment to be known as section 2, which was section 5 of the bill as passed by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida should prevail. This is a matter which has been considered by the Senate and the House, by the committees of the House and of the Senate for many years. I think the Senator is mistaken in his statement that in the last Congress a majority of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads were opposed to that provision of the law as it now stands. I have here a memorandum, made by the chairman of the Post Office Committee, to the effect that a majority of the committee approved of the action of the House, but that a minority of the committee were opposed to reporting the bill without putting in a provision for compensatory time instead of money. Therefore not only the Senate Post Office Committee, but the Senate itself, were in favor of the law as it now stands.

As this question has been considered in both the Senate and the House many times, and as the law has been in operation for only two months, and as it was understood at the time the bill became a law that this additional appropriation of $3,000,000 would be required in order to carry out its provisions, it seems to me this is a most inopportune time to reverse a policy which is being tried, and which has not been tried a sufficiently long time to warrant changing it in any way.

I therefore hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. It has been tried sufficiently long, has it not, to demonstrate that we will have to appropriate over $3,000,000 a year because of it?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it was fully understood at the time the provision was adopted that $3,000,000 additional would be required; and the Senate itself added to the bill $900,000 to provide for that additional necessity between the 4th of March and the 1st of July of this year.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator think, however, that the Senate ought to take its own judgment or the judgment of the committee, the Senate at the last session having refused to take the report of the committee, and having, on a record vote, declared itself in favor of the identical proposition now sent to the desk?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think it is necessary that this Senate should take either the judgment of the committee of the last Senate or the judgment of the last Senate itself. I do think, however, that when a change of policy of this kind is involved, all the information obtainable should be in the possession of the Senate before any action is taken, and I submit there is no information before us at this time as to the working of this system.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida undertakes to reopen a question which engendered a sharp conflict between the two Houses, and which was adjusted only last March. The present proposition is to reopen that conflict by undertaking general legislation on an urgent deficiency appropriation bill. If this law, which was enacted last March, needs to be reviewed, it should be reviewed after careful consideration, which can be had at the next regular session. I think it would be unfortunate to undertake matters of that sort on an urgent deficiency bill, and as it is plainly general legislation I make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 1620.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The regular order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the morning business first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, reports of committees are still in order.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I report back from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment, Senate resolution 55, and I ask that it may be considered immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let it be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, submitted by Mr. THOMAS on the 17th of April, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Woman Suffrage, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the words "employ a stenographer," to insert the words "at a cost not to exceed $1 a printed page."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to call up Senate resolution 66, a like resolution, which is on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object. Let us complete morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the regular order is reports of committees. If there are no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

PANAMA-CALIFORNIA EXPOSITION.

Mr. WORKS. From the Committee on Industrial Expositions, I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 4234, and I submit a report (No. 45) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to require the Panama-California Exposition Co., of San Diego, Cal., to deposit with a depository, to be named by the Secretary of the Treasury, such sum or sums of money as in the discretion of the Secretary shall be necessary to cover awards, medals, certificates, prizes, and premiums, and all other obligations incurred by said corporation with exhibitors at the Panama-California Exposition, which money shall be held by said depository as a pledge to the United States Government for a faithful fulfillment of the above obligations; or the Secretary of the Treasury may, in lieu of such cash pledge, accept a good and sufficient bond from said exposition company, to be approved by him and conditioned for the faithful performance of every liability or obligation incurred by said exposition company in respect to exhibitors at said exposition, to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915.

SEC. 2. That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Panama-California Exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell, for delivery at the close thereof, any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure, the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the last proviso read again. I did not catch the full meaning of it.

The Secretary again read section 2 of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the latter part of the proviso is hardly the usual one, but I will not object to it at this time. There is a chance of valuing goods after being handled at the fair at such a low price that it would virtually be allowing the goods to free entry.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have understood that this bill is in the exact form that has been adopted on other occasions. Is not that the case?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, Mr. President, with the exception of the last part of section 2. As I said, however, I shall not object even to that.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from California permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a bill which might have been referred with propriety to the Finance Committee, I suppose; but that is immaterial. I should like to ask the Senator from California whether it has been referred to the Treasury Department, and whether it has been favorably reported on by that department?

Mr. WORKS. There has been no reference of it to the Treasury Department, for it involves no liability whatever on the part of the Government, either in the way of money or in the way of responsibility.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think we ought to pass a bill like this without its being referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why not?

Mr. PENROSE. Because it permits the bringing in of articles which are exempted from customs duties.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Only for exposition purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. I know that; but I want to see that abuses are not possible under it. I do not want to delay the bill, however. Is there any haste about it?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; there is. It is in exactly the form that has been uniformly adopted. There seems to be no reason why it should be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope the Senator will not delay it on that account.

Mr. PENROSE. I will not persist, Mr. President; but in my opinion it certainly should have been referred to the Treasury officials for their examination and report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I ask that the first section of the bill may be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read section 1 of the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. May I inquire of the Senator from California whether this is the usual form which has been observed on the occasion of former expositions?

Mr. WORKS. As I understand, it is precisely the same.

Mr. PENROSE. The only difference is that every similar proposition has been referred to the Finance Committee, and examined by that committee and reported. This has been referred to a committee that is not supposed to have any familiarity with the laws involved.

Mr. WORKS. On the contrary, Mr. President, it was referred to the committee that had these matters directly in hand.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; exposition matters, but not internal-revenue and customs matters.

Mr. WORKS. This bill does not involve an expenditure of money, and therefore it was not thought necessary to send it to the Finance Committee.

Mr. PENROSE. The Finance Committee has nothing to do with the expenditure of money. It has, however, everything to do with internal-revenue and customs matters.

Mr. WORKS. I may say that this matter is very thoroughly understood by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it was thought entirely unnecessary to make any reference of it to him.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to say now that I can see, in reading the bill, considerable opportunity for defrauding the Government.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator can see a long way, then, and can see something that others would not be able to see. I will say to the Senator that it is precisely the same form of bill that has been enacted in other cases. There has been no change made in it.

Mr. PENROSE. We have no evidence of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4234) providing certain legislation for the Panama-California Exposition, to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2200) granting the First-Second National Bank of Pittsburgh, Pa., the right to use the original charter number, 48, of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh, Pa. (with accompanying paper).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PENROSE. A similar bill was introduced by me before and it was referred to the Committee on Finance. However, I am not particular as to what committee it goes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Finance Committee having been divided and there being a subdivision on Banking and Currency, the Chair rules that the bill should go to the latter committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2201) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison reformatory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill, I think, should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. A similar bill was before that committee at the last session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2202) for the preparation of a plan and the erection of a memorial or statue, to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania, of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 2203) to provide for the retirement of employees in the civil service; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

(By request.) A bill (S. 2204) for the relief of Sylvester Bonnaffon, jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2205) for the relief of Samuel Fogle;

A bill (S. 2206) for the relief of Jacob Swartz; and

A bill (S. 2207) for the relief of Charles Mace; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2209) granting a pension to Bernard Closkey;

A bill (S. 2211) granting an increase of pension to William Axe;

A bill (S. 2212) granting a pension to Emma A. Davis;

A bill (S. 2213) granting a pension to Sarah Wood;

A bill (S. 2214) granting a pension to Annie R. North (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2215) granting a pension to Susan A. Graden;

A bill (S. 2216) granting an increase of pension to Philip Mehring; and

A bill (S. 2217) granting an increase of pension to Aaron Morton (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Sylvester P. Hill (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2219) granting an increase of pension to John D. McRae; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 2220) for the relief of Joseph A. Mower and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 2221) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 2222) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2223) to create the Crater Lake National Park revenue fund; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2224) to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2225) to appoint Col. William F. Stewart, United States Army, retired, to the rank of brigadier general on the retired list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2226) for the relief of Joel J. Parker; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2227) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Good (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 2228) for the relief of Thomas B. Lawrence;

A bill (S. 2229) for the relief of the heirs of Parks D. Brittain, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2230) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of George E. Johnson, administrator of the estate of Leo L. Johnson, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama:

A bill (S. 2231) granting an increase of pension to Mary Pritchard (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 2232) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. LIPPITT:

A bill (S. 2233) referring the claim of the State of Rhode Island to the Court of Claims for adjudication; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2234) granting an increase of pension to Abby F. Eldred;

A bill (S. 2235) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Briggs;

A bill (S. 2236) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert A. Irons;

A bill (S. 2237) granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Barker;

A bill (S. 2238) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corcoran;

A bill (S. 2239) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Sweet; and

A bill (S. 2240) granting an increase of pension to Martha Makee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2241) granting a pension to Eliza F. Andrews; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 2243) for the relief of David D. Johnson and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 2244) to amend sections 680 and 686 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2245) for the relief of Frederick B. McGuire, trustee for Bessie J. Kibbey, owner of lot 75, square 628, Washington, D. By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 2253) for the relief of Joseph N. G. Whistler and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 2254) to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OLIVER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) authorizing the President to give certain former cadets of the United States Military Academy the benefit of a recent amendment of the law relative to hazing at that institution; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DRY FARMING CONGRESS, TULSA, OKLA.

Mr. OWEN. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 35) authorizing the Secretary of State to issue invitations to other nations to send representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Tulsa, Okla., in October, 1913, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to issue invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Tulsa, Okla., during October, 1913.

Mr. OWEN. If there is no objection, I should be glad to have the joint resolution considered now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must object to that. Let the joint resolution go to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to put in the RECORD a telegram from the authorities at Tulsa showing the urgency of this matter. I will not take the time to read it.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., May 18, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Correspondence thus far exchanged between International Dry Farming Congress and Department of State having indicated department can not officially and formally send forward international invitations to all nations to officially participate in International Dry Farming Congress, Tulsa, Okla., October 22–November 1, this year, unless by special authority of Congress, you are hereby earnestly and urgently requested jointly by officers of International Dry Farming Congress, Tulsa Commercial Club, and Oklahoma Board Control to secure passage, if possible, within next 48 hours of concurrent resolution in the House and Senate. All Members Oklahoma delegation being asked to cooperate with you in securing authority for honorable Secretary of State to issue through his department official invitations already engrossed, and which will be forwarded upon telegraphic request for same, ready for formal distribution. Invitations as engraved and engrossed request all nations to appoint delegates with powers ad referendum, and concurrent resolution should confer power on Department of State to accompany said invitations with formal letter signed either by His Excellency the President of the United States or the honorable Secretary of State, conveying to nations invited knowledge that United States Government indorses that congress and has shown indorsement by appropriation for Federal exhibit here. We base this urgent request upon the following: First, time is important element, and unless invitations are in hands of foreign Governments within 15 days, effect of loss in attendance will be serious. Second, this same organization met in Canada last year and similar official formal invitations properly engrossed were forwarded to all nations by the Dominion of Canada by authority of order of Privy Council and carrying the formal royal signature of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. Seventeen nations accepted these invitations and sent official delegates. We believe the importance of this great educational propaganda to the people of the United States and to the world at large demands that the same courtesy as extended by the Canadian Dominion Government should be extended by the Government of the United States and can be extended without establishing an undesirable precedent. Third, we are fully assured that appropriations have already been made by the Governments of Russia and China for the collection and transportation of exhibits representing these Governments in the international exposition here, and unofficial exhibits are being arranged for by the international officers of the congress in several nations. Canada has already asked for a large amount of space, and the agricultural societies of Spain and Mexico have secured indorsement of plans for exhibits from those countries. Diplomatic representatives of several nations in Washington have already addressed this office requesting information as to the matter of official invitations and the delay of same, and we believe proper recognition of this matter in behalf of enlargement of agricultural education will result in assembling here the greatest international agricultural conference ever held. Brief telegrams are forwarded this day to all other Members Oklahoma delegation, to Senators WARREN, SMOOT, DIXON, SHAFROTH, NEWLANDS, POINDEXTER, PAGE, BRADY, Representatives MONDELL and MURDOCK, asking them to cooperate in securing passage of above-requested resolution. Your kind offices in securing quick consideration special enactment and completing necessary organization in this connection will be appreciated. Please send copy of this message to all above named, submitting item expense extra stenographic work to us.

JOHN T. BURNS,
Executive Secretary International Dry Farming Congress.
C. A. SANDERSON,
Secretary Commercial Club.
O. D. HUNT,
Chairman Board of Control.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from $5,000 to $7,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENYON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

CHILOCCO CREEK BRIDGE.

Mr. BRISTOW. On the 21st of April I submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $800 to be expended in the building of a bridge across Chilocco Creek where same intercepts the State line of Kansas and the Chilocco Indian Reservation in Oklahoma intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and at my suggestion it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I move that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. I again submit the amendment, which I intend to propose to the Indian appropriation bill, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 86), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to subpœna witnesses, send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to ask the Committee on Finance, which has the tariff bill under consideration, to send out these two questions, in addition to those suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I do not see the chairman of the committee here, but I see members of the committee present. I will read the questions:

First. What is the cost of raw material per unit of production in this country?

Second. What is the cost of raw material per unit of production in competing foreign countries?

I think these two questions ought to be added to those submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I would be glad if they would be given consideration by the committee in connection with the subject.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I take it it is intended by those questions that they shall apply to the unit of production in each particular man's industry.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. The questions are to be sent, I understand, to parties in interest, and this is information which I did not feel was perfectly covered. I think we ought to have what information the parties may have in regard to it.

PANAMA-CALIFORNIA EXPOSITION.

Mr. SMOOT. For the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill (H. R. 4234) providing certain legislation for the Panama-California Exposition to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915, I move that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether that would take much time or not?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that it will take more than a couple of minutes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What is the purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that since the passage of the bill I have looked up the Pan-American Exposition act and also the so-called St. Louis Exposition act and others, and I find that a clause is not in the resolution or bill passed for any of the exposition acts I have examined similar to the latter part of section 2 of the House bill. Beginning on page 3, after the word "withdrawal," these words occur:

And on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

In looking up the other acts I find that those words were not included in them. I think it is a very dangerous provision in the bill, and I simply want to make a motion to strike out those words, so that the exemption clause will be in accord with the exemption clause of the St. Louis, the Pan-American, and other exposition acts.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator mean that in case these articles are found to have deteriorated, that fact having been shown, it shall not be taken into account in assessing the duty?

Mr. SMOOT. It has not been taken into account in the past, and I think that if this were allowed there would be untold disputes, and it would lead to a great deal of confusion. There has been no trouble whatever under the past exposition acts. This provision has not been used, and I think it should not be in the law to-day.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this bill came over from the House. It is a House bill. I was informed that the bill had been drawn exactly as it had been provided in other bills of a like kind. I think likely the Senator from Utah will find that to be true with respect to some of the later exposition acts. It seems to me to be a very just provision.

However, I am not going to insist upon it, so far as I am concerned. I do not think it is a matter of grave importance to the exposition itself, but I think it is a just provision with respect to the exhibitors, and that there ought to be made some allowance for the wear and tear of the goods which come in under the provision of the law. But, as I said, it is a matter that I am not disposed to insist upon.

Mr. OWEN. I will have to object.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the legislation for the Alaska-Yukon Exposition did have this or a similar provision, but the reason given for that was on account of the exceedingly long distance and the poor accommodations for handling the goods. That, as I remember, was the reason why the clause was included in that act.

Mr. WORKS. In the present case Japan and China have already provided for an exhibit at this exposition; they have to bring their goods a long distance, and if that is a reason for making a provision like this——

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, they have better transportation from the interior than there is in Alaska, and I have not heard any complaint from Japan, from China, or from any other country against the provisions of laws as they have previously been passed. Therefore I think that this bill should conform to the laws passed in reference to the St. Louis and to other expositions in this particular.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I object to the reconsideration of the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move the reconsideration. If the Senate does not desire to reconsider it, well and good.

Mr. OWEN. Regular order!

Mr. SMOOT. The regular order, as I understand, is my motion that the Senate reconsider the vote by which House bill 4234 was passed.

Mr. OWEN. Morning business being over, I think the regular order is the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. SWANSON. Let the motion go over.

Mr. WORKS. I think it ought not to go over, the bill having been acted upon.

Mr. SWANSON. It can go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the Senate ought to feel bound to change this bill to conform to some former precedent. We who are now in this body are just as capable of legislating as the Senate has been capable of legislating in times past. Moreover, conditions may have changed which make necessary modifications of the former law. Besides that, it seems an extremely just provision to have at the end of the bill, because I can conceive of cases where such depreciation has taken place in the exhibits that they might not sell for enough to pay the duties. This would safeguard that in case there was such a depreciation. It seems to me that, inasmuch as the bill has passed, surely no serious damage can be done to the Government and that it ought to stand as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the purpose of bringing such goods into this country is to exhibit them with a view, of course, of the American people becoming acquainted with what those countries manufacture and perhaps becoming future customers for those particular goods.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator from Utah desire to discourage that by imposing a harsh condition?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no desire whatever to do such a thing; but I do believe that when such goods come into this country they should pay whatever rate of duty is imposed upon similar goods at the time they enter the country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These goods are for exhibition purposes while the others are for sale. There is quite a difference.

Mr. SMOOT. If these goods are not sold, they do not pay any duty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They may or may not be sold.

Mr. SMOOT If they are returned to the country from whence they came, they do not pay a cent of duty to the Government of the United States; but, if they are sold, they should have no advantage over goods that come into this country directly for sale. It is a question, of course, for the Senate to decide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is, Shall the Senate reconsider the vote by which House bill 4234 was passed?

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 9, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice there is no quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the roll be called, no quorum being present.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point that there is no quorum, and that the roll should be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bacon	Jackson	Owen	Smoot
Borah	James	Page	Stephenson
Brady	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Sterling
Brandegee	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Stone
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Sutherland
Burton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Catron	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Chamberlain	La Follette	Reed	Thompson
Chilton	Lane	Root	Thornton
Clapp	Lea	Shafroth	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Sheppard	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Sherman	Vardaman
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Shively	Walsh
Fall	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Goff	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have recorded my objections to the provision, and I really think that it ought to go out of the bill. In view of the fact, however, that there are other matters to be discussed to-day, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion for reconsideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill stands passed.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 87), as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Finance Committee be requested to report to the Senate a full list of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof for hearing or conference relative to House bill No. 3321.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution submitted by him.

Mr. OWEN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 88), as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that H. R. 3321 be referred to the Committee on Finance be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. That refers, Mr. President, to the series of questions which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] suggested should be asked to those appearing before the Finance Committee. There are a great many demands for copies of them, and I thought that about 2,000 copies might be useful. The cost will be trifling.

Mr. SHIVELY. I hope the resolution may be adopted.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to state that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] suggested two other questions this morning, which ought to be included with the others.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio and modify my resolution accordingly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania for the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire what is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has offered a resolution providing for the printing of 2,000 copies of the amendment proposed by him as modified by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], to refer House bill 3321 to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, together with two additional questions suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I remember, the Senate did not take action on the questions suggested by the Senator from Kansas. They ought to appear in print, therefore, as questions suggested by that Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will correct the resolution so as to conform to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire; and it will be read as so modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that House bill 3321 be referred to the Committee on Finance, be printed for the use of the Senate, together with the two questions suggested as appropriate to be asked of manufacturers by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] at to-day's session (May 19, 1913).

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, as I understand, this resolution merely comprehends that the series of questions suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin be printed.

Mr. PENROSE. That is all.

Mr. SHIVELY. Has there been any amendment adopted?

Mr. PENROSE. No; the Senate voted down the amendment; but there is a very large demand from the manufacturers of the country for copies of the questions.

Mr. SHIVELY. But did I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to offer an amendment to the resolution which the Senator from Pennsylvania has proposed?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] suggested two other questions; and my suggestion was that they should appear as "suggested questions," not having been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. There were 16 questions originally proposed, and the request now is that 2 other questions be added to that list.

Mr. GALLINGER. Two more questions.

Mr. SHIVELY. May the proposed two additional questions be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Secretary has not at the desk at this time the two questions proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I stated in the open Senate when the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as amended on motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was pending that I proposed to call a meeting of the full Finance Committee for the purpose of considering whether those questions should be mailed by the committee to manufacturers and other persons in interest with the request that they should be answered under oath. On Friday last I suggested to the ranking member of the minority of the committee then present, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] being absent, that we might have a meeting of the committee this morning for the purpose of taking the matter under consideration. It was suggested, as the Senator from Pennsylvania was absent and might not be back in time this morning for a meeting, that action be postponed on the matter. On that account I have postponed action.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I only want these copies of the questions printed in order that they may be sent to a large number of persons who desire them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the committee can act upon that matter at its meeting to-morrow, and can send these questions out if it is so ordered, and can give them to the press. I do not see any reason why the Senate should authorize at this stage the printing of a proposed amendment that has been acted upon by the Senate and acted upon adversely. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania might very well await the meeting of the committee to-morrow, and then we will formulate such rules as may seem fair and proper in order that these questions may reach manufacturers, and that those to whom they are mailed may have notice that the committee will be glad to have them answer the questions.

My own idea in reference to this matter, Mr. President, was that—and I so explained on Friday last when the Senator from Pennsylvania was not here, I believe—that I had no doubt the committee would be glad to send these questions and such other questions as the committee may see fit to add to them, to every manufacturer who has filed a brief or to every person in interest who has filed a brief asking for an increase or a reduction of the tariff rate; and, in addition to that——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, in addition to that, it has been my idea that the committee might hand those questions to the press and state that the committee would be glad to have any manufacturer or any party in interest in the United States send sworn answers to the questions. I do not think the committee ought to be confined, or will be confined, to these particular questions, because there has been no action of the Senate directing the committee with reference to them. I think that the bulk of these questions ought to be asked, and that certain additional questions deemed necessary to elicit further important information ought to be added, and I myself propose to-day, Mr. President, to frame some additional questions. I have received from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], who I see is not now in his seat, two additional questions which he suggests should be propounded. I suggest to the Senator that the matter can rest until the committee has acted.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to have the questions proposed by the Senator from Kansas printed with that list. I have offered the resolution providing for this printing—which I think will cost the Government about $25—for my own convenience and that of other minority members of this body. I received in my mail this morning, I suppose, 200 letters from manufacturers, asking me for copies of the La Follette amendment. Regardless of what the Finance Committee does in the way of framing additional questions or of holding informal hearings, it seems to me a reasonable request for the minority to have printed 2,000 copies, at an expense of $25 or less, for their own use and convenience and for the information of their constituents.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when the committee has decided what questions it desires to propound, I think it will be abundant time to publish the questions that are to be asked. The Senator does not know whether these questions or some other questions are to be asked, whether these are all the questions that are to be asked, or whether there are more questions than will be asked. After the committee has met and decided what questions it desires and proposes to ask in order to elicit information, I think it will be entirely proper to publish those questions as a Senate document, if the Senator wishes, although I propose giving them to the press instead.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. I will.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Pennsylvania will see how easily a state of confusion might be created if these questions were sent out at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. I can not see how there would be. It is the simplest possible thing.

Mr. SIMMONS. There has been no action taken on the part of the Senate directing these questions to be propounded. On the contrary, the action of the Senate has been adverse to that course.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. Just one minute, if the Senator pleases. If these questions are sent out, and the Finance Committee should decide to ask a different set of questions, it is easily to be seen that the manufacturers might get into a state of confusion as to the kind of questions that we desired them to answer.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will yield——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, the Senator from Pennsylvania has asked to have printed and sent out, as Senators may desire to send them out, copies of a matter which was actually pending in the Senate. Here was a proposition submitted to the Senate, and it was considered. It seems to me the people of the country who are asking for this thing have a right to know what the Senate did. It does not interfere with anything further that the Finance Committee may desire to do. It is simply a request on the part of one Senator that he may be able to send out to his constituents, and I to my constituents, if I desire, the amendment which was offered by the minority side and voted upon here in the Senate. That is all that is asked for now—that this information be sent out.

Mr. SIMMONS. All these questions have been already published in the RECORD and they have also been been given to the press.

Mr. PENROSE. To incur the expense of sending the RECORD to a thousand people would be rather an expensive proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. They have all been given to the press, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is the first time in my congressional experience that I ever saw a disposition to refuse the printing of an official document at a nominal expense for the information of the American people.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not doing what the Senator suggests, Mr. President. I am trying to avoid a confusion which it is clear to my mind may arise.

Mr. PENROSE. Up to the present time there is no confusion; there is only dense ignorance on the part of the public as to what is going on at this end of the Capitol.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not, I am sure, overlook the fact that the Finance Committee would have a perfect right under present conditions to send out a part or all of these questions, and to add such further questions as it may see fit, or it would have a right to change these questions as it may see fit. If these questions are published as the questions to be answered, and the Finance Committee shall decide to ask different or other questions, or to ask these questions in a different way, it must be apparent to the Senate that the manufacturers of the country may be misled as to what information the Finance Committee desires, and we may get answers that will not embrace the subjects of the inquiry.

Mr. PENROSE. I take exception to the use by the Senator of the term "the Finance Committee." If he would say "the majority members of the Finance Committee," he would be more accurate. I want these copies printed for my personal use as a minority Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I said I was going to call a meeting of the full committee for the purpose of considering these questions.

Mr. PENROSE. We all know what that meeting will mean.

Mr. SIMMONS. I presume the Senator does. He has had a great deal of experience in past years when he was in the majority, and I have no doubt he knows what it will be like.

Mr. PENROSE. I have had great experience, Mr. President, but I feel that I am learning every day.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator needs additional information.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask whether the Senator from North Carolina can give the Senate any information as to when he will be able to report this bill back to the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the Senator approximate the time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can only express a hope.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is that hope, Mr. President?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have hoped that we might be able to finish the bill some time during the first week in June. I say I have hoped we might be able to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does that include the time to be taken in the Democratic caucus to consider it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know. I can not answer that question. It has not yet been decided whether or not we will have any caucus.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator one question, and then I shall be through. Is the Democratic caucus to be open to the public or is it to be a secret proceeding?

Mr. SIMMONS. Has any Republican caucus in this country ever been open to the public?

Mr. PENROSE. We were criticized for not having them open, and we are now repentant, and hereafter they will be open.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] tells me the Republicans never have a caucus. I was under the impression that the Democrats always had conferences, and the Republicans caucuses.

Mr. PENROSE. It is the other way.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the other way now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Any of you can come if you will be bound by the result.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to say to the Senator that I do not believe a request of this kind was ever refused before in the Senate of the United States. This relates to something that has happened in the Senate. The Senator from Pennsylvania now asks for his personal use and convenience a print of 2,000 copies of what has already happened in the Senate, at a cost of not more than $20. I do not believe a request like this was ever denied in the Senate before.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have stated, Mr. President, the reasons why I think it would be better to wait until the questions are prepared by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. After the questions are prepared by the committee, if the Senator from North Carolina wants any number of them printed he can have it done, of course; but this is simply to enable the Senator from Pennsylvania to answer his letters. That is all there is to it. I think the Senator ought to withdraw his objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall make no objection to its consideration. I simply wanted the Senate to be informed as to the situation that exists.

Mr. OWEN. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over. Morning business is closed. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is now in order.

PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order of business No. 18, Senate resolution 4, providing for a legislative program, be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that Senate resolution 4 be now taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if he desires that it be taken up simply for the purpose of making a speech on the subject?.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My idea was to carry out the recommendation of the Committee on Rules and have the various subjects matter of the resolution referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very proper.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It does not cover any further action than that. I do not ask that any decisive action whatever be taken on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply ask for the reading of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report, to accompany S. Res. 4:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred Senate resolution 4, having considered the same, report the resolution back to the Senate with the recommendation that each subhead contained therein be referred for consideration to the proper committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, to wit:

That all of section 2 except subdivision (k) be referred for consideration to the Committee on Finance.

That subdivision (k) of section 2 of said resolution, which relates to a budget committee, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) of section 3 of said resolution, relating to interstate commerce, be referred for consideration to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That so much of subdivision (d) of section 3 of said resolution as relates to the physical improvement and development of rivers shall be referred for consideration to the Committee on Commerce, and that so much of subdivision (d) of section 3 as relates to the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities and the coordination of rail and water carriers shall be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That subdivision (e) of section 3 of said resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That section 4 of said resolution, relating to interstate exchange, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That subdivision (a) of section 5 of said resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

That subdivision (b) of section 5 be referred for consideration to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

That subdivision (c) of section 5 be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

That subdivision (a) of section 6 be referred to the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs.

That subdivision (b) of section 6 of said resolution be referred to the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the resolution be referred as indicated in the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to ask for the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no. All I ask is that the resolution, in its separate branches, be referred to the appropriate committees as recommended by the Committee on Rules. The resolution has not come up for final action.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Committee on Rules recommend that each subhead of it be referred to the committees named in the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if the amended report of the committee recommends that the particular part of the resolution that has reference to public lands be referred to the Committee on Public Lands? I have not the report before me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That was my understanding. My understanding was that the Committee on Rules amended their first report pursuant to suggestions that were made on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that we may know, I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The report has just been read, but I will turn to the part of it to which the Senator refers. To what subdivision does the Senator refer?

Mr. SMOOT. I forget the subdivision, Mr. President; but the Senator will remember that when his resolution was in the Senate before, and was recommitted to the Committee on Rules, there was a question as to a certain subdivision of the resolution being referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I desire to learn whether the amended report of the Committee on Rules recommends the reference of that subdivision to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. SWANSON. It has been read once. I object to its second reading.

Mr. OVERMAN. I insist upon its being read again. No one has a right to object to the reading of a report.

Mr. SWANSON. It has been read once.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not make any difference if it has been read a thousand times. I ask that it be read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made to the reading of the report, the question is, Shall the report be again read? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the report will be again read.

The Secretary again read the report of the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the report of the Committee on Rules will be agreed to, and the various parts of the resolution will be referred to the several committees in accordance with the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the resolution itself may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The resolution (S. Res. 4) submitted by Mr. NEWLANDS March 13, 1913, is as follows:

1. Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that during the approaching extra session for the immediate revision of the tariff Congress should not only consider and pass comprehensive legislation regarding all the schedules of the tariff but should also, through the appropriate committees, consider other subjects of needed legislation, to be taken up for final action at the next regular session of Congress.

TARIFF AND TAXATION.

2. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Finance report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether the prices of any farm products in the United States are raised above the international level of prices by the duties now imposed on such products; and if so, what products, and whether such duties on such products can be abolished or materially reduced without injury to American industry, and to what extent. In such inquiry shall be included meats, cheese, wool, sugar, tobacco, wines, citrus fruits, and dried and preserved fruits.

(b) What products now on the dutiable list should be put on the free list.

(c) Whether it is practicable and advisable to change all duties from specific to ad valorem duties.

(d) The average percentage of the duties imposed by the existing tariff, and the average percentage to which it is desirable to reduce the duties imposed under the proposed revision of the tariff, and the maximum and the minimum duties which it is desirable to impose.

(e) Whether it is practicable and desirable to distribute the proposed reduction over a period of four years.

(f) Whether it is practicable and advisable after making the contemplated reduction in the tariff to organize an administrative tariff board, which, acting under rules fixed by Congress, shall have the power, either upon its own initiative or upon the initiative of any importer, producer, or consumer, to further inquire into complaints of excessive duties prohibiting or unduly restricting importations, or of diminished duties permitting excessive importations to the prejudice of existing domestic industries and to the injury of the capital or labor employed therein, or of excessive duties prejudicial to domestic consumers; such board to present to the President and to Congress such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

(g) Whether it is practicable and advisable to give such tariff board, after full investigation and hearing, the power, with the approval of the President, to make reductions or increases in duties, within certain limitations and under rules prescribed by Congress; and if so, what limitations and rules should be prescribed.

(h) Whether it is practicable and advisable to make such rules and regulations for the action of such a tariff board as will enable the Government to feel its way gradually from a high protective to a revenue basis without readjustments prejudicial both to domestic labor and capital, and without denying to the consumers needed relief from the imposition of excessive taxes upon foreign imports and excessive prices for domestic products.

(i) Whether it is advisable to provide a graduated income tax and a graduated inheritance tax with a view to making up any deficit in revenue caused by a reduction in customs duties, and also with a view to extending the operations of the National Government in cooperation with the States in the improvement of post roads, the regulation of rivers in aid of navigation, irrigation, water-power development, and swamp-land reclamation, and also in cooperation with the States in the advancement of vocational education.

(k) Whether it is practicable and advisable to appoint a budget committee, of which the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the chairmen of the other supply committees shall be members.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

3. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether it is advisable to supplement the existing Sherman anti-trust act by legislation which will more specifically define restraints of trade, including therein the prevention of unfair competition, stock watering, overcapitalization, excessive size, interlocking directors, and the holding by one corporation of the stock of another.

(b) Whether it is advisable to substitute for the present system of holding companies, by which a corporation organized under the laws of a single Stae is made the means of federating corporations organized under the laws of other States for the purpose of interstate transportation, a national act for the incorporation of holding companies, under which railway companies organized under the laws of different States may be federated for interstate transportation, such holding companies to be subject in their general conduct to the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(c) Whether it is advisable to organize an interstate trade commission, in which shall be merged the officials, powers, and functions of the Bureau of Corporations, with powers of publicity, investigation, correction, and recommendation regarding corporations engaged in interstate trade similar to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding corporations engaged in interstate transportation, but without the power to fix prices; such interstate trade commission to have the power to aid the courts in the administration of the Sherman Act and other legislation supplementary thereto.

(d) Whether it is advisable to provide for the creation of a board of river regulation which shall bring into cooperation the departments and services of the National Government whose duties in any way relate to waterways in devising and carrying out comprehensive plans for the promotion of interstate commerce by the regulation of river flow, the mitigation of destructive floods, by the promotion of storage above and of bank and levee protection below, the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities, the coordination of rail and water carriers, and the cooperation of the Nation with the States, each within its jurisdiction, in plans and works for the full and, so far as practicable, compensatory development of the rivers for every useful purpose, and the establishment of an ample fund for continuous work during a period of 10 years.

(e) Whether it is practicable and advisable to bring into coordination under the Interstate Commerce Commission the related subjects of interstate transportation, interstate trade, and interstate exchange by the creation of three boards in such commission, one relating to interstate transportation, one relating to interstate trade, and one relating to interstate exchange, the present Interstate Commerce Commission to constitute the board of interstate transportation, the proposed interstate trade commission to constitute the board of interstate trade, and the proposed banking commission to constitute the board of interstate exchange, merging into the board of interstate trade the present Bureau of Corporations and merging into the board of interstate exchange the comptroller's office.

INTERSTATE EXCHANGE.

4. Resolved, That the proper Senate committee report as soon as possible during the extra session upon the following question:

(a) Whether it is practicable and advisable to organize under national law in each State a national reserve association, in which the State banks engaged in interstate exchange and complying with the national legislation as to capital and reserves shall be united with the national banks as members, such associations to have the powers of issue relating to emergency currency now enjoyed by the constituent national banks; such associations to have such of the powers proposed by the National Monetary Commission to be conferred upon a central national reserve association as are necessary and advisable; such State associations to have the powers of investigation and correction regarding the affairs of the constituent banks; such State associations to be brought into federation for the protection of interstate exchange and the prevention of bank panics through a national banking commission fairly representative of the different sections of the country, part of which shall be selected by such associations and part by the President of the United States; such national banking commission to have powers of investigation and correction over the State associations, and to report to the President and Congress annually such recommendations as it deems advisable regarding legislation and administration concerning monetary affairs.

PUBLIC LANDS AND NATURAL RESOURCES.

5. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Public Lands report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether it would be advisable for the National Government to promote the development of Alaska by the construction of a railroad or railroads; and, if so, the probable cost and plans for construction and operation.

(b) Recommendations regarding the protection of our natural resources in timber, coal, iron, and oil against monopolistic control.

(c) The applicability of the land laws of Canada to the conditions of our public domain, and particularly those provisions regarding the grant of the surface to settlers, excluding from the operation of the grant timber, coal, iron, oil, and water-power sites.

MILITARY EXPENSE AND AUXILIARY NAVY.

6. Resolved, That the Committee on Military and Naval Affairs report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) The preparation of a plan for the more efficient administration and cooperation of the Army and Navy and the reduction of the total Army and Navy expense for the next four years to not exceeding $225,000,000 annually, with the aid of a board of Army and Navy officers to be selected by the President.

(b) A plan for the construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing necessary service through the Panama Canal and new routes of commerce to foreign countries through lease to shipping companies; such legislation involving the temporary diminution of the construction of fighting ships and the substitution of auxiliary ships with a view to the organization of a well-proportioned and efficient Navy.

FOURTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON ALCOHOLISM.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1620) to provide for representation of the United States in the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia requests unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. KERN. What is it?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a bill providing for the appointment of delegates to the International Congress on Alcoholism. We have been invited by the Italian Government to send delegates in September. It is very important, if the bill is to pass, that it should pass very promptly.

Mr. KERN. If it is going to consume any time or provoke debate, I shall object to it, because the regular order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to call up the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not find here the report of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Here is the report.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an important matter. I do not like to object unless I know what I am objecting to.

Mr. SWANSON. The report was made on the 16th of this month. There has been ample time to examine it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have looked in my files, and I have no report here. It seems to me that if it is of importance we ought at least to read the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] does not desire to take up the unfinished business at 2 o'clock——

Mr. SWANSON. I will not let it interfere with the resolution the Senator from Indiana has in charge.

Mr. KERN. It is nearly 2 o'clock now.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not time to examine it by 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I must if I am to be confined to one minute to pass on it. I do not want to object if the Senator will grant me time to make the examination.

PAINT CREEK COAL FIELDS, WEST VIRGINIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate resolution 37, providing for an investigation into the conditions in the Paint Creek coal fields of West Virginia. The pending question is on the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask to have read two telegrams in the nature of petitions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. GOFF. What is the nature of the telegrams? I did not hear.

Mr. KERN. They are with reference to the subject under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., May 16, 1913.

Hon. SENATOR KERN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This is to certify that local union of carpenters and joiners of Charleston, W. Va., heartily indorse your resolution for an investigation of existing labor troubles in our State, and earnestly hope such investigation will be made, Senators CHILTON and GOFF to the contrary notwithstanding.

J. P. MCGREW.
C. P. STAATS, Secretary.

WHEELING, W. VA., May 18, 1913.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Twenty-five hundred citizens gathered in the auditorium here this afternoon in protest against martial law in West Virginia and to urge a Federal investigation, and unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the governor of the State of West Virginia has declared a state of war to exist within the State and has invoked martial law, setting aside the protection of the constitution and the laws;

Whereas men and women have been arrested without warrant of law, without charge as provided by law, and have been thrown in jail and kept there without a trial or sentence, and prevented from seeing even their families or lawyers; and

Whereas we believe that the disturbances that have existed throughout the coal-mining districts seem to be confined to those districts, and would seem to prove that the disturbances must have their cause in the conditions under which the workers in that industry are forced to live and labor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we declare that martial law should be at once abolished and every person held in custody immediately released unless they can be proven guilty before a jury of their peers of having violated a law of the State or Nation; that men and women shall have the privileges restored to them under our constitution and our laws; and be it further

Resolved, That we believe that a most thorough and searching investigation of the coal-mining conditions in this State be made in order to determine, if possible, the cause of the unrest which has become so great among our people, and that we urge the United States Government to immediately make such investigation, under the powers given in the interstate commerce laws, to the end that the public may know the true conditions and take such steps as may be advisable to remedy the conditions.

S. LEO J. LAFLAM,
WM. WILSON,
W. B. HITTON,
J. B. MOORE,
CHAS. D. RYAN,
L. F. SPROUSE,
Committee of Ohio Valley Trades and Labor Assembly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, the telegrams we have just heard read are quite similar to those heretofore offered and considered, and while I have every respect for those who send such telegrams I insist, nevertheless, that the action they have taken has been without full information on this subject, and they should have but little weight with the Senate.

The suggestion has been made that this matter should be referred to a committee. That suggestion comes to me this morning. If that had been suggested at the time the matter was first broached, before the atmosphere in this Chamber had become surcharged with the ludicrous, ridiculous, and the false information that has been presented, then it would have been entitled to more consideration. In order that I may be absolutely understood I take my position as I state it now. In the first place, this matter has no business before this Senate. Speaking judicially, speaking relative to the judicial aspect, this is a matter that should be considered by the courts. What jurisdiction has the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States to go into West Virginia or any other State for the purpose of making an investigation of this kind?

There are many matters that I can suggest to Senators just as proper, aye, even more so, for a senatorial investigation than is this labor strike in West Virginia. Lawyers on this floor, and the Senators generally, familiar with the legal history of the country know that the Supreme Court of the United States has stated distinctly—I refer to the noted case of Kilbourn against Thompson—that while the Congress of the United States may make certain investigations, that this is not of the character so authorized, and that the Senate would be absolutely without power to punish for contempt should its authority be defied.

You send out your committee. Witnesses are brought before it. A witness declines to answer, just as Kilbourn declined to answer. The House of Representatives imprisoned Kilbourn. The Supreme Court gave him his liberty and said the House of Representatives had no such power—that Congress has no such power. As to matters relating to the election and the qualification of its Members, as to matters relating to impeachment, as to matters concerning which there is a direct grant of power in the Constitution the Congress may investigate, but as to other matters it is absolutely powerless.

Now, what good would come of this investigation if the witness summoned before the committee should decline to answer the questions propounded by it? If you arrest them for contempt and try them, could you punish them? It is more than doubtful. I submit that this is a serious situation, worthy of the grave consideration of the Senate.

Let us look at it in another way. What is there in this resolution, in the matters that have been reported back by the committee, that the Senate is to investigate?

First. Whether or not any system of peonage is maintained in said coal fields.

The Senator who offers this resolution knows, as do many other Senators, that that matter has been fully investigated; that the Department of Justice fully investigated it; that at the time these resolutions were drawn the Department of Justice was advised of this charge, just as it is incorporated in this resolution. That department sent its representatives to this coal field. They sought all through that section for a scintilla of evidence that would show there was peonage in the coal fields, and they reported that no such evidence could be found. Why, then, is that to be taken up again? And why, Mr. President, should the Senate of the United States resolve itself into a grand jury, for that is about what is proposed here?

The United States courts in West Virginia are open. Our statutes make peonage an offense. The district attorney is there, with all the power of the Government to sustain him. The judge is on the bench, the jury in the box. Why, then, should not the investigation be made there, and not here?

Second. Whether or not access to post offices is prevented; and, if so, by whom.

The same remarks apply. The Post Office Department of the Government sent its inspectors there. They called upon all men who knew about this, "Come here and testify," and they reported to the Post Office Department that there was absolutely nothing in the charge. If any one can sustain it, let him go before the grand jury of the district of West Virginia. That court is open, and that is the orderly procedure.

Third. Whether or not the immigration laws of this country are being violated in the West Virginia coal fields; and, if so, by whom.

Whether the laws are being violated! That is what the courts are there for. That is what the grand jury is empaneled for. I am necessarily repeating points because of these subdivisions of the resolution. They could all be investigated after a charge by the court; such disposition of these matters should be satisfactory to all. But, as a matter of fact, the examinations have already been made, and the reports in the offices of the department of the Government in this city show that to be true.

Fourth. Whether or not parties are being convicted and punished in violation of the laws of the United States.

So far that is really the only matter which has been discussed before the Senate.

Now, hastily, I want to recapitulate on the questions of law involved in this suggestion. I am going to concede, I have in fact conceded, that the Constitution and the laws of West Virginia prohibit, as most of the States do, the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus.

Many of those who favor this resolution take the position that under no circumstances should the writ be suspended. I have answered that by saying that the habeas corpus writ has never been suspended in West Virginia. The zone has been drawn there in such a way that it includes no court having jurisdiction of that writ. The controversy has hinged upon whether or not the military commission sitting in that zone had the right to try people charged with civil offenses. The authorities that I have cited, I insist, maintain the position that the military commission was properly established and properly tried those cases.

Now, who did it try? There was no indictment, as a matter of course. The parties accused were brought before the court, after having been arrested by the military authorities. If not, there could have been no trial there. I am utterly unable to understand the character of martial law that after it makes an arrest of a man caught red-handed in insurrection, carries him under guard to the portals of the blind goddess of justice, knocks at the door and asks, "Can I come in with this prisoner and turn him over to you in order that the beauties of the civil law may still be maintained?" It is a travesty; it is absolutely paradoxical. The very declaration of martial law carries with it the idea that the civil law is inadequate to maintain the peace, and that the military authorities are in power. You will not find in the books a definition of martial law that does not imply that it exists because of the inability of the civil law to sustain itself. That is true through all the years before the organization of our Government, through all the years of civilization I am safe in saying.

I do not think there is a Senator on this floor who will say that the governor of West Virginia had not the power to declare martial law in a certain portion of the State at the time he so declared. Then he did that which has been the rule for years, a rule laid down by Vattel, by Halleck, and sustained by our Supreme Court. The rule gave him power to appoint the military court and to give it specific instructions, to define the character of the cases and the punishment that could be inflicted. That was done. The governor of West Virginia was authorized to do as he did, and he exercised the power that was his so as to insure the peace of the community and properly protect the citizenship thereof. To me it is amazing that in his honest efforts to suppress insurrection he should not have the cordial support of all those who love law and order.

Now, in addition to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] read from Luther against Borden, I want to call attention to an extract from the argument of Mr. Webster in that case:

I shall only draw attention to the subject of martial law; and in respect to that, instead of going back to martial law as it existed in England at the time the charter of Rhode Island was granted, I shall merely observe that martial law confers the power of arrest, of summary trial, and prompt execution; and that when it has been proclaimed the land becomes a camp, and the law of the camp is the law of the land. Mr. Justice Story defines martial law to be the law of war, a resort to military authority in cases where the civil law is not sufficient; and it confers summary power, not to be used arbitrarily or for the gratification of personal feelings of hatred or revenge, but for the preservation of order and of the public peace. The officer clothed with it is to judge of the degree of force that the necessity of the case may demand; and there is no limit to this, except such as is to be found in the nature and character of the exigency.

You will find that in the "Works of Daniel Webster," volume 6, page 241.

I find also in the "Writings of Jefferson," an authority both sides of this Chamber respect, volume 5, page 378, the following:

There are extreme cases where the laws become inadequate even to their own preservation, and when the universal resource is a dictator or martial law.

This is in a letter of Thomas Jefferson under date of October 27, 1808, to his personal friend Dr. James Brown.

Thus we have what the Supreme Court has said and the language of Mr. Webster, which was in effect carried into the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Luther against Borden. We also see what the men who made the Constitution and who founded the Government believed on the questions we now consider.

While upon this point and referring to the makers of the Constitution I conclude it will be well to read other extracts from the writings of prominent men of that time now applicable. Hamilton, who was a wonderful man, an accomplished statesman, a thorough student of the science of government, who took part in all the discussions that preceded the Declaration of Independence, the forming of the Government, and the adoption of the Constitution, said:

It is in vain to impose a constitutional barrier to the impulse of self-preservation. (No. 41, Federalist.)

John Adams figured very prominently in these discussions and was President of the United States. He said, speaking of the Constitution:

All the powers incident to war are, by necessary implication, conferred upon the Government of the United States. There are in the authority of Congress and of the Executive two classes of powers, altogether different in their nature and often incompatible with each other, the war power and the peace power.

In order to make clear the point I have heretofore suggested, and to make applicable the authorities I have cited and the extracts I have read, I want you to bear in mind that the Supreme Court has said that when war is spoken of in those decisions it means also insurrection, so far as the Federal or State Governments are concerned, and therefore the power that exists in the Congress or in the Federal Government, if there be insurrection, exists also in the States.

The peace power—

Still reading from President Adams—

The peace power is limited by regulations and restricted by provisions prescribed with the Constitution itself. The war power is limited only by the laws and usages of nations. This power is tremendous. It is strictly constitutional, but it breaks down every barrier so anxiously erected for the protection of liberty, of property, and of life.

There comes now and then such emergencies, when for the good of humanity, when in order to preserve our homes and our firesides, our lares and our penates, the power must exist somewhere to resort to extreme measures, in order that society shall be protected and that government may still live.

In all the trials that were had by this military commission in West Virginia, there has not yet been stated to the Senate or developed upon this floor a single case wherein it has been made to appear that the defendant was improperly convicted. I admit there was no——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GOFF. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I thought that was the question that we were arguing—that they were all improperly convicted——

Mr. GOFF. No.

Mr. BORAH. Because they were not convicted in any tribunal that had the right to try them.

Mr. GOFF. If that is the answer to it, then great men differ, as I intimated the other day, and the Senator differs from the Supreme Court of the United States, of the State of Pennsylvania, and of the State of West Virginia, last mentioned but not least by any means.

The point I make is this: If as to these persons that we are told have been improperly tried, illegally convicted, and cruelly punished there could not be made out a case, the ingenious lawyers who have represented them in our courts in West Virginia and the able Senators who have defended them on the floor of the Senate have been unable to show irregularity in the proceedings against them. Take the State against John Jones, for instance, and the record will show all the charges, all the evidence, and all that was said, as well as the judgment entered. From the reading of it you can see whether or not there was any testimony under which these men were properly held. There is a woeful lack of any such reference. If I were in favor of the passage of a resolution the object of which was to show that the military court in West Virginia had the power claimed for it and that it did not exercise that power cruelly and illegally, I would not want anything better than the transcript of the record that was kept, the testimony offered by the military authorities, and that submitted by the parties accused.

A great many of those people pleaded guilty.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask are any of those cases pending on appeal on writ of error in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. GOFF. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not one?

Mr. GOFF. Not one.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So there is no possibility of having a decision there?

Mr. GOFF. I will say to the Senator, in reply to that question, that a case is now being perfected in West Virginia for that very purpose. Those who represent the parties whom the court of appeals of the State held were properly in detention and sustained the military commission were under the impression, I am advised, that the case as it was presented to the court of appeals of West Virginia did not contain certain propositions that they thought were really essential for the proper presentation of the matter for the final action of the Supreme Court. So they are making a case that will contain those points, and that will go to the Supreme Court, as every one there wants it to go.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. It does not appear, at least to my mind, from the debate what some of the charges were against these various men who have been restrained of their liberty. Now, I ask the Senator from West Virginia, who is perfectly familiar with these matters, what were some of the charges? Were they violations of State statutes or were they merely offenses against the military code?

Mr. GOFF. I will mention some. These men were charged with inciting to riot; they were charged with insurrection; they were charged with unlawfully gathering together for the purpose of impeding the administration of the law in the coal zone; they were charged with murder and convicted of murder on testimony overwhelming. That is what some of them were charged with.

Mr. KENYON. And they were all charges of the violation of the State statutes?

Mr. GOFF. They were charged with violations of the laws of West Virginia, which were specified in the sections of the code that I have alluded to.

Mr. KENYON. And they were tried in the military court for the violation of the State statutes?

Mr. GOFF. In every instance.

Now, it does not properly represent the condition in West Virginia to say that all the miners in that section of the State are in favor or were in favor of the course pursued by those on strike. Some of them did not want to strike; they wanted to work that they might live, while others wanted to strike. They had a perfect right to strike; everybody concedes that. Frequently strikes are properly inaugurated and properly conducted and result beneficially; but those who wanted to strike had no right to prevent others from working who wanted to work; and it was the effort to prevent them from working, as well as the refusal of the mine operators to comply with certain demands made upon them, that brought on the strike and compelled those who did not want to strike to join—sometimes to join under coercion—or, if not joining, to be quiescent and keep out of the way. So the strike was inaugurated under such circumstances; not all the people, not all the men, not all the laborers, by any means, acquiescing in it.

I am not going to be misrepresented; I am not going to be misquoted; I am not going, if I can prevent it, to have the State that I in part represent here maligned and held up as occupying a position that it has never taken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to be unjust to a State. I may not understand the situation, and I probably do not, but is this provision in the constitution of the Senator's State, article 3, section 12, referred to by Judge Robinson in his dissenting opinion?

The military shall be subordinate to the civil power; and no citizen, unless engaged in the military service of the State, shall be tried or punished by any military court for any offense that is cognizable by the civil courts of the State.

It would seem that these offenses are offenses that are cognizable by the civil courts of the State. It would seem from statements made in the dissenting opinion that, outside of this limited zone, over in Charleston, a few miles away, the civil courts and criminal courts were actually in session undisturbed in the courthouse, with the doors open, and that those who had violated the law within the zone could be taken outside the zone where the civil courts of the State would have full sway. Is it the Senator's position that, even if this were a matter of inquiry confined to the State of West Virginia alone, and even conceding that we, as a part of the Congress of the United States, might not properly investigate it, no one could inquire as to whether or not, notwithstanding what the governor said, there was no fact justifying the necessity for invoking martial law and that everybody is estopped from making such an inquiry because the governor issued such a proclamation or order? Does the Senator maintain that that position is sound?

Mr. GOFF. I will explain. In the first place, the Senator has properly quoted the constitution of West Virginia. It is true also that it has been properly quoted as it refers to the writ of habeas corpus. But it is also claimed that that provision of the constitution must in certain exigencies be construed with other provisions of the constitution, with decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and with that law that is higher than any statute, or any constitution—the right of self-preservation, the inherent power of any government to protect and save itself.

It is not the first time by any means that such a proposition as that has been enunciated; but I hope to God it will be the last. I hope that no such conditions will ever exist either in West Virginia or in any other State of the Union that will render it essential to resort to such extreme measures.

We might as well look the situation squarely in the face; we might as well appreciate the circumstances under which West Virginia was, and other States now are, suffering; we might as well concede that we are standing on the brink of a fearful precipice, the fall over which means certain death—death to the individual, death to the government. We had better pause and take stock; we had better look at this trouble and other troubles, not in the light that it will help here or help there to gain a vote here or lose a vote there; but if we want to preserve constitutional government on the face of the earth, we have got to properly handle these unusual strikes, riots, and insurrections.

To show that I am not alone, that I am sounding no false chord, I beg leave to read and to incorporate in my remarks an editorial that was published in the New York World in its issue of May 16. It is headed, "An issue that must be met." just as I have been trying to present in my feeble way—an issue that must be met:

Patrick Quinlan, of the I. W. W., comes into collision with what used to be called Jersey justice, and is convicted at Paterson of inciting to assault. He may go to the penitentiary for years.

Sympathy with labor and with those who seek to assist labor in its lawful purposes can hardly be extended to Quinlan. He was an intruder. He interfered in an industrial quarrel not as a coworker, not as a peacemaker, not as a negotiator, not even as a citizen. Like all the other members of the I. W. W., he appeared on the scene to promote trouble, to intensify anger, and to encourage violence. He is facing the penalty of lawlessness.

It is not the authorities alone that show their bristles when the I. W. W. appears. Every responsible labor organization in America manifests similar sentiments. Why? Because the misguided men who have launched this piratical craft upon the industrial sea are avowed enemies of peace, order, law, right, and justice.

This editorial is not classifying all labor organizations in that way.

Their aim is not to promote the interests of those who work. It is to inflict damage upon property, injury upon those who employ labor, and contempt upon all those whose duty it is to enforce the law.

That is the sentiment to which I alluded a few moments ago when I said that in a strike zone the people generally sympathize with the misguided and those conducting themselves illegally.

With them labor's interests are always secondary.

If this idea is to prevail, we shall soon have no industry and no Government, no wages and no property, no rights and no justice. If there can be no common ground on which employers and employees can meet, peace is impossible and progress is impossible.

The I. W. W.'s purpose is avowedly destructive. It is not satisfied merely with the destruction of industry. It destroys property. It seeks to intimidate capital. It terrorizes labor. It entertains a grotesque theory that it can destroy government.

A so-called labor organization that sacrifices labor to lawlessness, that never makes peace, that refuses to arbitrate, that teaches sedition and crime, that has no known objective but riot, and that carries in its pulpy hands no standard but that of license, certainly has no place in this Republic.

No matter how many ill-advised and ill-disposed persons may foolishly yield to the appeals of the leaders of the I. W. W., the issue which they raise is one that must be met unflinchingly. Rights and interests of labor and rights and interests of capital as such must be held in abeyance when the higher rights of society are menaced.

The brawlers of this organization represent no legitimate interest. They are avowed wreckers. They have no habitation. They are engaged in no respectable industry. They challenge law. They are nomads. Wherever they appear they provoke disorder, bloodshed, terror. They are not to be dignified with the title of rebels or revolutionists. They are desperadoes, and they should be dealt with as desperadoes.

The condition in New Jersey to-day is as bad as it ever was in West Virginia during the coal strike, which is now over. If I may read from newspapers, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] did when arraigning West Virginia, I noticed yesterday in the metropolitan journals that Quinlan, though convicted, was able, nevertheless, to address large audiences, as any citizen who speaks upon great governmental questions should be permitted to do; but the advice that was given, the threats that were made, indicated that, unless the judgment of that court—and I want to say that the judgments of New Jersey courts have always been held in great respect——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator's reference to conditions being as bad in New Jersey as they were in West Virginia prompts me to advance this thought: Heaven knows that the struggle of labor is bad in almost every State to a greater or less degree, and the conditions recently in Paterson, N. J., indeed are unfortunate; but New Jersey can not be classed with West Virginia, in that she has not invoked martial law.

Mr. GOFF. She ought to. If you had martial law in New Jersey to-day——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is the Senator's assumption, but New Jersey is able through its civil courts to cope with every contingency that has yet arisen.

Mr. GOFF. Very well——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If our conditions were as bad as yours, or if yours were as bad as ours, I say then that West Virginia might look up to the example of the little Commonwealth of New Jersey that has not invoked the aid of military courts-martial. We have tried offenders against our laws and can continue to do so. I pray you not to couple with West Virginia the Commonwealth which I in part represent in methods of procedure of that kind.

Mr. GOFF. Very well, Mr. President; I am obliged to the Senator. New Jersey, it seems, has not resorted to martial law; New Jersey has tried offenses of this kind by a civil court. The insurrection in New Jersey is still extant; order has not been restored in Paterson; property has been destroyed in Paterson; human life, I am told, has been taken in Paterson; and the court that is to sentence Quinlan—if I may now go back to make reference to the journal to which I called attention a moment ago—was gravely advised that unless the judgment was set aside the halls of justice would go up in smoke and ruin. I say it would be better for New Jersey, and it would be better even over in Ohio to-day, where the law is held at naught——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, Mr. President, I ask what becomes of our vaunted liberty; what becomes of our constitutional system of government if such a process is to be resorted to? It becomes a farce and a mockery.

Mr. GOFF. Well, Mr. President, if the argument I have made; if the citations I have presented; if the mandate of the Supreme Court does not answer the Senator's question, it is utter folly for me to undertake to do so. The interruption—begging the Senator's pardon—to which I yielded was not, in my judgment, for the purpose of sustaining the position that he enunciates in reference to liberty and justice, but was made, and is intended and will have the result, whether intended or not, of aggravating the situation in his own State.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am as law abiding as the Senator from West Virginia can possibly be. My prompting and incentive was not to provoke or irritate strife, but rather to allay it. The assertion upon the part of the Senator is utterly uncalled for and ungenerous. I believe in constitutional liberty, and with the courts in West Virginia wide open, as has been stated by the Senator himself, I do insist that it was a step far at variance with constitutional liberty to invoke the aid of a military court-martial. No theories, no arguments, can convince me to the contrary.

I have been, in a way, a laborer all my life. The strife between labor and capital is sad, and it will never stop until mankind shall be prompted to avail themselves of and to acquiesce in the thoughts and teachings of the great Power who bids us treat mankind as brothers.

Mr. GOFF. I have no war or controversy with the matter that the Senator chooses to interject into this discussion. He must be his own judge about that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am responsible for it, too.

Mr. GOFF. That is correct. But when the declaration of civil war is necessary—and all the courts tell us that the governor is to be the judge of when it is necessary—for the Senator to take the position that it is made for the purpose of destroying liberty——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But this, Mr. President, was not a declaration of civil war.

Mr. GOFF. I said "a declaration of martial law."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I understood the Senator to say "civil war."

Mr. GOFF. If I did, I used the wrong word.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg the Senator's pardon. One is about as bad as the other. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will maintain order in the galleries.

Mr. GOFF. Very well. When a proclamation of martial law is issued under the circumstances that existed in West Virginia, to claim that it was done for the purpose of destroying liberty, interfering with labor, injuring property, or doing injustice to anyone is so extremely extravagant that it is best simply so to style it and say nothing more.

I want to call attention now to another editorial communication, published in another great metropolitan journal, the New York Sun, on Friday last.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the junior Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I have no desire to interrupt the Senator's statement. I do not wish, however, to let pass without comment a remark he made with reference to conditions in my city.

The Senator spoke as though there was loss of life and great injury to property in that unfortunate municipality. I wish to eradicate from the minds of Senators any such idea that may have arisen owing to what the Senator from West Virginia said. I am, as he is, dependent upon newspaper reports for information as to conditions in the city of Paterson. There has been but one life lost, so far as I know, and no one has charged the loss of that life to the strikers or to the members of the organization which has the strike in charge. My information is that that particular individual whose life was lost was killed by some representative of the constituted authorities there, or the strike breakers. So far as the destruction of property is concerned, if there has been any, it has been immaterial in extent.

I wish to state, if the Senator will pardon me, although I do not like to encroach upon his time, that the city of Paterson has an unfortunate reputation which, in my judgment, it does not at all deserve. Its conduct and the conduct of its citizens in the present crisis should demonstrate to the Nation at large that its people are peaceful, law-abiding citizens of the Nation. When one recollects that there are 25,000 working people now upon the streets of the city of Paterson on strike against conditions which, in my judgment, have become absolutely intolerable, and when one stops to think that in addition to that there has been no loss of life chargeable to them, and that there has been no destruction of property worthy of the name, I can not sit still and have the Senator create the impression in the minds of the Members of this body, and send it out to the country, that there are conditions existing in that city or in that State anything like those which the Senator insists exist in his own Commonwealth.

The strikers, the members of the Industrial Workers of the World, wherever they have offended, have been brought before the regular and duly constituted tribunals of that State and city. They have been tried before duly constituted judges. They have had able attorneys in their defense. They have been given the benefit of every privilege or right that any ordinary citizen charged with crime is given. A number of them were acquitted by a supreme court justice after a summary conviction by a police court magistrate. In handing down that decision the justice of the supreme court, who holds that court in my home county, said, as an admonition to the justice below, that it was his duty and the duty of every magistrate and law officer to demonstrate to these people that, as American citizens or as residents or inhabitants of a country dedicated to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, the law in the city of Paterson and the State of New Jersey is alike for the rich and the poor.

They are now proceeding upon that theory. They are arresting men, sometimes when they should be arrested, and, in my judgment, sometimes when they should not be arrested. But when they get into the courts they are given fair and impartial trials, and if there is error in the procedure they will be given a fair and impartial hearing above.

I commend the conduct of the city of Paterson and the Commonwealth of New Jersey in this respect to my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. I am happy to know that evidently the statements that have been spread broadcast over the land relative to the situation in New Jersey are not well founded; but it is utterly impossible to harmonize the statements that have just been made with the accounts that have been published in the journals. Again, if there is no strife in New Jersey, if there is no insurrection there, as a matter of course the governor of New Jersey properly and rightfully declined to issue a proclamation of martial law. There is, then, a difference between the present situation in New Jersey and the situation in West Virginia at the time martial law was declared. I have stated, and it seems I must repeat, that at that time thousands of men were carrying arms and marching for an avowed unlawful purpose that does not, it seems, exist in New Jersey, and I am delighted that it does not. Insurrection was rampant.

I am not saying who was wrong. I am not saying how that condition was brought about. I think both sides to the original controversy may have been at fault. But the situation existed, as I say. Would it not have been lovely under such circumstances for an officer of the law, we will say the sheriff of the county, to march down where two or three thousand people were in arms and try to arrest those people and take them to a court for trial?

It was the futility of that which caused the governor to issue this proclamation and to establish martial law. While the sheriff would be taking his prisoners down the 20 miles for trial, how many would he take—one, two, three, or a thousand?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. REED. The Senator from West Virginia has stated several times that he does not intend to go into the origin of this dispute. He takes the very lawyer-like position that he is now arguing the question with reference to the actual conditions that existed when this order of the governor was promulgated; and of that I make no complaint. But I do want to ask the Senator to enlighten us to this extent:

It appears that there were two armed bodies of men—I think the statement has been made that there were some two or three thousand men—divided into two hostile camps. One camp, we understand, was composed of strikers. Now, who constituted the other camp? How did it come into existence? Was it organized or unorganized? Were they citizens of the community or men who had been brought in there?

I should like to know these facts, because they have some bearing on whether or not there was war. Will the Senator kindly tell us?

Mr. GOFF. The Senator evidently was not present when the explanation was made about this matter; or, if he was, he does not recall it.

On one side of the camp or the field of disturbance were the strikers, and there were large numbers of them. There are a great many mines in that locality. A great industry had been developed, and a great many men were laboring there. A great many men from all over the Nation had invested large sums of money there, and those men were banded together for the purpose of protecting their property, as men have done from the time that time began and as men will continue to do as long as time is. They were defending themselves, the civil law not being able to do it. Red-handed anarchy prevailed. I concede it. I never have dodged it in this discussion.

Mr. REED. The Senator is not quite as clear——

Mr. GOFF. I am not yet through answering the Senator's question.

Mr. REED. Very well; I will wait in patience, of course.

Mr. GOFF. I am not objecting at all to being interrogated, but I want to make a full statement while I am at it.

These men had protectors or guards for their mines. They were given to understand that their mines would be destroyed. In fact, some of the machinery—the tipples—was destroyed. Who was there to prevent it?

Senators, it is easy enough to talk about depriving people of liberty and making improper arrests. Are you to stand by your own home and let an infuriated desperado come to it with the avowed purpose of destroying it? There is not a man within the sound of my voice that would not, with his back to the wall in that way, shoot to kill anyone who so sought to destroy either his life or his property.

Then these men who had made those great investments and had their guards employed others. Some of them were called detectives; some of them were called mine guards. They were the men from the stores and the shops and the team drivers. They were men that were brought together in an exigency to save the locality, to save the property, to save human life. They did not so congregate for the love of the thing, or simply because they could, but it was to show opposition and resistance: "Stand back and behave yourselves! Stand back and let our property alone, or if you come, you come with bristling bayonets before you, ready to meet you!"

Those were the two camps. Those were the hostile legions that confronted each other and made the situation when the governor said: "What can I do? How can I stop this? How can I prevent the collision that looks inevitable—that will produce such carnage, suffering, and death? I can send no posse with the sheriff. I can not cause these men to be indicted. It is instantaneous; it is now; it is to-night; or it is death in the morning!" That was the situation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to say to the Senator that I am only seeking for light.

The Senator says that some of these men on one side were guards in the mines. I take it that he means guards regularly employed, ordinarily employed about the mines, in ordinary times. I want to ask the Senator this question in just this way, whether it is not a fact that a large number of the occupants of one of these camps were detectives, or men calling themselves detectives, and known as Baldwins, who were brought into the State of West Virginia from the outside, and armed, and gathered under the command of leaders?

I am asking that question to distinguish or get a line of demarcation, if possible, between the man who defended his own property, the man who called to his aid the citizens of the community, and the man who employed a hired constabulary of armed Hessians brought in for a specific purpose.

Mr. GOFF. If the Senator deems that material in an issue of this kind, I will restate it.

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GOFF. Did I not say that they were called detectives? Did I not say that they were guards at the mines? Did I not say that these people who were determined to protect their own property got aid and assistance here, there, and everywhere? They brought them into the field. I care not whether they be detectives or not. Is it a crime to be a detective?

Mr. REED. No; but most of them are criminals.

Mr. GOFF. That may be. That is a gratuity, though, that has no place in this discussion, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. But I beg for a more specific statement.

Mr. GOFF. Very well. In what particular?

Mr. REED. The question I asked was whether the majority of the men in one of these camps were not men of this detective organization, as distinguished from the owners of the mine, or the ordinary guards generally employed, and whether they were not nonresidents brought into the State of West Virginia?

Mr. GOFF. Some of them were detectives; some of them were Baldwin detectives, as I understand. There is no law that prohibits their employment in West Virginia. They were brought there for a purpose. The purpose was to defend property and to ascertain who it was that was organizing and continuing to organize and to incite insurrection. They knew, as we know to-day, that there is a power behind the screen that issues orders that bring about these disturbances.

Why, even since the discussion began in this Senate Chamber some one touched buttons and flashed over the land the message that the cause here was weak, with nothing to sustain this resolution but bare statements. "We have no affidavits; we have no full and frank statement from anyone upon which we can base our application to the Senate and demand an investigation." All along the line the wires went flashing, and the distinguished Senator from Indiana advised us gravely the next day, with his hands full of telegrams, "I have the information now."

It is all right, I suppose, for those gentlemen to get information and to use detectives in getting it—as they did use them there—but it is a crime and the employment of criminals when the men interested in that locality find it necessary to resort to the same thing.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. GOFF. Not just now; in a moment.

I have stated distinctly that the men on both sides were armed. I have never dodged it. I have never tried to evade it. I would not if I could, and I could not if I desired. It is a fact. It was the thing that made the situation desperate. Men, as I said a moment ago, are going to take the steps that are necessary and essential to protect themselves, to protect their property as well as their homes, if you wish to draw the distinction; and that was all. That was the situation that existed, a situation that I have maintained justified the governor in inaugurating martial law.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood the Senator. I understood him to say that the Senator from Indiana had employed detectives to get information.

Mr. GOFF. I did not; I did not. I can not understand how the Senator can intimate that he so understood me.

Mr. REED. That is pretty nearly equivalent to stating that I have made a wrong statement here willfully.

Mr. GOFF. No, sir; it means that you have not understood what I said.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator, in discussing the question of somebody having touched buttons and sent out a cry for information, to say in the same sentence that detectives had been employed to get the information. I think if the Senator will examine his remarks in the transcript of the notes he will find that my construction was not a forced one. But I did not think the Senator meant to say that, and that is the reason I rose at the time to ask him. He requested me to wait, until now the words have grown cold. I am very glad to know that that was not his purpose; I am glad to know I was mistaken; but I hope the Senator will not intimate that I have deliberately misconstrued his words.

Mr. GOFF. I find myself required to repeat myself continually, not that I like to do so, but that in answering the queries propounded to me I must necessarily do it. What I meant, what I think I said, what I intended to say, was that there was flashed all over the land that this testimony was needed. I have made the point on the floor of the Senate that a favorable report from one of the great committees of this body had been made without a scintilla of evidence to support it, and I repeat it. It was a wonderful thing to do. I do not know, but I have no doubt but that the Senator from Indiana did send dispatches asking for help, because it would be perfectly natural that he should. He needed it, God knows.

What I meant to say about detectives I intended to confine to the men who were employed on both sides there in this strike zone, the one to eliminate the strike and prevent it if possible, and the other for the information that would enable them to defend themselves if defense became necessary.

I have been trying to get some statements from the New York journals into this case, but it seems like it is a very hard thing to do. I am going back to it now just for a little while——

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. GOFF. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. KERN. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to say a moment ago that he had no sort of doubt but that the Senator from Indiana sent out word to people in various parts of the country to send in messages of the kind that were read here to the Senate, if I understood the Senator correctly. I think it is but proper I should say that I sent out no such message, nor did I have any thought of sending such a message.

Mr. GOFF. I simply said that if I had been in your place I would have done it; that is all.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from West Virginia seems to forget that the people of this country, even the working people, read the newspapers, and as soon as they learn in various parts of the country of the kind of opposition that was being urged to this resolution, as soon as they learned the sources of the opposition and the character of the opposition, the messages came by the hundred and by the thousand spontaneously, many of them from men who had themselves felt the heel of this despotism. Many of them came from men who had been driven out of West Virginia by the hired guards of the coal operators; still more came from the great humane element in this country that believes in fair play; still more came from a still greater element in this country, thank God, that believes in the supremacy of the civil law and the subserviency of military law.

There was no need to ask for messages. They came, and they are coming yet. If the Senator listened this morning, he would have heard read an account of a meeting of 2,500 citizens of his own State held on yesterday afternoon in Wheeling, in which they expressed in forcible terms their opinion of this proposed investigation. He would have read, again, of the proceedings of an independent body of workingmen in his own home city declaring in favor of this investigation. He would have read, if he had read the RECORD a day or two ago, where the representatives of 75,000 workingmen of Texas demanded this investigation and 65,000 more in the State of Missouri. From my own State came hundreds of these messages.

Oh, no, the Senator from West Virginia is in error if he thinks it was necessary that anybody here need call for these expressions of the sentiment of people who felt outraged at this prostitution of the executive authority of West Virginia to place the civil law underneath the military law.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, we have the usual beautiful display of eloquent generalities. Now, who is taking issue with this wonderful method of stating propositions that no man controverts, except the statement the Senator made that the governor had illegally issued his martial-law proclamation? It is claimed always, as a matter of course, that the people in a locality who do not necessarily bow to the demand of labor are oppressing labor, that the community are up in arms against labor. It is not true. It is not true in that locality. The people over there are not in favor, the people over there were not in favor of the strike. They are not in favor of this investigation, not that they have anything to conceal. Everything has been published to the world. I have stated it here on this floor, and I have stated it in its worst aspect. I have regretted the conditions there, but does it follow that the people are acting outrageously, that the governor has perjured himself and is taking a course not authorized, and that somebody has been led out or driven out of the State? I do not know about that. How can I? If some one has been driven out, I take it the chances are nine out of ten that he was properly driven out. I do not know. I never heard of it. I do not doubt it. There are a great many who ought to have been driven out who were not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator is continually appealing to the law. By what process of law is a man banished from a State in this country?

Mr. GOFF. I think there are a great many Senators on this floor who know of instances in which, for their own good, people have been advised to disappear between sundown and sunup, and a good many of them who feel in their hearts that the safest thing for them to do is to get away before daylight.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is a plea in confession and avoidance, but a very sorry one. The Senator is standing here planting his argument, not upon the question of right and wrong, but upon the cold doctrine that under the law the governor had the right to do what he did and that there is no recourse. I am astonished to find a man who stands upon this rock of the law asserting the doctrine of mob law and mob rule and disregard of all law undertaking to sanction the unlawful acts of men who warn other citizens to leave the community upon peril of life. I have not been here long, but it is the first time I have ever heard the doctrine announced in this Chamber that it is proper that a body of superior force or a man of superior ferocity and desperation be permitted to say to a citizen that he must leave the State upon peril of life or limb. It is a strange doctrine, sir, to be announced by the lips of a man who is proclaiming himself the apostle of law and order.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator will recall he will remember that I said there were people upon this floor, and probably a number of them, who knew just what such instances were that the Senator from Indiana alluded to, and that it was by methods of that kind, not the act of the governor and not the act of anyone representing him, that probably drove men out of the State. I did not say it was proper. I did not intimate it was proper. I simply said that those instances had taken place in the past, and they will take place yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the Senator what he thinks the remedy is when men denounce the Constitution of the United States and carry through the streets the red flag of anarchy? What is to be done?

Mr. GOFF. Does the Senator state that as a problem for me to answer?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and if the Senator will permit me, before answering it, I want to read two or three extracts, which are very brief, that appear in the morning papers.

Mr. Patrick Quinlan, the I. W. W. agitator, declared only a day or two ago:

We will win this strike or the city of Paterson will be wiped off the map.

Paterson is a very dangerous place to be in at the present time. We don't know what will break loose there at any minute. If we don't obey the law—

He admits they do not obey the law—

If we don't obey the law, it is because we are following the example set by the Paterson authorities themselves.

Mr. Frederick S. Boyd said:

We've got this strike won, and soon all of you will be back working. But next year we'll demand 25 per cent more than we're asking now, and the year after that 25 per cent more than that. And we'll insist on seven hours a day.

Mr. Haywood says:

We're not going to ask the bosses to give us eight hours; we're going to take it. And next year we'll take six hours.

I suppose the Senator from West Virginia noticed what happened in Cincinnati not long ago. I want to read just one very interesting thing that occurred there. What did these men do who are being championed so ferociously in certain quarters, and who find their advocates and defenders in the seats of the mighty?

While a riot that occurred at the Brighton barns this morning probably proved the most serious, yet one a little later at Fourth Avenue and Vine Street was the more spectacular. Small steel beams, barrels of plaster, and bags of cement were hurled upon a passing car from the upper floors of the 34-story building of the Union Central Life Insurance Co. * * * The crew as well as the employees of the company riding on the first car out of the Brighton barns were assaulted and some of them are now at the hospital in a precarious condition.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there may have been conditions in West Virginia, in view of what is happening in other parts of the country at the present moment, that justified the governor of West Virginia in resorting to any means that he could command to protect the lives and property of the people of that unfortunate community.

Mr. GOFF. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia permit me to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. GOFF. You have my permission. The Senator from New Hampshire will speak for himself.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire under what rules of evidence he thinks that the conditions in Paterson, N. J., are pertinent to the conditions at Paint Creek, in West Virginia?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not talking about rules of evidence, Mr. President. I assume that the conditions are very similar, and I think if we had authorities in New Jersey that would put an end to the violence that exists there and the destruction of life and property, it would be well to have that authority invoked; just as I think when the mayor of Cincinnati appealed to the governor of Ohio, when the police force of the city of Cincinnati proved utterly inadequate to cope with the desperadoes who were destroying lives and property there, there ought to have been relief furnished by the governor of Ohio by sending militia to that great city. That is my judgment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the answer is so conclusive I will not pursue it further.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can be as discourteous as he pleases; it does not affect me in the least.

Mr. REED. I would not be discourteous to the Senator for anything in the world, because I rise to say that if there is one man in the Senate whom I completely and absolutely reverence, it is the Senator from New Hampshire. I asked his opinion because I thought perhaps there was some mysterious law of general averages which had escaped my attention, which he could supply, by which he arrived at the conclusion that if there was violence in Paterson, N. J., it was conclusive evidence there was riot at Paint Creek.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia will permit me, I have assumed that there was no question in the mind of any man who has read the newspapers or listened to the statements which have been made on this floor that there was violence at Paint Creek, in the State of West Virginia. I understand that the violence has ceased; that the strike is over; and we are now having a legislative post-mortem on things that occurred there some weeks ago.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from West Virginia is entirely too generous in giving up his time here. Some of us are intensely interested in hearing the discussion and having it confined somewhere within the neighborhood of its real purposes. For about an hour he has been attempting to read an article from one of the New York newspapers. He has not been able to do it yet; I think the interruptions run so far from the mark that the rest of us have a right to protest.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from West Virginia will permit me, I have not taken any time in this discussion and very little time in other discussions during the present session. The Senator from West Virginia very courteously yielded to me, and I was within my rights and within the rules of the Senate in making the observations I did.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire my reference was a general one; it had no more relation to his statement than it had to the general discussion which has carried us so far away from the speaker's purposes; and I hope the Senator will understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator's suggestion is a correct one.

Mr. GOFF. I am going back now to the article which has been alluded to, that I have been prevented from reading because of the numerous inquiries that have been made of me. I have no objection to Senators asking me questions. I am apt, as are most men on their feet, to overlook points, to forget matters, and if anyone interested in the subject desires to suggest something for me to reply to and for their edification, I am willing always to acquiesce; but I do think there are some interruptions that have not been made at an auspicious time. However, if I should leave anything unsaid before I take my seat I shall be glad to have my attention called to it.

Last Friday, May 16, the New York Sun published what I am about to read. We may not all agree with newspaper publications or newspaper editorials, but in a great many instances they are well received, published at the right time, and have a most laudable purpose. I read one from the World. I think it a superb editorial. It will be flashed all over the land, not only by the wonderful circulation of that paper, but in other ways and through other papers, and I intend to give it the publicity that a statement in the Senate of the United States and the publication in the RECORD will give it, because its words are sound sense and it gives the warning that this country needs at this time. A serious state of affairs confronts us. I am just as fond of human liberty, justice, and the rights of citizenship as are any of the gentlemen on the other side, who have propounded the queries to me indicating that I am not. It is because I love justice, it is because I am in favor of the continuation of constitutional government, that I want the violators of law punished, I care not who they are, or where they come from, or what are their names, what locality they live in, or in what land God's sunshine first kissed their cheeks. If there are in this land citizens, or men intending to become citizens, who have complaints to make, they are entitled to be heard; they are entitled to the protection of their property; they are entitled to all the guards of the Constitution, as it is interpreted both in war and in peace. But when they take the law into their own hands, when they say to either capitalist, laborer, merchant, or lawyer, whoever he be, "You shall do this," and "You shall not do that," when they say, as I have understood they said, for I was not there at Paint Creek, "You shall not run this coal mine unless you run it as I advise you," they are in insurrection, and I would be ashamed of the governor of a State who would stand by and not exercise the power that is his.

Now, the other side. When men in those localities and over in Cincinnati to-day beg to be permitted to work, when men over in New Jersey—I know it is a danger zone for anyone here on this side to get into, but just the same I venture to put my foot there, figuratively speaking—I say, when those men wish to work in any State or at any point and another man says to them, "You shall not," and incites an insurrection to carry out his threat, the governor who will not call for the power of the State, if civil courts are not able to keep the peace, is unworthy of the name of governor.

Back to editorial now. I read from the New York Sun:

INCITATION TO VIOLENCE.

Every thoughtful reader of the morning newspaper must to-day find cause for reflection and apprehension in the news from Paterson, N. J. After a fair trial Patrick Quinlan has been convicted of an offense against the peace and order of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to ask if that was by a court-martial?

Mr. GOFF. You did not address the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GOFF. Not just now; after awhile.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Just a minute.

Mr. GOFF. I will never get this piece read if Senators keep on interrupting me.

After a fair trial Patrick Quinlan has been convicted of an offense against the peace and order of the State of New Jersey. The offense is aggravated by the fact that Quinlan is not a resident either of the city of Paterson or of New Jersey, and such incitation to violence as he has been adjudged guilty of represents the intervention of an alien in the domestic affairs of that State.

Notwithstanding this fact it is now proposed by the associates of Quinlan, speaking from a public platform, that unless the due processes of the law are suspended and Quinlan permitted to go unwhipped of justice the whole industrial life, the very existence of Paterson, is to be paralyzed by general strikes.

To gratify a spirit of revenge or assert the complete supremacy of the Industrial Workers of the World as an organization and the immunity of the individual members a great city is to be plunged in darkness. Thousands of women and children, thousands of honest and hard-working men are to be deprived of light, of water, of the opportunity to work and to earn a livelihood because the law is to be enforced in the case of Patrick Quinlan.

Could anarchy itself, with incidental bomb and routine riot, go further? This is neither the assertion of the dignity nor the right of labor. This is nothing less than a declaration of war upon all law, upon the whole power, work, and machinery of social and political existence. The members of the Industrial Workers of the World proclaim thus that for them there is no law. They reserve to themselves the right to incite to violence, and if society seeks to protect itself, then society must be punished by more violence.

It is perhaps pure accident that the news from Paterson falls in with dispatches from another New Jersey town which report the attack of armed rioters upon those charged with protecting the property of another corporation. But the relation of the incidents at Paterson and Wharton can not be mistaken. The right to destroy, to paralyze, to terrorize is asserted by workers at one place, by rioters at the other, but the principle at stake in each is unmistakable.

Can labor protect itself from this abuse? Can the honest and the industrious workman protect himself from the influence and the leadership of such men as Quinlan? Certainly there must be thousands of workingmen in Paterson alone who stand aghast at the attempt of a few self-seeking and utterly selfish men to make use of the credulity and ignorance of the least intelligent of the working class to discredit the whole body while seeking their own discreditable ends.

I will not detain the Senate in reading any more of this editorial, but I have one that I want to read that was published in the Washington Post this morning. It is headed "The red flag at Paterson":

Organized outlawry's declaration of war to the bitter end at Paterson, N. J., with to-morrow fixed upon to usher in an industrial and political upheaval at that center of industry, ought to be met at the start by a counterstrike that would end the crisis. With the foes of our flag and our institutions rapidly forcing an issue of their own making, why longer temporize with the men who all along have boldly proclaimed their purpose ultimately to bring about just such conditions as now confront the authorities at Paterson?

The culmination of the socialist conspiracy probably has been reached sooner than expected. The leadership had not anticipated resistance so slight as was met at Lawrence, Salem, Schenectady, Passaic, Akron, Columbus, San Diego, and many other points where an aberration of public sentiment strengthened the hand of violence in forcing concessions. Strikes were ended before a hopeless deadlock could be contrived, and the lawless leadership sought a new field of activity. The West Virginia mine strike at one time had some of the features of an ideal situation, but martial law supplied a solution of that ugly problem, the processes and penalties of civil law having proved inadequate to deal with the machinations of the imported and more malignant type of disturbers.

The use of the more effective weapon against outlawry is decried by those Americans who have yet to comprehend that Americanism and socialism have nothing in common, and that their standards are so wholly incompatible that one or the other must give way. No people can pay homage to two flags any more than they can obey two masters, for it amounts to the same thing. Therefore the climax at Paterson, divested of incidentals, is resolved into the vital question whether the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of peace and order, or the red flag, the emblem of revolution, shall prevail.

If the New Jersey authorities are as alive as their West Virginia brethren to the old-fashioned doctrine that it is permissible to fight the devil with fire, the threat to call a general strike and wipe out Paterson, in an attempt to keep the leaders out of jail, will not carry far.

If the governor of Ohio and the governor of New Jersey would take a lesson from the governor of West Virginia concerning those regions where strife has prevailed and where insurrection in fact exists in those States and issue their martial-law orders, there would be peace in the great city in the valley of the Ohio, as well as in that industrial center in New Jersey.

Appeal has been made in behalf of the striking workmen in West Virginia that they have been mistreated. That is a statement that has been repeatedly made and that I have a number of times alluded to. The name of "Mother Jones" has been brought into the controversy. Well, I have no fight with "Mother Jones." I am sorry that she feels aggrieved. If half the stories they tell about her in West Virginia in reference to this and other strikes there are true, she has certainly been—whatever else she may be; grand and good and a friend of the miners she may be—but she has certainly been inciting riot and urging insurrection. She does not deny it. She is the grandmother of them all; she takes pride in it; she is an expert; she is a good talker; she is effective in speaking to great audiences; naturally, she has influence with them. I do not know how it may be in your locality, but in mine for a man on the public hustings, or a woman either, to incite people to violence, to insurrection, is a crime; and anyone—man, woman, or child—who resorts to that is liable to arrest. Mother Jones was arrested. She certainly was. Neither does she deny that. She was tried, yes; she was convicted, doubtless—although she is here now looking down from the galleries, as she has a right to do; it is perfectly proper—but I see no reason why West Virginia should be criticized for that or why the other people taken in insurrection should be criticized for being politely requested to behave themselves and to attend to their own affairs.

That great section of West Virginia where this trouble existed is in peace to-day; the miners are back at work; most of the grievances that they had have been adjusted; it is all over. What do you want to stir it up again for? Why does our dear old "Mother Jones" want to stir it up again? Who is dissatisfied? The people who live there, the officers of that State, are going to make that section one of the greatest industrial developments in that or in any other State. God Almighty has provided that wonderful wealth, and it will be protected, and it will be saved for "Mother Jones" and for all the rest of the people there, whether strikers, rioters, or what not; it will be protected for that purpose; and I hope that she and others will go back and that she will live long years yet to enjoy the land that we are going to save for her.

There never would have been any of this disturbance there but for the conduct and the character of the men who have been alluded to in the editorials that I have quoted. They are the people who are always talking about human liberty, always talking about the rights of labor, but never intimating that the other people in the locality have any rights; always setting up, as has been done here to-day, these beautiful, glittering generalities about "the suffering people"; and yet if it were not for the people that I have described, if it were not for those who have systematically organized these controversies for the purpose of producing results that could not and would not have been brought about but for their sinister designs. These men who preach so grandly, who appear so pleasant in their arguments, who are upholding the rights and the dignity of labor, the men whom these editorials truthfully depict, who, while they talk so glibly, nevertheless represent a cause and advocate a principle not represented or advocated by honest labor—a cause that "like whited sepulchers, seems outwardly fair, but that inwardly is full of dead men's bones."

I also have affidavits, telegrams, newspaper clippings, but I am not going to offer them; it is not necessary. It would simply add fuel to the flame; it would simply produce confusion in a locality where the dove of peace now is, and it would bring into the limelight and subject to persecution those who are now free from trouble. No good can come of it. If on the facts now before the Senate and the law applicable thereto the Senate concludes that it should resolve itself into a grand jury and send for witnesses I shall have nothing more to say. The only interest that I have, the deep interest that I have, the earnestness that I have, is for the good, the peace, and the happiness not only of my own State, but of all the States of the Union.

I want the Government at Washington to still live—and it will. I want the Constitution of our fathers to be still respected—and it will be. The people are tiring. Men who a short time since looked at least without alarm and rather indulgently on the situation that is found in a number of places to-day are now alarmed—are aroused. They are asking for peace—peace, quietly to be had, if possible; but peace at any cost. The governments of all lands are in trouble, and commotion prevails through all the world, which, it seems, is involved in confusion and strife. No other land is threatened more than this, and still the men who live in all over-sea lands are turning their eyes hitherward.

The Government of the United States is the beacon light of civilization and the hope of all other peoples. It is a Nation built on suffering; it is a Nation founded by men who, fleeing from persecution, sought the then wilderness here and made it what it is to-day—the hope of the world, the pride of civilization. It is the Government had in mind by the barons when they struggled at Runnymede. It is the kind of Government for which John Hampden died; it is the Government that Sydney longed for; it is the Government that our ancestors strove for and laid the foundation of; it is the Government that the mothers of the Colonies, grand old mothers of Israel, gave all that they had to give, the children of their love, to help establish; it is the Government that Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison helped to organize; the Government that the signers of the Declaration and the makers of the Constitution, the fathers of the Republic, established for us, those who now pass before us in phantom form; it is the Government that was saved to us not only by the courage of our soldiery, but by the will of a man. We are in no trouble with our military officials, nor have we ever been; we have had great generals, as great as any land or any era of time has ever produced, yet no one has ever intimated imperialism, ever thought of a dictatorship, or dreamed of a crown.

No one yet, governor or President, has ever attempted maliciously to override the law or to deprive men of their privileges, as has been intimated here may be done. To intimate that any danger might arise from the military forces of the Nation is a reflection upon the officers of the Army and the soldiery of the country. I want to say that the fame of the American soldier is a jewel of inestimable value to this Nation. I care not where that fame was won; I care not whether it was in the early history of the Colonies, or during the Revolution, or on the plains of Mexico—here, there, or anywhere—whether it was with the giant soldier of the century, Grant, when he seized the tiger of rebellion by the throat and strangled it in the jungles of the Wilderness; whether it was with Lee, wonderful chieftain, when he led his matchless legions over the Potomac and fought his last great battle at Gettysburg. It makes no difference. Was it with Sherman when he made his wonderful march to the sea, or was it with that brilliant genius of the war, Stonewall Jackson, or was it on other fields of heroic strife and sublime death? No difference. The fame they won we are all entitled to share in; it is our common heritage. They were not soldiers who usurped a place to which they were not entitled; they were not soldiers who played the despot or the dictator. When the war ended they all went back to their quiet avocations of peace, to the usual struggles of life. So it is we fear no usurpation and we have no dread of the establishment of a despotism, of the destruction of our liberties, of the death of our Republic.

I once stood before that wonderful man to whom I alluded a moment ago. I heard him speak of the dire condition that confronted him and the Nation. We must admit to-day that he did things which were then questioned, and which men on this side and on the other side of this Chamber said were not exactly constitutional, but he thought they were necessary. With Old Glory being trailed in the dust and an effort being made to float a new emblem in the land, with riot and insurrection rampant, he thought he could find a way in the Constitution to save the Nation. He did so; and there are but few, if any, who to-day say he erred. In that darkest hour of the country, dark also to me personally, he demonstrated the power of the Commander in Chief, the necessities of resorting to the usages of war. I lived south of Mason and Dixon's line; I was a Virginian born; I did not see the lines of my duty as some of my boyhood friends did, so I wore the blue, and it was my misfortune to be called a traitor to my State, because I was loyal to the flag of the Union. I have always maintained that I was right. When the vicissitudes of war threw me into a land that did not agree with me my situation was far from being comfortable. My home was for some time simply a prison cell. But the great man of whom I have been speaking, by the power of his great office, which he never failed to exercise, opened the doors of Libby and brought me home to freedom.

I stood before him and thanked him, and heard him tell of some of the incidents that had transpired since I had been sojourning in the Southland. I then learned from him lessons that deeply impressed me, that have always been with me. He was a wonderful man. He was a man among men; a martyr among martyrs; a statesman among statesmen; a hero among heroes; a President among Presidents; he was God's grandest gift of a man to men—Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, when this discussion began I thought it was with reference to the disturbances at Paint Creek, W. Va.; but by some strange alchemy, I hardly know what, it seems to have been transferred to New Jersey.

I feel that the Senator's advice regarding martial law and other methods of governing our strikes in New Jersey and Ohio is utterly gratuitous; and I say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that he need wear no crape for the Commonwealth of New Jersey. We are able to take care of ourselves and to allay the disturbances that may occur there.

The Senator, in his remarks, used the words "if I should put my foot in New Jersey," or "I will put my foot in New Jersey." I know he is incapable of a wrong, but should he put his foot, or both feet, in New Jersey, and by the sheerest accident commit a wrong against the laws of our Commonwealth, I will guarantee to him at least not a trial by court-martial but a trial by a jury of his peers in that Commonwealth.

The Senator refers to the men who consulted with, who discussed with, and who may have urged upon the strikers of West Virginia their wrongs, as being not coworkers but outsiders. I ask in all fairness and reason, Mr. President, what were the other men, the so-called defenders? Were they outsiders or were they insiders? They certainly were outsiders in the strictest sense of the term. They had no claim to a right there; they were worse than outsiders. They were a band of adventurers, a band of blacklegs, and, as a rule, ex-convicts, who sought to shoot down for pay, for money, the miners in West Virginia.

I realize the discomforts that the Senator from West Virginia has on his hands, and, God knows, I sympathize with him. If his State were contiguous territory I would make a proposition to annex it to New Jersey, and give you an opportunity to know what real constitutional law and constitutional blessings might be. There is only one thing that would stick in my crop about annexing West Virginia, and that is its lawless and unconstitutional origin.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the able legal argument presented by the learned ex-judge, the distinguished junior Senator from West Virginia.

But, in my judgment, there is something more vital at issue here than is involved in a discussion of the legal aspect of the case, as presented by the Senator. One is reminded of the advice of the professor of law to his students, when he said: "When you think the law is on your side, talk the law, and when you think the facts are on your side, talk the facts."

While I do not concede the correctness of the legal position of the learned Senator, he has largely evaded a statement of the facts and conditions as they existed in the State of West Virginia. It is not simply a question as to whether or not martial law was legally declared in the State of West Virginia by the governor of that State, but the vital question which demands our investigation, and which I believe we have a right to investigate, is, What was done—what wrongful acts, if any, were committed under the administration of the martial law, as declared in that State?

This resolution should be passed in the interest of the people generally, and in the interest of the people of West Virginia in particular. Many people throughout this land are demanding the investigation. Like the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I have numerous telegrams and letters demanding that an investigation be made, and asking that I support the resolution. I presume most of the Senators have similar requests. The matter, therefore, has attained national importance; and the Nation, through the Senate, is required to act.

It is charged that sacred constitutional rights of American citizens have been or were denied in a section of the State of West Virginia. The citizens of West Virginia are also citizens of the United States, and are entitled to the fullest protection of all the laws of the land. Gross outrages of oppression pressed to the very extreme, resulting in some instances even in murder and manslaughter and indignities and iniquities equaled only by the lawlessness in Mexico, are reported to have occurred in this territory. It is said that so common were these occurrences that human life was really worthless in that military zone.

If these charges are true, there is a remedy, and other remedies will appear. If they are not true, the people of West Virginia more than any other people in the land should be interested in establishing that fact. The case has gone too far to be dismissed by simply filing a general denial or to be determined by the decision of a court on some abstract question of law applied to an entirely different state of facts.

When the Constitution of the United States was framed, Patrick Henry argued for 24 long days to have contained within that document the provisions of the Bill of Rights. Many of the leading men of that day argued that this was unnecessary; that they were contemplated by and included in the general terms of the Constitution. But Henry argued and insisted that they should be enumerated; and after this long struggle it resulted in including those vital principles in the 10 amendments commonly referred to as the "Bill of Rights." Experience has taught us that Henry was right in demanding that these vital principles should be included within the document itself, that they might be understood by every citizen, lawyer and layman alike, and that they might not be misconstrued by any court.

Article 6 of these amendments provides that one accused of crime shall have the right to a speedy and public trial by a jury, fair and impartial, from the district in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, and that he shall be advised of the charge against him and the full character and nature of it, and shall be confronted by the witnesses who testify against him.

Mr. President, the safety and perpetuity of our Government rests largely upon this provision. It is such principles, forming the very foundation upon which the governmental structure rests, that are involved here. It matters not about the politics of the people who claim to have been wronged by a violation of their constitutional rights, nor that they may be poor and common laborers, pitted against wealthy and more fortunate employers. The Constitution is no respecter of persons. If they are poor and helpless, this fact makes it all the more important that the Government should lend its strong arms in protecting them in their distress.

All honest labor is honorable. We often give too much credit to the general in the Army, instead of to the rank and file. While the general is entitled to great consideration for his ability to plan and to carry his plans into execution, without the rank and file his efforts would be fruitless. Both are entitled to equal credit for the success of any battle.

So it is with the business affairs of life. The manager of a railroad or of a mining or other industrial enterprise is entitled to credit for his ability to organize and to carry forward the work. But the common laborer, the trackman, the fireman, and the engineer should not be overlooked; for if each performs with efficiency his individual task all are entitled to equal credit for the final success of the enterprise.

These poor, common laborers—miners, as they have been referred to—go down into the ground on their hands and knees and bring to the surface and lay at the feet of their employers wealth that gives to them pleasure and prosperity. These common laborers are also entitled to the equal and full protection of the law with their employers, which this resolution seeks to give.

This investigation certainly can do no harm, and it may result in the greatest good. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, before submitting a few remarks on this question I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California presents an amendment to the pending resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the pending resolution by striking out the portion of it commencing with line 22, on page 3, and extending down to and including line 10, on page 4, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

> The conditions under which employees in the mines are required to work, wages paid, hours of labor, kind of contract under which labor is performed, the system of lighting, ventilation, and sanitation employed in such mines, and the efficiency thereof, and any other facts affecting the interest and well-being of such employees.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask where that is to be inserted.

Mr. WORKS. It commences with line 22, on page 3, and extends to line 10, on page 4.

Mr. President, we have spent a good many days here in discussing the power and jurisdiction of the governor of West Virginia in dealing with this question. The resolution invites just that kind of discussion, and, in my judgment, it falls far short of calling for such an investigation as ought to be made in a case of this kind.

Let me call attention, briefly, to the effect of the resolution as it is now before the Senate. The committee is directed to ascertain—

First. Whether or not any system of peonage is maintained in said coal fields.

Second. Whether or not access to post offices is prevented; and if so, by whom.

Third. Whether or not the immigration laws of this country are being violated in the West Virginia coal fields; and if so, by whom.

Fourth. If any or all of those conditions exist, the causes leading up to such conditions.

Fifth. Whether or not the Commissioner of Labor or any other official or officials of the Government can be of service in adjusting such strike.

Mr. KERN. That has been stricken out.

Mr. WORKS. Very well.

Sixth. Whether or not parties are being convicted and punished in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

It has been said by the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] that as to the first two of these facts that are to be ascertained by the committee, they have been thoroughly investigated by the proper governmental authorities. But whether that be so or not, Mr. President, I myself am much more interested in going back behind this strike and ascertaining, if we can, what causes led up to it.

We do not need any investigation to determine what the governor of the State has done. The facts respecting that matter have been broadly admitted here. The order that he made is before the Senate. The proceedings that took place under that order have been admitted on both sides. There is no question at all about it. There is no necessity for any investigation to ascertain the facts with respect to that particular matter.

Whether or not the order that was issued by the governor of West Virginia declaring martial law was in violation of the Constitution of the United States is a pure question of law that arises upon the face of the order itself. It is not necessary to investigate that question, and if the Senate of the United States desires to declare itself upon that question it has before it every fact necessary to bring about that result.

Whether or not access to post offices is prevented, and, if so, by whom, is a matter that might very properly be investigated; but it could be done under the general provision that I am seeking to insert in this resolution.

My objection to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana is that it is not broad enough; that it does not cover what ought to be reached in an investigation of this sort; in other words, that it limits it to certain specific things that, in my judgment, really need no investigation at all. As I have said, we have before us every fact that will enable us to act intelligently upon those questions without going to the expense of an investigation.

So far as I am individually concerned, I am greatly interested in determining just how these mines are operated in the State of West Virginia. I want to know what ground of complaint the employees in these mines have. I want to know whether they are being properly treated, whether the mines are being ventilated and lighted as they should be, whether proper sanitary conditions are maintained, and the kind of contracts that have been made by which these men are bound to their work.

For that reason I have submitted this amendment; and to show the interest that I have in this question I call the attention of the Senate to a bill that was introduced by me at the present session of Congress providing for the inspection and regulation of coal mines. That bill went to the Committee on Mines and Mining. These same coal operators in the State of West Virginia gave notice that they desired to be heard before any bill of this kind should be passed. I desire that the bill may be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. Senate bill 593, Sixty-third Congress, first session, introduced by Senator WORKS April 9, 1913:

A bill (S. 593) providing for the inspection and regulation of coal mines.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to make and enforce such rules, regulations, and requirements for the management, control, and operation of all coal mines and mining companies engaged in producing, mining, or extracting coal in the Territories or possessions of the United States, or in any State, to be transported to, used, or sold in more than one State, as are or may be necessary for the protection, preservation, and conservation of the lives and health of persons employed in or about any such mines or mining property, and to determine what safety devices and appliances are necessary and proper to be used for such purposes, and to enforce and compel their use in and about such mines.

SEC. 2. That the said Secretary shall from time to time ascertain and determine what are the most modern methods of managing, operating, and ventilating mines, and the most approved and efficient devices and safety appliances for the proper management of such mines, and for the preservation, protection, and conservation of the bodies, lives, and health of mine workers and employees, and compel the use of such safety devices and appliances in such mines.

SEC. 3. That the said Secretary may cooperate and act in conjunction with any State mining bureau or commission, or other body or officer authorized to act in the matter of governing or regulating the operation of mines in such State, in furtherance of the objects and purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. That in the performance of his duties as provided in this act the said Secretary is authorized and empowered to enter into and examine such mines, at such times as he may desire, either in person or by any officer or employee in his department, and to inspect and examine such mines and determine whether they are complying with the rules, regulations, and orders made by him respecting the operation and management thereof, and to ascertain what changes of operation or management are necessary to insure the better safety of the employees in and about such mines; and the owners or lessees of such mines or mining properties and their officers and agents shall permit such entry upon and inspection and investigation of the condition of the mine, and shall afford every facility therefor. Any such owner or lessee, or his employee, agent, or officer thereof, who shall refuse or prevent any such entry, examination, or investigation, or fail or refuse to afford proper facilities therefor, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, to which may be added imprisonment for not exceeding six months.

SEC. 5. That when the said Secretary shall make any order respecting the management or operation of any mine or the use or disuse of any device, apparatus, or appliance in the operation thereof, the owner or lessee of such mine shall comply with such order within a time to be fixed by said Secretary. If such owner or lessee of any such mine, or any officer or agent of such owner or lessee, shall fail or refuse to comply with any such order he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, to which may be added imprisonment for not exceeding six months, and each day that he shall so fail or refuse shall be a separate offense, and the said Secretary may, in his discretion, require that such mine be closed and not operated until such order is complied with, and may enforce such requirement by proper legal proceeding if not complied with.

SEC. 6. That the said Secretary may employ such expert or other help as may be necessary to carry this act into effect, the expense thereof to be paid out of moneys appropriated for that purpose, as herein provided.

SEC. 7. That the said Secretary shall have power to employ, during his pleasure, such officers, experts, engineers, statisticians, inspectors, clerks, and employees as may be necessary to enable him to perform promptly and efficiently the duties imposed upon him by this act, to be paid out of funds to be appropriated for that purpose.

SEC. 8. That a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $50,000.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I hope that, having brought this bill to the attention of the Senate, it may at an early day receive consideration at the hands of the Committee on Mines and Mining. We have for several days practically had the State of West Virginia and its courts on trial. It is a serious undertaking on the part of the Senate of the United States. There is, to my mind, a very serious question as to its propriety. The State of West Virginia and its officers are responsible for what has been done in that State. I have no doubt but that the governor has the right to declare martial law. My good friend, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], when I made that statement the other day, said that that simply meant the destruction of free government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from California will look at the RECORD, he will see that the Senator from Idaho did not take issue with the proposition that the governor had the right to declare martial law. I took issue with the proposition that after he declared martial law there was no limit to his authority.

Mr. WORKS. Then the Senator from Idaho entirely misunderstood what I said with respect to it. His rather sensational and startling statement with respect to the effect of that sort of authority being vested in the governor of a State was without foundation. If the governor of the State of West Virginia, in whom that power is vested, has been guilty of malfeasance in office, he is responsible, just like any other officer. The power to do just that thing in protecting life and property within a State must be vested somewhere, and in whom better than in the governor of the State? What right has the Senate of the United States to question the authority of the governor of a State within his jurisdiction?

I am free to confess that, in my judgment, the governor of West Virginia went beyond his authority in the order that he promulgated. He undertook in that order to determine the jurisdiction of the commissioners appointed by him. I think he had no such authority, and so far as that portion of the order is concerned I should regard it as a nullity. When the military court was established the law fixed its jurisdiction and its powers, and the governor could not by a proclamation issued by him extend or limit that authority.

But as I said in the beginning, Mr. President, my judgment is that it is a good deal more important, in the interest of this country of ours, and a great deal more important to the laboring men of this country, that we should inquire into the causes which have brought about these disturbances, not only in the State of West Virginia but elsewhere. We must get back of the mere conduct of the courts of West Virginia or its governor and ascertain what are the real conditions in the State of West Virginia if we are going to act intelligently and accomplish results.

That is what I shall be glad to see done under this resolution, and for that reason I have offered this amendment. It gives the committee the power to go back of the strike to ascertain not only before but after and at the present time what the conditions are which are prevailing in those mines.

There must have been something that was unjust that brought about a strike of that kind. Men do not generally go to extremes like that without some kind of a just provocation. Therefore what I want to know is what it was that brought this contention, the insurrection, the strike, and the bloodshed that followed it.

I understand, Mr. President, it is understood that this resolution shall go to the Committee on Education and Labor; and I ask, if that be so, that the amendment I have proposed be also referred to that committee for its consideration. I do not want now to take up the time of the Senate, as that agreement seems to have been reached.

Mr. KERN. It is the understanding that the resolution with the amendments offered may be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. It is also the understanding that that committee is to report out the resolution in a few days.

Mr. WORKS. I ask the Senator from Indiana if the amendment I have offered can be referred with the resolution?

Mr. KERN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some further remarks upon the resolution, but in view of the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Indiana that it will go to the committee I shall not ask the indulgence of the Senate to discuss it until it comes out of committee, and perhaps not at all. That will depend upon how it comes out and what course it takes after it comes out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to refer the resolution and the amendments to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. KERN. That includes the resolution and its amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It includes the resolution and the amendments. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to refer.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. REED. Is any time fixed in the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular hour is 12 o'clock.

Mr. REED. To-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To-morrow. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 20, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

THE JOURNAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think there ought to be a quorum present to hear the Journal read, and I make the point that there is no quorum here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bacon	Hollis	Overman	Stephenson
Bankhead	Hughes	Page	Stone
Bradley	Jackson	Penrose	Sutherland
Brady	James	Perkins	Swanson
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Thomas
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Ransdell	Thompson
Catron	Jones	Reed	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Root	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Saulsbury	Townsend
Colt	La Follette	Sheppard	Vardaman
Crawford	Lea	Sherman	Walsh
Cummins	Lippitt	Shields	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Shively	Weeks
Fall	McLean	Simmons	Williams
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Goff	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BRYAN] is unable to be present on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators having responded to the roll call, a quorum is present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In noticing the Journal as read by the Secretary there seems to be an inaccuracy in stating the title of Senate bill 60, which was reported by myself from the Committee on Public Lands. It appears in the Journal as a bill "to provide for agricultural entry of coal lands." The bill really is one "to provide for agricultural entry of oil lands."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Journal will be corrected, and if there are no more corrections the Journal will stand approved as read and corrected.

GOVERNMENT EXPRESSAGE ON LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I discover from the RECORD that on yesterday the Vice President laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a report in response to resolution 49, which I introduced some time ago, and that the report was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed. I did not know until I saw the RECORD that the report had come to the Senate.

I desire very much, having introduced the resolution and given some consideration to the subject, to have the report lie on the table until I can examine it. I ask unanimous consent that it be recalled from the Committee on Public Lands and that it lie on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report from the Committee on Public Lands and to have the same lie on the table until he can examine it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not objecting to its going to that committee at the proper time, but I should like to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. SMOOT. What report is it, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It relates to the charge of express companies for the transportation of property of the United States over lines of railway companies which received grants of land from the Government. I offered the resolution some time ago and it was passed by the Senate, and this is the response to it, which I have not had an opportunity to see.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the report was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the Senator wants to have it lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is all; to let it lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be withdrawn from the Committee on Public Lands and it will lie on the table for further action.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4234. An act providing certain legislation for the Panama-California Exposition, to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915;

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1913; and

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the International Conference on Education.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have two protests signed by 350 overseers and voting operatives in the Lorraine Mills, of Westerly, R. I. I ask that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Finance and that the body of one of them be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorials were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body of one of them was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TARIFF PROTEST.

To Members of the House and Senate assembled in Congress at Washington:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, overseers and voting operatives in the Lorraine Mills, of Westerly, R. I., employing 350 hands in normal times, hereby protest most earnestly against the wool and cotton schedules in the pending tariff bill and ask your honorable body to increase the rates of duty applying to raw material, yarns, and cloth, so that we may maintain our present wage scale in competition with foreign manufacturers of textiles.

Mr. CUMMINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Spirit Lake, Le Mars, Lewis, Essex, Muscatine, Lime Springs, Marshalltown, Fort Dodge, Boone, Malcom, Newton, Centerville, Bradgate, Lansing, Waterloo, Burlington, Turin, Fort Madison, Mason City, Ottumwa, Clear Lake, Oelwein, Dubuque, Luverne, Webster City, Estherville, Davenport, Sioux City, Newell, Cresco, Winterset, Churchville, Elgin, Ames, Denison, Sutherland, Slater, Keokuk, Chariton, Clinton, Dyersville, and Hartley, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have had numerous communications from workingmen in my State protesting against the wood schedule of the tariff bill now under consideration. I ask unanimous consent that one letter may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The letter was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

FRANKLIN LOCAL NO. 31,
INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF PAPER MAKERS.

William White, president; George Rayner, vice president; Silas Glines, financial secretary; Charles Tousignant, treasurer; Archie T. Mahan, corresponding secretary.

Whereas the paper-making industry in the United States employs a large number of wage earners, a fair proportion of whom are industrious and own their own homes; and

Whereas through the efforts of organized labor the hours of labor have been reduced in a large number of mills throughout the United States to an eight-hour day; and

Whereas the endeavor of the organization is to try and secure a uniform eight-hour day throughout the entire country; and

Whereas the bill now before the United States Congress to remove the duty from the importation of paper would work a grave injustice to the employees engaged in the paper-making industry and would, without doubt, result in transferring a large amount of this business to a foreign country, and would compel the wage earners to leave the country to follow their trade and sacrifice their citizenship and homes; and

Whereas if the duty is removed from paper no one would be benefited, with the exception of the publishers, as the readers of the paper will receive no reduction in tariff on print paper: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon our respective Congressman and Senators to use their influence and vote against the removal of tariff from the importation of paper; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Congressman and Senators, also a copy be forwarded to our international president, with request that he bring the matter before the Members of the Congress and United States Senate and President of the United States.

[SEAL.] ARCHIE T. MAHAN,
Secretary Franklin Falls (N. H.) Lodge.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of W. W. King, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Sherman Wiggins and Caryl J. Dodds, of Lawrence, Kans.; R. H. Williams, of Towanda, Pa.; and G. G. Roberts, of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON. I present a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 17.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the Congress did, on the 25th day of June, 1910, enact a law entitled "An act to provide for the care and support of insane persons in the Territory of Alaska"; and

Whereas the buildings provided for in said act to be built at Fairbanks and Nome have not been constructed for the reason, as stated by the governor of Alaska, given upon the advice of the Attorney General, that no provision was made in said act for the purchase of sites upon which to construct such buildings, and that the Government could not accept the donation of sites; and

Whereas all insane persons in the fourth and second judicial divisions are forced to remain in the United States jails, awaiting a convenient time for their transportation; and

Whereas the sum of $4,000 will purchase suitable sites in the towns of Fairbanks and Nome for the hospitals provided for in said act: Now, therefore,

We, your memorialists, do most earnest and respectfully request that an appropriation be made in the sum of $4,000 to purchase suitable sites for the construction of detention hospitals at Fairbanks and Nome, as provided in the act of Congress of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for the care and support of insane persons in the Territory of Alaska."

And we, your memorialists, will ever pray.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and complete copy of senate joint memorial No. 17 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 6th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN, Secretary of Alaska.

Mr. NELSON. I present a memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 31.

To the honorable the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, do respectfully submit the following to your kind consideration:

That the Alaska Road Commission, since its creation under the act of Congress approved January 27, 1905, has constructed approximately 900 miles of wagon road and many hundreds of miles of sled roads and trails in all sections of the Territory of Alaska.

That such construction has resulted in great benefit to the country and has aided more than any other instrumentality in developing the various sections of our Territory.

That these roads are not merely of local importance, but they form a well-devised system of highways calculated to serve the entire Territory.

That the expenses incurred in such road and trail building are defrayed by an annual appropriation made by the honorable the Congress of the United States and by a portion of what is known as the "Alaska fund." The amount appropriated by the honorable the Congress of the United States for this year amounts to $155,000, fifty-five thousand of which, or so much thereof as may be required, is to be expended in the construction of a dam to protect the property of the Government near the town of Valdez from destruction by near-by glaciers; that the average amount per annum available from the Alaska funds amounts to $137,000, the total amount of which moneys is barely sufficient to keep the roads constructed in repair.

In view of these facts we respectfully request that Congress increase its annual appropriation for the construction and maintenance of roads, so that a sufficient amount thereof may be set aside for further construction and extension of the road system now laid out.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. WEEKS presented memorials of the Merchants' Association of North Adams, Mass., remonstrating against the rates of duty relating to cotton yarns, cotton goods, and cotton manufactures, also against the reduction of the present duty on boots and shoes, and the rates in the woolen schedule of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution adopted by the local directors of the National Business League of America, of Illinois, requesting that they be given opportunity to submit their arguments against the objectionable administrative features of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KERN presented a telegram in the nature of a resolution adopted at a meeting of 6,000 citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring an investigation by the Senate of the labor situation in the coal fields of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a resolution signed by the city chairman of the Socialist Party of Shelbyville, Ind., and a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 617, United Mine Workers of America, of Barnesboro, Pa., expressing thanks for the interest shown to secure justice for the laborers in the coal fields of West Virginia, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 832) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 47) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 833. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 48); and

S. 834. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 49).

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill

(S. 485) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and I submit a report (No. 46) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] to the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a very large part of the bill is a reenactment of the law as it now stands. The part which is new simply provides an additional district judge for the southern district of California.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that part be read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Very well, let that part be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. In each of the districts described in chapter 5 there shall be a court called a district court, for which there shall be appointed one judge, to be called a district judge, except that in the northern district of California, the southern district of California, the northern district of Illinois, the district of Maryland, the district of Minnesota, the district of Nebraska the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the northern and southern districts of Ohio, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington, there shall be an additional district judge in each, and in the southern district of New York three additional district judges."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Unless there is some satisfactory explanation made in regard to the bill, I shall object to its present consideration. I do not understand why there is need at this time for so many district judges on the Pacific coast.

Mr. WORKS. I know from my own personal knowledge that there is a very urgent need of an additional district judge in that particular district.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. How many district judges has the State of California at this time?

Mr. WORKS. We have two, one of them in the southern and the other in the northern district. They are 500 miles apart and are kept more than busy. As I have said, I know from my own personal knowledge of the necessity for an additional district judge at that point.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What creates the necessity for more litigation there than at other places in the country with a similar population?

Mr. WORKS. There is a great deal more I think. I believe the Senator has some conception of the increase of population and the increase of business in southern California in the last 10 years. It is utterly impossible for one judge to render the services that are necessary. I know that of my own knowledge.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let me ask the Senator if there is a temporary congestion of the docket, or does the necessity arise from conditions that are likely to continue?

Mr. WORKS. The condition is not temporary; it is permanent. In fact, we should have had an additional judge there five years ago.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What tangible, definite showing was made in support of the proposition outside of the statement the Senator makes upon the authority of other people?

Mr. WORKS. The matter was referred by the Judiciary Committee to the Attorney General to obtain the necessary information, and letters have been received showing what the necessities are. If the Senator desires, I should be glad to have those letters read.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am willing to concede much to the judgment of the Senator from California, because there is no Senator on this floor whom I respect more highly than I do him, but the temptation to comply with the requests of lawyers for additional judges is so great that it is difficult to resist it. I happen to know that two district judges can do a lot of business if they undertake to do it, are willing to do it, and are able to do it by reason of health and other qualifications.

Mr. WORKS. I will say unhesitatingly, Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Arkansas, that there is an absolute and urgent necessity for the appointment of this judge.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Why in the southern district more than in the northern district? I assume there are more people, and that, therefore, there ought to be more litigation, in the northern part of the State, which includes San Francisco, than in the southern part.

Mr. WORKS. There were two district judges in the northern district of the State; but there is a vacancy in that district now.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then, if the additional judge is authorized there will be four district judges in the State.

Mr. WORKS. We will have three——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Two now in commission and one vacancy, and if this additional judge is created it will be the fourth one?

Mr. WORKS. It will be the fourth one.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think I will object to the consideration of the bill for the present, and I will look into the matter a little bit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. WORKS subsequently said: Mr. President, in view of the objection made to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], I ask that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order is made.

The report submitted this day by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 46, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany S. 485:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 485) to amend section 1 of the Judicial Code so as to provide for an additional district judge for the southern district of California, having had the same under consideration, recommend that the bill do pass.

The necessity for this legislation is apparent from the inclosed communications from the Attorney General and certain other correspondence, all herewith submitted and made part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1913.

Hon. CHARLES A. CULBERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

SIR: This department is in receipt of your communication dated the 14th ultimo, inclosing S. 485 entitled "A bill to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," signed by the assistant clerk of said committee.

In response to your request for such information as is available in this department with respect to the volume of business, civil and criminal, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, the increase thereof, if any, in recent years, and such other data as will tend to show the need or lack of need of the additional judge proposed, the following is respectfully submitted:

Upon receipt of your communication, letters were written to the United States district judge, the United States attorney, and the clerk of the United States district court for said district. Copies of their replies are herewith inclosed.

The clerk of the district court shows the increase of business from year to year, commencing with 1895, up to and including 1912. The letters from the United States district judge and the district attorney show that judges from other districts had to be called in to assist in disposing of the business before the district court for the southern district of California.

The latest census of the United States shows a very remarkable increase in the population of the city of Los Angeles. The population of that city in 1890 was 50,295; in 1900, 102,479; and in 1910, 319,198. Fresno and San Diego, the other places of holding court in said district, show increases of nearly 100 per cent in the 10 years from 1900 to 1910.

For the Attorney General:

JESSE C. ADKINS,
Assistant Attorney General.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 1, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 17th instant (initials and number, J.J.G.–A.G.M., 5–S–11–2), concerning Senate bill No. 485, which provides for an additional United States district judge for the southern district of California, and requesting of me information desired by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate with respect to the volume of business, civil and criminal, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, the increase thereof, if any, in recent years, and such other data as will tend to show the need or lack of need of an additional judge proposed by said Senate bill No. 485.

Pressure of business in the court here since the receipt of your letter has prevented an earlier answer thereto.

The clerk of this court, Mr. William M. Van Dyke, tells me that he will by to-day's mail forward you data gathered from the records of the court, which will indicate the volume of business at different periods since the organization of the court.

On the 2d day of last month I wrote to Senator WORKS on this subject, giving him a brief statement of the situation, and can not now present it better to you than by an extract from that letter, as follows:

"When the question of an additional judge was first agitated, many years ago, I did not look with favor upon the proposition. Some four or five years ago, however, the work here had increased to such an extent that I did approve the movement, and so wrote the Attorney General, as shown by the inclosure. Since then the business of the district has assumed such large proportions that an additional judge is absolutely necessary in order to dispatch it with anything like reasonable promptness. The pressure of this business has become so great that I have been compelled to seek aid from other districts. Judge Rudkin, of Washington, was helping me for several weeks during last November and December, and also during last month. He was called back to his own district, however, last Friday. Judge Bean, from Portland, Oreg., has been engaged in the trial of an important case here since a week ago Monday, and will probably be here two or three weeks longer on that case."

Judge Bean is still engaged on the case above mentioned, but, I understand, will conclude the hearing the latter part of next week.

The occasional assistance of a visiting judge, during the uncertain and limited periods for which the business of his own district will permit him to remain with us, is a mere palliative, and by no means meets the exigencies of the situation created by the fact that the volume of business in this district, which is steadily increasing, requires the constant services of two judges for its prompt dispatch.

The need for another judge in this district is urgent, and I feel that I can not too strongly recommend the passage of a suitable bill for that purpose.

Respectfully,

OLIN WELLBORN,
United States District Judge.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 1, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Under date of April 24, 1913, I have already acknowledged receipt of your letter of April 17, 1913 (initials J. J. G. No. 5 S 11–2), requesting me to furnish certain information desired by the committee as to Senate bill No. 485, which provides for an additional United States district judge for this district.

I have now the honor to furnish the following information, which I trust will be of service to the department and to the committee.

The following table shows the cases, civil, criminal, and in bankruptcy, that have been instituted during each calendar year, beginning with the year 1895, the year of the appointment of the present district judge, the Hon. Olin Wellborn, to and including the year 1912. I have not separated the business of the circuit court from that of the district court, as Judge Wellborn from the time of his appointment down to the abolition of the circuit court attended to almost the entire business of that court as well as to the business of the district court:

Year.	Civil cases.	Criminal cases.	Total civil and criminal.	Bankruptcy cases.	Total of all cases.
1895	36	81	117	.....	117
1896	59	75	134	.....	134
1897	57	64	121	.....	121
1898	103	46	149	57	206
1899	76	45	121	138	259
1900	64	27	91	122	213
1901	46	36	82	111	193
1902	62	47	109	114	223
1903	73	42	115	116	231
1904	69	56	125	144	269
1905	131	55	186	181	367
1906	100	98	198	173	371
1907	111	53	164	151	315
1908	126	117	243	203	446
1909	112	73	185	233	418
1910	115	86	201	249	450
1911	145	131	276	268	544
1912	127	156	283	318	601

For the four months beginning January 1, 1913, and ending April 30, 1913, when this report closes, the new cases have been as follows:

Civil cases begun	66
Criminal cases begun	56
Total civil and criminal	122
Bankruptcy cases begun	103
Total of all cases for four months, 1913	225

While it has seemed to me unnecessary to ascertain and tabulate the number of cases that have been disposed of during all of the years just mentioned, it will be an aid to understanding the needs of this district if I state that in the year 1912 there were 241 civil and criminal cases disposed of, as against 283 begun, and that from January 1 to April 30, 1913, inclusive, there have been 70 civil and criminal cases disposed of, as against 122 begun during the same period.

In this connection it should be stated that during the period last above mentioned, viz, the year 1912 and the first four months of the year 1913, besides and contemporaneously with the court held by Judge Wellborn, the following judges from other districts have, by designation of the senior circuit judge for this circuit, held district court at Los Angeles, viz, from March 12 to March 26, 1912, Judge Van Fleet of the northern district of California; from November 11 to December 13, 1912, Judge Rudkin of the eastern district of Washington; from March 4 to March 28, 1913, Judge Rudkin; from March 20, 1913, until the close of this report Judge Bean of the district of Oregon, who will probably not finish the case he is engaged in trying here until the 8th or 9th of May.

I beg also to call your attention to the fact that in addition to the court held at Los Angeles the district judge for this district is required, by the act of May 29, 1900, and by the act of June 22, 1910, both now incorporated in section 72 of the Judicial Code of the United States, to hold in each year two terms of the court at Fresno and two terms at San Diego.

If further information from this office is desired, I shall, of course, be glad to furnish it.

Respectfully,

W. M. VANDYKE,
Clerk United States District Court,
Southern District of California.

LOS ANGELES, May 2, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On the 28th ultimo I forwarded to you a letter concerning Senate bill 485, responsive to yours of the 17th ultimo (J. J. G. 5 S 11–2), in which you requested of me information concerning the necessity for a new and additional judge in this district.

On the 30th ultimo I wired you in relation to the same matter as follows:

"I wrote you Monday concerning necessity for an additional judge this district, responsive yours 17th instant. Please hold and do not use this letter. Am forwarding to-day another letter in its place."

The letter forwarded you on the 28th ultimo was dictated hurriedly during a noon recess of court and without an opportunity on my part to go over the same after it was typewritten and correct it.

After writing it and before forwarding you the telegram, I read a copy of it carefully and have discovered several inaccuracies therein which demand correction. I have carefully gone over the letter and have redrafted the same and inclose you herewith a corrected copy. If agreeable to you, I would request that you forward to me the original letter sent you on the 28th ultimo.

Respectfully,

A. I. MCCORMICK,
United States Attorney.

LOS ANGELES, April 28, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 17th instant (J. J. G. 5 S 11–2) concerning Senate bill 485, which bill provides for an additional United States district judge for this district, and requesting of me that I furnish the information desired by the committee as far as is within my power. Request is also made for a prompt reply.

I am still engaged in court on the argument on final hearing in the suit of United States of America v. May K. Rindge et al., involving the roads on the Malibu Rancho. All parties concerned in this suit have been working day and night for the purpose of expediting the hearing as much as possible. The Government closed its opening argument some 10 days ago, and the defendants have been occupying the time since, and will not close, according to announcement of their attorneys, for several days. The reply for the Government will require four or five days thereafter. This prevents me from giving to your request contained in your said letter the attention which I believe it deserves.

I had intended going over the entire records of this office for the past 8 or 10 years and preparing an abstract of all the business in which the United States was interested transacted in the courts of this district during that time, showing the great and constant increase thereof. However, Mr. Van Dyke, the clerk of the district court, who is thoroughly familiar with the matter, informs me that he also has received a letter from you substantially similar to the one received by me, and that he is at present engaged in looking up the matter with a view of forwarding to you a general statement showing the immense increase of business from the time of Judge Wellborn's appointment down to date. I have concluded, therefore, to leave that end of it to him and to call to your attention some specific facts and instances which, to my mind, prove conclusively that an additional judge in this district is not only an absolute necessity, but that from a purely financial or business standpoint the Government will be the gainer by the appointment of an additional judge.

In the first place, I think the attention of the committee should be called to the fact that the business transacted by the Federal courts in the southern district of California during late years has not only increased tremendously in volume, but that in no other district in the United States is there any more, if as many, varieties or kinds of Federal causes brought to the attention of the courts. To commence with, we have at our very doors the Pacific Ocean, with several harbors of prominence, and by reason thereof there arises therefrom the numerous questions relating to interstate and international commerce and immigration. In the next place this district is bounded on the south by the international boundary line between Mexico and the United States. This, as you undoubtedly know, gives rise to numerous and important questions involving international commerce, the customs and immigration laws, and also many violations of the neutrality laws existing between this country and Mexico, these last-mentioned cases, as you know, having occupied a considerable portion of the time of this office and the local courts for the past three years. In addition to the above, and by reason of the fact that Mexico adjoins this district on the south, the district court of this district has in the past been compelled to devote a great deal of its time and attention to extradition cases. Experience has shown that this is a convenient and safe asylum for fugitives from the justice of Mexico.

Again there are still a vast amount of public lands of the United States situated within this district and there are at the present time now pending in this district seven suits of the utmost importance, involving portions of these public lands, with values running up into the hundreds of millions of dollars. I refer in this connection to the three suits now pending against the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., involving the title to valuable oil lands in this district, and the three suits known as the withdrawal suits, having for their object the sustaining of the validity of the presidential order of withdrawal of September 27, 1909, and the recovery by the Government of many acres of valuable oil lands affected by said withdrawal order.

There are a vast number of Indian reservations within the southern district of California, and the business of the Government in connection with these Indian reservations and their inhabitants has in the past entailed, and will in the future continue to entail, a great amount of work upon the United States court in this district.

Again, the vast increase of the post-office business, resulting from the increase in population and the use of the mails in connection with new ventures, has been productive of a large amount of work in the Federal courts, especially in connection with the prosecution of criminals for a violation of the postal laws.

All this, together with the ordinary run of business in the Federal courts, it seems to me, will convince anyone of the necessity for more than one Federal judge in a district of the size and magnitude of this one.

You are, of course, aware of the fact that the district court of this district meets at three places. It meets twice each year in Fresno to attend to the business of the northern division; it also meets twice each year in San Diego, and this in addition to the two terms of court here at Los Angeles.

At various times in the past the fact that an important cause has been on trial when the appointed time comes for the court to go from Los Angeles to Fresno has resulted in inconvenience, necessitating either an adjournment and recess of the cause on trial at Los Angeles or the postponement of the opening of the session at Fresno.

In addition to the above, I desire to call your attention to two or three specific instances that have come under my personal observation during the past two years, wherein, by reason of the court being compelled to continue one or more criminal cases for the term on account of the crowded condition of the calendar and the impossibility of trying such criminal cases, the amounts paid by the Government in witness fees and mileage alone would almost of themselves pay the salary of a judge for a year.

It may be appropriate here to state that by the rules of the district court in force for the last seven or eight years the term trial calendar is called only twice each year, to wit, at the beginning of the January term on the second Monday in January and at the beginning of the July term on the second Monday in July. All attorneys interested in any cause at issue, including the United States attorney, are notified to be present at the call of the calendar, and every case at issue is then set down for trial during some day in the term, preference being given to criminal cases. The result has been that for the last three or four years it has become necessary to set several cases for the same day, it being impossible to find a sufficient number of days to allow each case the time required for trial. In the event that each of the three cases set for a certain date is, on that date, ready for trial, the first one in order will go to trial, and in the vast majority of cases will require more time for trial than has been allotted even for the total of the three cases. The result is that two of them must be continued at least until the first one is finished, and then these two will either have to be continued for the term or else the next case in order must necessarily go over and perhaps off the calendar.

The important case of United States v. Ricardo Flores Magon et al., in which the above-named defendant and several of his companions were charged with conspiracy to violate the neutrality laws by organizing a military expedition and enlisting soldiers in this district in the revolution against Mexico, was at the call of the trial calendar in January, 1912, set for trial on April 18, 1912. The criminal case of United States v. Tennant, an important post-office case, in which a former employee was charged with stealing from the mails, had also been set for trial for April 18, 1912. On the last-mentioned date counsel for defendants in the Magon case moved for a continuance, and upon the showing made the Magon case was continued to April 25, 1912. The Tennant case went to trial, and was not finished on April 25. Owing to the importance attached to the neutrality case against Magon et al., both by the department and Mexico, and the fact that the Government witnesses were large in number, and being of nomadic habits were extremely difficult to find and bring together, every effort was used by this office to procure a date for the trial during that term. The court set the trial for June 4 upon the understanding that the case would be shortened as much as possible and that other cases should be disposed of so as to carry no trial over the term. As heretofore stated, a large number of the witnesses in the Magon case whose testimony was absolutely necessary to the Government were impecunious, of nomadic habits, and had been located only with great difficulty. It was therefore necessary to keep them in attendance where they could be constantly watched and accounted for, or the Government would be seriously embarrassed in the presentation of its case. The expense of keeping these witnesses in attendance up to June 4 was approximately $1,400. The case proceeded on June 4 to trial, and the amount paid to witnesses for attendance during the two weeks of the trial was only approximately $450.

At the call of said January trial calendar in January, 1912, the case of United States v. E. C. Redman, in which the defendant was charged with using the mails in a scheme to defraud, was set for trial May 23, 1912. This case was likewise an important one, and a number of witnesses had been subpœnaed, some of them from distant States. Some two or three days previous to the 23d day of May, 1912, it became apparent that the Redman case could not be tried for the reason that the civil suits entitled United States Consolidaed Seeded Raisin Co. v. Dinuba Farmers' Union Packing Co. and 10 other defendants, the whole constituting 10 important civil patent suits which had been waiting many years for final disposition, were on trial on final hearing and then occupied the attention of the court. It was plainly evident that the trial of these Seeded Raisin cases would be likely to continue for some time. With the Magon trial set for June 4 and the Redman trial set for May 23 the court requested the Government to elect whether to continue the Magon trial and allow the Redman case to wait from day to day, to follow the Seeded Raisin cases, or to continue the Redman case for term and try the Magon case on June 4. On account of the difficulties connected with the Magon case, with relation to the securing of witnesses and the international character of the case, the Government concluded to allow the court to continue the Redman case for the term. This was done, and the same was set for trial on September 17, 1912. The expense of bringing witnesses together for the Redman case in May cost the Government approximately $2,260, which, of course, was absolutely lost, because these witnesses were necessarily resubpœnaed for the trial in September following.

On September 17 the Redman case was tried and occupied the attention of the court for seven weeks, during which the expenses of the witnesses were approximately $6,000. This shows that the cost to the Government occasioned by reason of the necessary continuance in May was almost half as much as the entire expense of the seven weeks' trial.

At the call of the July calendar in 1912 the case of United States v. Antonio Feliz et al., in which the defendants were charged with a conspiracy to violate the Chinese-exclusion law, had been set for trial October 8, 1912. On this last-mentioned date the Redman case was still on trial, it occupying the attention of the court for a considerably longer period than was at first anticipated. The Feliz case was continued several times, finally going over to November 26, 1912. The expense of witnesses called and discharged on account of the continuance of the Feliz case was approximately $600.

The condition of the trial calendar and business of the court would undoubtedly have been still more complicated had not Judge Van Fleet, of San Francisco, assisted Judge Wellborn in working off the crowded calendar by trying the case of the United States v. Woo Wai et al., another Chinese conspiracy case, which occupied three weeks for trial during March, 1912, during all of which time Judge Wellborn was himself occupied daily in holding court and disposing of other business.

In addition to the above, Judge Rudkin, of the eastern district of Washington, at the request of Judge Wellborn and by assignment from the senior circuit judge of this circuit, was present in Los Angeles and held court for about a month in November and December, 1912, disposing of numerous cases, while Judge Wellborn continued to hold his court at the same time.

In March, 1913, Judge Rudkin again held court at Los Angeles, during which time he tried the important Indian murder case entitled "United States v. Ambrosio Apapas and nine other defendants," and disposed of several other cases and numerous law and motion matters.

As late as the 24th instant, on account of the engagement of the court in the trial of a personal-injury case with a jury and the approaching trial of another criminal case to begin Tuesday, the 29th instant, the Government was obliged to continue the case of the United States v. Sam Yick et al., charged with conspiracy to smuggle Chinese into the United States, as it would be impossible to complete the trial thereof before the court, in accordance with law, goes to Fresno for its regular spring term in the northern division.

In addition to the above, District Judge Bean, of the district of Oregon, has been present in Los Angeles holding court constantly for the past five weeks, hearing the final arguments in the suit in equity entitled "United States of America v. May K. Rindge et al.," during all of which time Judge Wellborn has been constantly occupied with trials in his court.

Looking at the question from another viewpoint, it may be appropriate to call your attention to the fact that the grand jury is constantly in session, being appointed at or near the beginning of each term and serving until the close of the term. The result of this is that indictments are being constantly returned into court in the midst of a term and after the trial calendar for the entire term has been called and the cases set. In the past it has many times happened that an indictment has been returned by a grand jury during the term of court and the defendant has pleaded not guilty, and both the defendant and the Government have been ready and anxious to try the cause, but owing to the fact that the entire time of the court has been taken up with cases already set for trial, it has become necessary to continue such criminal causes for the entire term, to the disadvantage of both the defendant and the Government, and in some cases this has resulted in extreme hardship to the defendant by reason of his inability to give the necessary bail, thereby compelling him to remain in custody sometimes for a considerable length of time.

It is needless for me to add after what I have heretofore stated that I am not only heartily in favor of the proposition to give to this district an additional judge, but to repeat again I think it is an absolute necessity, and that the gain of the United States, even if estimated in money alone, will more than compensate it for the additional expense consequent upon the appointment of such additional judge.

Respectfully,

A. I. MCCORMICK,
United States Attorney.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to John T. Peet (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2256) to correct the military record of James M. Campbell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 2257) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 2258) to extend the proposed reorganization of the customs service for a period of two years.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to say, in reference to the bill regarding the customs service, that it is identical with the amendment which was passed by the Senate to House bill 28858. It appeared as amendment numbered 10 on page 9 of the bill as passed by the Senate. The language is identical. I understand that the Senate conferees, and at least one of the conferees of the House, favored the amendment, but it finally went out in conference. This is a bill containing the same provision, postponing for two years the operation of the order reorganizing the customs service.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 2259) granting a pension to Amelia H. Sawyer (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2260) for releasing and quitclaiming of all claims of the United States to arpent lot No. 28 in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A bill (S. 2261) for the relief of George T. Hamilton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FALL:

A bill (S. 2262) to amend chapter 35 of the Statutes of the United States of America, passed at the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, approved February 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BACON:

A bill (S. 2263) for the relief of the heirs of William Pope, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama:

A bill (S. 2264) for the relief of William L. Buck and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Thomas Drury and others (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 2266) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the city of El Paso, Ill., two condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Otto Kuehn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 2268) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gour; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2269) to fix the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities; to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2270) granting an increase of pension to Francis C. Sturtevant (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 2271) granting a pension to Margaret Gately; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 2272) providing for an increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy after June 30, 1913; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WHEN CONGRESS SHOULD CONVENE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in the beginning of the present session of Congress I introduced a joint resolution providing when Congress shall convene and when the terms of President and Vice President shall commence. I have written an article on the subject, which has been published in Leslie's Illustrated Weekly of May 22, 1913. Inasmuch as to insert the article in the RECORD would save a speech, I ask unanimous consent that it be published in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From Leslie's Illustrated Weekly of May 22, 1913.]

WHEN CONGRESS SHOULD CONVENE.

(By Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH, United States Senator from Colorado.)

At the opening of Congress I introduced in the Senate a joint resolution providing for the adoption of a constitutional amendment, as follows:

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President of the United States shall commence on the second Monday in January following the election of presidential and vice presidential electors, and such electors shall assemble at the capitals of their respective States and cast their votes for President and Vice President on the first Monday in December following their election.

"SEC. 2. The terms of Senators and Representatives shall commence on the first Monday in January following their election.

"SEC. 3. There shall be held two regular sessions of Congress, convening on the first Monday of January each year."

Under the present system Congress is elected on the first Tuesday in November of the even years and does not convene in regular session until the first Monday of December of the year following. What a travesty upon representative government is the meeting of Congress 13 months after its election! What a delusion is the statement that Representatives come fresh from the people! What an opportunity is afforded to forget the pledges made at the election! It is true an extraordinary session may be called early, but such sessions are limited generally to one subject and are not usually favored by the people. It is essential to good government that the expressed will of the people be crystallized into law at the earliest practical moment.

The terms of office of Senators and Representatives expire on the 3d day of March, and now the second regular session is held during the three months immediately preceding. This second regular session is held after the election of the new Congress and after many of its Members have been repudiated by the people. To permit such Senators and Representatives, after they have failed of election, to still represent their constituents is contrary to every principle of our Government.

Often there is a complete political change of administration, but under the present system we have the representatives of the old political party for three months after defeat passing laws directly in conflict with the last expressed will of the people. Not even the legislative bodies of monarchies are permitted to so misrepresent their constituents. An examination of the Statutes at Large will disclose that outside of the general appropriation and private pension bills three-fourths of the legislation of a Congress is enacted during the second regular session.

The record of each Senator and Representative should be completed before he comes before his constituents for indorsement. After he has been turned down by the people he is not in a fit frame of mind to legislate in their behalf. If he is open to the temptation of a bribe, then is the time it is offered and received. Even those who are not subject to temptation often lose interest in legislation after failure of election. It is well known that defeated Members, during the closing session, often absent themselves for weeks and sometimes months.

A session should not be held which is brought to a close by constitutional limitation. Measures in behalf of the people are often defeated thereby. By postponing many measures to the expiring days of the limited session such a congestion of bills is effected as often precludes the consideration of measures most intimately connected with the welfare of the people.

The meeting of Congress 13 months after the election produces a most inequitable result in contested-election cases. The term of a Representative is nearly half served before the committee can enter upon the consideration of his case, and it is not brought to a vote in the House until 15 to 24 months after the commencement of the term. The Government, in the meantime, pays the salary to the one who serves and also to the contestant, should he be seated. During all that time the congressional district, at least politically, is misrepresented.

The time for the convening of Congress on the first Monday in December is very inopportune. An adjournment of two weeks for the Christmas holidays is always taken and many Members go to their homes, returning late. No real work is done until January.

Heretofore it has been deemed inexpedient to pass this constitutional amendment because Senators were not elected by the legislatures until the middle of January, and sometimes not until February or March. Then the warm season would be too near to permit the holding of a long session of Congress for the consideration of general legislation, but since Senators hereafter are to be elected by the people at the general November election it becomes very opportune for Congress to convene in January.

This is one of the most important reforms needed in our Government, because it relates to the procedure by which all reforms can be enacted.

Equally strong reasons exist for the change in the terms of the President and Vice President. They should enter upon the performance of their duties as soon as the new Congress can count the electoral votes, just as the newly elected governors of our States are inducted into office as soon as the new legislatures of the States canvass the votes and declare them elected. As it is now it is the old Congress which counts the electoral votes.

After a very close election which changes the political complexion of an administration it is dangerous to permit the defeated party to retain control of the machinery by which such important officers are declared elected. Under our Constitution, upon the failure of any candidate to receive a majority of the electoral votes, it devolves upon the House of Representatives to elect, the representation from each State having one vote. This at present is done not by the new Congress but by the old one. Thereby it is possible for a political party repudiated by the people to elect a President. This is a clear violation of the principle of representative government.

The Constitution further provides: "If the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March next following, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in the case of death or other constitutional disability of the President." What a temptation for delay and for the defeat of the true choice of the people!

The fact that the weather of January would be inclement for an inaugural parade is too insignificant a reason to prevent the adoption of a constitutional amendment which promises so much for good government. Why should we have in a Republic the great pomp and ceremony which usually attend the coronation of monarchs? If we must have them, why can not they be in the nature of celebrations at some seasonable time?

True representative government requires that Congress should convene soon after the election thereof, and the executive officers should commence their administration without hindrance or delay.

PRODUCTION OF SUGAR IN HAWAII.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a brief letter by Mr. Sidney Ballou, the representative of the Hawaiian sugar interests, written for the purpose of correcting what he says are some inaccuracies in regard to the cost of making sugar in Hawaii which were published in the RECORD in the speech of Mr. HARDWICK, of Georgia.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana what it is that he asks to have printed?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is a very brief statement in the form of a letter from Mr. Sidney Ballou, representing the Hawaiian sugar interests, giving what he says is the real cost of producing sugar in Hawaii, and showing that it takes two years to grow a crop of sugar in those islands. The statement is very brief.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1913.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As illustrating the necessity of public hearings on the sugar schedule, permit me to call your attention to some misstatements concerning Hawaii made by Congressman HARDWICK, of Georgia. In his speech just published in the current CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (May 13, 1913, p. 1642) he says, in speaking of the cost of producing a pound of raw sugar:

"In the Philippines it is 1.75 cents per pound, and in Porto Rico, Cuba, and Hawaii about 2 cents per pound. There is no dispute whatever about these facts, as will be seen on examination of the evidence submitted to the special committee on sugar and from the report of that committee (p. 23) and from the recent hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. (Hearings, Schedule E, p. 2268.)"

So far as this statement concerns Hawaii, it is entirely incorrect. The page of the Hardwick committee report from which Mr. HARDWICK quotes contains no reference whatever to the cost of producing sugar in Hawaii. The citation from the recent hearings before the Ways and Means Committee proves, upon examination, to be merely a generalization of Mr. Frank C. Lowry, who knows nothing of conditions in Hawaii and whose statements or figures in the interest of free sugar are notoriously inaccurate

The cost of producing sugar in Hawaii is given on page 2400 of the same hearings as follows: For 1908, 2.58 cents a pound; for 1909, 2.64 cents a pound; for 1910, 2.82 cents a pound; for 1911, 2.91 cents a pound. For 1912, under an increased scale of wages adopted that year, the cost will reach 3 cents a pound.

Later in Mr. HARDWICK'S speech, he says:

"In the first place, the cost of production is not materially different in Cuba and Hawaii. According to the testimony of the representatives of the sugar interest of Hawaii, in the past Hawaii has been able to produce raw sugar at around 2 cents per pound, which is about the Cuban figure, and there is no doubt that they can do so again."

As the authorized representative of the sugar interests of Hawaii, I would say that I am not aware of any testimony supporting the statement here made. It is true that Mr. A. C. Spreckels, whose sole interest for many years has been that of a refiner, sometimes purports to speak of Hawaii, based upon his experience prior to annexation to the United States, but even Mr. Spreckels gives his cost at that time and under conditions long since passed at about 2¾ cents a pound (Hardwick committee hearings, p. 2259). I need hardly add that in the sugar business, where every tenth of a cent means over $7,000,000, there is a material difference between 2 cents and 2¾ cents.

Mr. HARDWICK'S speech contains a further illustration of the necessity for hearings when he says:

"According to the Crop Reporter of the United States, February, 1913, the average yield of cane per acre in Hawaii for the year 1910–11 was 41.3 tons; in 1911–12, 42.3 tons. The average yield of cane per acre in Cuba is 25 to 30 tons. The average sugar contents of a ton of cane in Hawaii is 13.16 per cent; in Cuba, 11 per cent. The average extraction per ton of cane in Hawaii is 238 pounds for 1910–11 and 248 pounds for 1911–12, against an average in Cuba of 230 pounds. So that it appears that an acre produces more cane in Hawaii than it does in Cuba, and that a ton of Hawaiian sugar cane contains more sugar than a ton of Cuban sugar cane, and that the yield of the mills in Hawaii is more than the yield of the mills in Cuba."

These figures might very well lead an investigator to the conclusion stated. If we are afforded public hearings, however, we can offer the explanatory fact that it takes sugar cane 18 months to mature in Hawaii as against 12 months in Cuba, and that every acre in Hawaii is devoted for two years to providing the yield of cane and sugar which is here compared with the yield from Cuba in one year.

These are merely examples of questions, all of which should be cleared up by any legislative body which proposes to take intelligent action on the subject.

Any publicity that you can give to these denials of Mr. HARDWICK'S statements will be appreciated.

Very truly, yours,

SIDNEY BALLOU,
Representing Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association.

BILLS OF LADING (S. DOC. NO. 41).

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced a bill relating to the subject of bills of lading as applied to interstate and foreign commerce. I have before me an article printed in the Traffic World of May 10, 1913, and written by Mr. Francis B. James, a prominent member of the Washington and Cincinnati Bar Associations, on the subject of the bill. The article is important in that it carefully analyzes the bill and presents the necessity for legislation of this character and is of great interest to those who are favoring such legislation. I ask that the article be printed as a public document.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio, in a word, again state what the article is?

Mr. POMERENE. It is an article by Mr. Francis B. James analyzing the bill which was introduced by myself on the subject of bills of lading.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection, Mr. President, but I desire, in a word, to say that I notice by the RECORD that the Senator from Ohio a few days ago had a remarkable utterance of the Secretary of Commerce printed as a public document for circulation throughout the country—the Secretary who, as some of us have believed, was going to call to account all manufacturers who chose to run their mills according to their own notions. I was gratified to observe this morning that the Secretary had modified that statement and had said that he did not mean what he was understood to say. It is a matter of gratification, also, to me to know that he is not going to adopt those harsh and unusual methods that the country was given to understand he was going to use in the event of manufacturers reducing the wages of their employees or running their plants according to their own notions.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I fear the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire received his information rather from the newspaper reports of what that speech contained than from the speech itself. It was in part for the purpose of correcting that misapprehension that I asked to have the speech itself printed as a public document.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not present when the Senator made the request, but had I been I would not have objected to it. I simply, however, want to put into the RECORD the fact that the Secretary has reconsidered the matter somewhat and has said to the country that he was misunderstood, and that he did not mean and does not mean to try to do what the country was given to understand he was going to do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think that the speech that was made by the Secretary justified any such construction. I asked to have the speech printed simply to correct a misapprehension of what it contained, or rather a misconstruction of what it contained. It was simply a statement to the effect that if corporations saw fit to lower the wages of their employees, and it was charged to be due to the passage of the tariff bill, that department might find it incumbent upon it in the proper discharge of its duties to make some investigations in order that the truth might be ascertained. It was not made in the way of a threat.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word more. A similar statement was made in the way of a threat in another place, in distinct and unequivocal language, and then it was followed by this utterance on the part of the distinguished Secretary. I think the country fully understood that an attempt, which would have been futile and absurd, was to be made unless those distinguished gentlemen changed their minds. I simply repeat that it is a matter of gratification to me to know that the statement has been sufficiently modified so that the manufacturers of the country may go along transacting their business without the fear of being haled into court or being investigated by some department of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, again I must insist that the statement as originally made has not been modified. It is now correctly understood in certain quarters where before it was misunderstood; and sometimes perhaps—though I do not mean in this Chamber—it has been purposely misrepresented. I am quite sure that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] joins with the rest of the Members of this body in simply wanting to know what the truth is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the article submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will be printed as a public document.

ABROGATION OF TREATIES (S. DOC. NO. 40).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, on the 21st of April last I had inserted in the RECORD the Hay-Pauncefote and the Clayton-Bulwer treaties. In connection with that publication there was an article, House Document No. 1313, prepared by Mr. Frank Feuille, the law officer of the Isthmian Canal Commission. I have since received a letter from him stating that there were two errors made in the House document itself which he has asked me to have corrected. I therefore ask to have the House document printed as a Senate document with the corrections which he desires to have made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 80. It is important that it should be acted on this morning.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. To what does the resolution relate?

Mr. STONE. It relates to hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs. The resolution has been favorably reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 80. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 9th instant was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BACON. I withhold that motion for a moment, Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up Senate bill 1620, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is important that that bill should be disposed of one way or the other.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the bill, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the title of the bill for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Order of business No. 27, Senate bill 1620——

Mr. PENROSE. I shall object to any bills coming up until my two resolutions can be considered by the Senate. They properly should come up at the close of morning business, and I consider them just as important as any measure pending before this body.

Mr. SWANSON. Is the Senator's resolution on the calendar?

Mr. PENROSE. My resolution was offered yesterday, and went over on objection. It simply calls for information. If the majority of this body are going to put themselves in the position of refusing information, I shall at least object to other bills coming up until I can get a vote on my resolution.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether his resolution will lead to any debate?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know anything about that. I should not expect that anyone would oppose the resolution for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that if the resolution will not lead to any debate, I have no desire in the world to oppose the motion. It can be acted upon as far as I am concerned.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the resolution be read. It comes up, under the rules, immediately upon the conclusion of morning business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that one of the resolutions will lead to some debate.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair whether the resolution does not come over?

Mr. PENROSE. It comes up under the rule automatically.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It comes down at the close of morning business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] asked whether these resolutions would lead to any debate. I stated that one of the resolutions probably would lead to debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me it is not a question of debate. The resolutions come before the Senate automatically under the rules, and the Senate can do with them what the Senate pleases.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution 87 be read for the information of the Senate, and then we will see whether it leads to any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 87) submitted yesterday by Mr. PENROSE, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Finance Committee be requested to report to the Senate a full list of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof for hearing or conference relative to House bill No. 3321.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is that resolution before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I supposed the Senator from Pennsylvania probably would want his resolution No. 88 considered first.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire Senate resolution 87 considered now by the Senate and voted upon, unless the chairman of the Finance Committee will agree to it and accept it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall move that the resolution be referred to the Finance Committee. The resolution is a very unusual one. It is a request that the chairman of the Finance Committee report to the Senate "a full list of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof for hearing or conference relative to House bill No. 3321."

I do not recall, since I have been a Member of the Senate, that an effort has ever before been made to require the Finance Committee to furnish to the Senate a list of everybody who has filed briefs with the Finance Committee or who has talked with any member of the Finance Committee or who has been before any subcommittee of the Finance Committee for the purpose of making any representations whatever.

Mr. PENROSE. That is not my resolution at all, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is resolution No. 87.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will read the resolution again, he will see that it does not refer to persons who have talked with every Senator individually.

Mr. SIMMONS. It says, "and other persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee."

Mr. PENROSE. "Or any subcommittee thereof."

Mr. SIMMONS. "Or any subcommittee thereof."

Mr. PENROSE. That is very different from anyone who has talked with an individual Senator where there was no dictagraph.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know of any rule in the Senate that has obtained heretofore, or that obtains now, that whenever a gentleman interested in the tariff schedules, pending the making of a tariff bill, has had a conference with a member of the majority of that committee——

Mr. PENROSE. Or a subcommittee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or a subcommittee—that that conference or conversation should be taken down, and that the majority members of the committee should be required to come into the Senate and file a list of the people who have talked with them with reference to tariff schedules. It is well known, in connection with every bill that has ever been framed, that people who are interested in these bills do seek out members of the committee—members of the majority and members of the minority of that committee—and have conferences with them. I could not tell the Senate, for the life of me, how many of these gentlemen have been to my rooms and have asked conferences with me. I have no list of their names.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no list of the number who have come. I took no memorandum of what they said to me. They simply came asking for a personal conference.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. CLARK of Wyoming addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I fear I must have misunderstood the resolution. I do not understand that the resolution requires the names of those who have seen an individual Senator, but only those who appeared before the majority members of the committee or before the subcommittees thereof. If the Senator will permit me, what possible objection can there be to giving the names?

Mr. SIMMONS. None in the world. There is no objection to giving the name of anybody that appeared and talked with me, if I had his name, and if it was information that the Senate desired. But this resolution, Mr. President, is intended by the minority members of this body to be a reflection upon the majority members of the Finance Committee. It is a resolution of a character that never has been presented before.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina further yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the Senator is unduly sensitive. There is no implication in the resolution that the subcommittees or the majority members of the committee are seeing persons whom they ought not to see. We do not suggest that there is any impropriety in seeing these persons. The Senator is defending it as if he had some names he wanted to conceal—as if he had seen somebody that ought not to be known.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator misunderstood me. If the resolution was confined to briefs, or to the names of persons who have appeared before the subcommittees of the Finance Committee, if there is a record of those names in the possession of the committee, I should have no objection to it. But when this resolution calls for a list of the persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee, I understand it to mean the persons who have appeared before any of the majority members, and not before the majority members in session. That is the part of the resolution to which I object.

It is well understood, Mr. President, that we have not had hearings of any kind before a full meeting of the majority members of the committee. It is well understood that some weeks ago the committee was divided into subcommittees, and certain schedules were referred to those subcommittees, and that there have been no hearings or conferences of any kind between persons interested in the tariff and the majority members of the committee in session as such. The resolution can not have reference to anything except conferences between individual members of the majority of the committee and persons interested in the tariff. I do not think I can be mistaken about that construction of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if the majority members as such have held no hearings or conferences, the resolution does not apply. We can not get information about what has never happened.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator did not understand me to say that we had not had any conferences among ourselves?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I do not mean that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said we had had no conferences with persons interested in the schedules.

Mr. LODGE. I mean conferences with persons who desired to be heard. The Senator says what I understood to be the case—that these hearings or conferences, whatever you choose to call them, were conducted by subcommittees of the majority members.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. In fact, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] told us that his subcommittee had been holding hearings, and that they were open—open to the newspaper press. I have been so unfortunate that I have not seen any of the press reports of those hearings, but I understand from the Senator from Georgia that they are open and public. If the hearings before that subcommittee and others are open, which is admitted, why should we not have the names of those who appear?

Why should we not have the names of those who file briefs? Some of us may want to examine those briefs.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has not understood me as objecting to that.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. That is all there is in the resolution, as I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that being all there is in the resolution.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. In connection with this matter I desire to ask the Senator before he takes his seat, if he will permit me, if he will not inform the Senate as to what has been done in connection with his promise that he would consider the question of having printed the briefs that have been submitted to the subcommittees?

A week ago, in response to a question in regard to that matter, the Senator said that he proposed to take up that question with his committee the following day. I should like to say to the Senator that it seems to me of great importance that that matter should be not only taken up but carried into execution. I know that I am being asked by people who are interested for copies of the testimony that is being given before these subcommittees, and particularly for copies of any papers or briefs that are filed in connection with the testimony. Many people can not appear there intelligently without knowing what testimony has been given there already. I hope the Senator has already arranged to have those papers printed or, if not, that he will tell us when he is going to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that probably he was not in the Chamber on yesterday, when I had a little colloquy with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] about this very matter. I think probably it was last Friday that the Senator asked me the question that he has referred to.

Mr. LIPPITT. It was on the 14th of May.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was about last Friday I had proposed to have a meeting of the full committee. I think it was Saturday—I am not sure about that—when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] advised me that he would not be in the city at that time. I then upon yesterday proposed to have a meeting of the committee to-day, but I was asked by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from New Hampshire to postpone that meeting until to-morrow. I have called a meeting of the full committee for to-morrow, when that question will be presented to the committee.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator last Wednesday, when this matter was called to his attention, to say at that time that he was personally in favor of this policy, and I think he suggested that it be carried out. I hope he is still in favor of it, and that he will see that it is done promptly, so that the public generally or the people particularly interested may consider the matters that are being brought before the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the Senator referring to now, the briefs or the questions?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am referring to the briefs. I am referring to the testimony that is being given before the subcommittee from day to day, which involves a great many proposed changes. I understand there are a great many statements being seriously considered by the different subcommittees. I think they have already gone far enough with the study of the bill to have developed from their own standpoint that there should be many changes made. It is of great importance that the people interested should know what sort of information it is that is bringing the subcommittees into this state of mind. No man can properly come before one of the subcommittees on any question without knowing what other witnesses have said in regard to the subject, and without knowing the effect that that testimony has had upon the minds of the subcommittee. The gentlemen who are interested and all the general public have a right to be informed about it. I think there is nothing more important for the fair discusssion of this whole question than that this information should be made public, and if it is going to be made public it should be made public promptly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say to the Senator that action with reference to printing these briefs has not been delayed on my account.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say to the Senator that it certainly has not been hurried.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have tried twice to get a meeting, and both times I have postponed it at the request of the minority members of the committee.

Now, with reference to these briefs, Mr. President, nearly all the briefs that are now on file with the Finance Committee are copies of briefs that were filed before the Ways and Means Committee. A large part of them were the same witnesses or concerns or corporations who filed briefs before the Ways and Means Committee, and were given full and ample opportunity to be heard before that committee. Their testimony has been published and their briefs have been published. There have been some additional briefs filed with the Finance Committee, and I am perfectly willing myself to have them printed. I think they ought to be printed, and at to-morrow's meeting of the committee I hope an order may be made directing that they be printed.

There is absolutely no disposition on the part of the majority members of the committee to conceal these briefs. I suppose that nearly every industry that has filed with the majority members of the committee a brief has also filed with minority members of the committee a copy of that brief, and the briefs are in their possession. I doubt whether a single brief has been filed by anybody that is not either in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee or is not in the possession of some one or more members of the minority of the Finance Committee. But that is no reason why they should not be published, and I shall myself ask that they be published.

Mr. LIPPITT. If I may just at this point interrupt the Senator——

Mr. SIMMONS. I only state that as a reason why I do not think gentlemen on the other side are suffering from a want of knowledge on this proposition. I imagine that you are generally in possession of it as well as we are. Many of the gentlemen who have come to me with briefs have said that they had copies of the brief and they were going to distribute them among members of the committee.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can only say to the Senator, if he thinks these briefs are available, that within a few minutes of the opening of the Senate I was approached by a gentleman who was very anxious to obtain copies of some briefs that have been submitted to one of these subcommittees, and, in fact, which I knew had been submitted, for I have myself seen a copy, but I was utterly unable to procure it for him. I have no copy for myself. His demand simply emphasized the importance of the request which I am making now, which I did make nearly a week ago, and which up to this time no action of any kind has been taken on. I know how easy it is to make these dilatory suggestions, but I think the matter is too important to be treated in this way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think the Senator ought to refer to the failure to furnish these briefs as dilatory methods on the part of the majority.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can only say——

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure the members of the Finance Committee on the other side of the Chamber will say that the meeting has been postponed twice at the instance of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it necessary under the rule we have and under the resolution which the Senate has already passed for the full membership of the committee to be brought together in order to publish the hearings before it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is not absolutely necessary, but I stated that I was going to submit that question to the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that never a full committee is brought together in order to publish what occurred before the committee or a subcommittee. It goes to the printer as a matter of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said, however, that I would submit that matter to the committee, and my reason for wanting to submit it to the committee is——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me one word more, I should say that more than half of these briefs have already been published and are in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have here a list which was handed to the members of the minority, which I suppose is correct:

Subcommittee No. 1: Stone, Thomas, James, and Simmons (ex officio).
Schedules assigned to Subcommittee No. 1: Schedule C, metals and manufactures of; Schedule B, earths, earthenware, and glassware; Schedule K, wool and manufactures of; Schedule L, silks and silk goods; free list not connected with any particular schedule or schedules.
Subcommittee No. 2: Williams, Shively, Gore, and Simmons (ex officio).
Schedules assigned to Subcommittee No. 2: Schedule E, sugar; Schedule G, agricultural products; Schedule J, flax, linens, and other vegetable fibers; section 2, incomes; sections 3 and 4, administration.
Subcommittee No. 3: Johnson of Maine, Smith of Georgia, Hughes, and Simmons (ex officio).
Schedules assigned to Subcommittee No. 3: Schedule A, chemicals; Schedule I, cotton manufactures; Schedule D, wool and manufactures of; Schedule M, pulp, papers, and books; Schedule N, sundries not connected with any particular schedule or schedules.

On account of the fact that there is very little change in Schedule F, tobacco and cigars, and Schedule H, wines and liquors, these two schedules were not assigned to any subcommittee.

There is a careful arrangement of subcommittees for the purpose of considering these schedules and the holding of hearings of persons interested. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] said the other day, as I have already remarked, that the hearings of his subcommittee were open to the public and the press. Therefore, of course, there can be no objection to publishing the names of those who appear before his subcommittee. Why should the others be veiled in mystery? They are probably quite as reputable as those who appear before subcommittee No. 3.

Mr. SIMMONS. I believe the Senator is speaking in my time.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator had concluded. But, at all events, what possible objection is there to giving the names of the people who come before those subcommittees?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator I have no objection, and I have tried to make it clear.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator is ashamed of the people who come there and wants to conceal their names, that is another matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is using a term that I think, when he reflects, he will regret that he used. Nobody is ashamed, and the Senator does not think anybody is ashamed to publish the name of anybody who has been before the subcommittee.

Mr. LODGE. Then what possible reason is there for objecting to the publication of the names?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator would not let me finish, and he injected a word that I think he ought not to use in that connection. I stated in the beginning, and I reiterate the statement, that I have no possible objection and the committee has no possible objection to giving the name, if the name has been taken down, of any person who appeared before a subcommittee.

Mr. PENROSE. The name ought to be taken down in every case.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I take it most of the names have been taken down where persons have made statements, but very frequently a large number of them come, and the name of one is taken down, who will make a statement, and the names of the others will not be taken down. The Senator knows that is the common course. What I was objecting to is that part of the resolution which, according to my interpretation of the resolution, requires us to report the names of persons who had come before any member of the majority for the purpose of conference with reference to any schedule in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me? I do not expect anything unreasonable. Where, as is well known, Senators are sitting as subcommittees, I think the Senate is entitled to get the information. If a Senator happens to meet some of these bad men on the street, I do not expect him to make a record of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the proposed resolution, and with the amendment I favor the resolution as amended. The amendment proposes to add:

And that the minority members of the committee be requested to report to the Senate the names of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the minority members of the committee relative to House bill 3321.

Mr. PENROSE rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In one moment.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am glad that the Senator accepts it. I want it passed also. So far as we are concerned we are perfectly willing for the Senate to have the name of every man who appeared before our subcommittee where we have a record of it, and starting a few days ago we commenced keeping a record of all who appeared. We are perfectly willing for the Senate to have the names.

I want to go further and say, replying to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, who says he has seen nothing published of these subcommittee meetings——

Mr. LODGE. In the press.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I supposed the Senator meant—published in the papers. We are not responsible for that. They are welcome to publish anything that happens during these meetings that they wish to publish. Newspaper men were in and out yesterday, and they published nothing. I told the only newspaper men who mentioned the matter to me before the debate several days ago that they were welcome to come. They were with us yesterday, they were with us the day before, and they found nothing that they wanted to publish.

Senators have been invited to come, and Members of the House have been invited to come. The effort made to create the idea that there is any secrecy about this investigation is utterly without foundation. I am glad that it came before the Senate so that the Senate may publicly hear that there is no secrecy about it.

Since the suggestion was made that a record might be kept our subcommittee has had a stenographer, and we take a record of everything that is said. We are perfectly willing to have everything that transpires before the subcommittee made a matter of record for the use of anybody and everybody who wants to use it.

The subcommittee upon which I am serving, as I said before, has stated freely to parties inquiring that they were welcome to come, and we have invited them to stay when anything was going on, when witnesses were present.

I do not know whether they are going to publish our investigations in the newspapers. We are having one now. Two members of the subcommittee are down stairs now hearing a number of men who are discussing several schedules. If the newspaper men want to report those hearings, they are welcome to report them. If they do not report them, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is not our fault. They have the fullest opportunity.

Now, we expect to go on all of this week and possibly a part of next week, while parties have information, or believe they have information, that they think we ought to have, with reference to the schedules submitted to the subcommittee of which the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is chairman, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and I are members. We propose to hear them. We want to get all the information we can.

Now, as to the briefs, I do not think the briefs have been ready for publication. I think the chairman of the committee would have made a mistake if he had published them up to this time. I believe that the proper way to publish them is when we feel that all the briefs to be printed upon a particular subject have come in to us, then we should have them properly classified and so published as to put them in a shape where anyone who desires to investigate a particular subject will find the briefs on the subject collected together. We have had the clerk of our subcommittee classify the briefs. We have them down stairs in a room adjoining the Finance Committee room, where any Senator who wishes to do so can see them. We keep the door open and we keep the briefs there. We invite any Senator who wishes to examine anything that we have received in the shape of briefs; and just as soon as we think the time has come when we shall receive no more upon a particular subject I am in favor of completing the classification and printing them for the use of anybody who desires.

Mr. LIPPITT rose.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] rose, I think, to ask me a question.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can not quite agree with the view the Senator from Georgia takes of this matter, because it is utterly impossible to have a complete understanding of the development of these questions as they are going on from day to day without the gentlemen who are coming down here to testify, and whose information upon these subjects is so important, knowing what is being said by the different parties who appear before the committee. It is utterly useless to talk about printing these papers for such a purpose as that and having them ready for distribution a month or some other time from now. The only importance of them is their immediate availability. As I said, this very morning a gentleman who wants to testify before the Senator's subcommittee came to me and wanted a copy of papers that had been submitted there, and there was no way of getting them for him, and which I can see no way of getting in any way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to ask the Senator if he applied to any member of the subcommittee for them?

Mr. LIPPITT. I did not; because the request was made while I was on my way over here. I have had similar requests from people in my own State for copies of the briefs that are being presented. It is manifestly impossible, when in the files of the committee there are only one or two copies, for information in regard to their contents to be sent to this part and that part of the country for the use of people who can not be here, or for the use of people who only propose to come here after the development of information that has been presented on the subject.

I do not understand the objection to having these briefs printed. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in the discussion of this question a few days ago said that so far as he was concerned he did not want any more light. It seems to me there are other gentlemen on that side who seem to be taking the same position. Now, all I am asking in connection with this matter is that information that is being poured in before the subcommittees shall be made available for the use of anybody who wants to consider it, or persons who for any reason think they have a good right to know what it is. Why should anybody object to it? It is a very simple matter to have these briefs printed. I ask for nothing unusual.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I have yielded to the Senator long enough. If he wants to make a further speech, he can do it when I am through.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was only answering a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator spent a large part of yesterday with our committee and he understands how freely and fully the examination was going on.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Wait a moment. He did not apply to any one of our committee for a copy of a brief. He could have had it if he had asked for it. I do not think it is at all necessary to furnish each witness that is coming down here the testimony by other witnesses on the same subject. It would lessen the value of the information furnished by the second witness. But if any Senator or any man wished to see a brief it has been ready for his use at all times. I say now——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. Each brief is now in the room downstairs, and the Senator can see them. I do not think the purpose of publication is so much to furnish an opportunity for witnesses to examine them as it is for the examination of Senators, who are finally to pass upon this question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Georgia cause to be furnished to the Senator from Wyoming a copy of such briefs as have been filed before his subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not all of them; no; but if the Senator will name any particular brief which he desires, I will furnish it to him.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is interested in all of the schedules that are being considered by the Senator's subcommittee; he is also a member of the Finance Committee; and he thinks he is entitled to such matters as have been filed before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will do this for the Senator from Wyoming: I will give him an opportunity to examine every one of them. I have not enough copies of all to distribute.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is just what we are asking for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will favor the printing of all of them and furnishing the Senator a copy of all of them a little later on.

Mr. LIPPITT. How much later?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As soon as I think they have practically all come in on the schedules.

Mr. LIPPITT. Now, if the Senator will yield to me just a minute——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from Georgia referred to the fact that I knew he had been very diligent in hearing people who wanted to testify before his subcommittee. I want to bear my testimony to the entire accuracy of that statement. I am perfectly aware that the Senator has been very diligent, that he has been very patient in listening to all the testimony, that he has given very fair consideration and due weight to all the statements that have been made, and I believe he himself will say that as a result of that consideration many opinions which he has had on some of the subjects that have been submitted to him have been materially modified.

The Senator says that any Senator can go to his committee room and consult his files. The Senator knows perfectly well that the time of Senators is in too great demand for them personally to sit down in his committee room and consult his files. If I seek information contained in some document I want it brought to me in the most available way for me to read it. It is impossible if the Senator has only one or two copies of that document for him to have it sent around to my committee room or to some other Senator's committee room so that I may take it to my house, perhaps, and study it in the evening or at some other time when it can be of the greatest use to me. There is only one way to do it, and that is to have copies made, which is a very simple matter and a very inexpensive matter, and that can be done very expeditiously if Senators on the other side are as anxious to furnish light on this question as Senators on this side are anxious to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, these briefs began coming in about two weeks ago and have been scattered through the past two weeks, frequently bearing upon the same subject. It would have been folly to have printed them for distribution as they came in. Nearly all of the briefs were already printed, and evidently the parties furnishing them were distributing them to Senators. Certainly, we had every reason to suppose that the parties furnishing them to us in printed shape were distributing them in single copies amoug the various Senators.

To make the briefs on one particular subject of real value they ought to be collected, classified, put in volume form, and indexed for ready reference. If we had simply printed them one by one, they would have been of scarcely any use. The briefs have almost completely stopped coming in; in a few days I think the filing of briefs will have been completed. Then, when properly classified and printed, they will be of substantial value; but unclassified, simply in a mass, anyone desiring to look for a particular brief on a particular subject would be required to take a large amount of time to hunt through a great pile of briefs to find what he wanted. I do not believe that it would have been an intelligent course to print them in single numbers as they came in, but I think the intelligent way to prepare them for the use of Senators and of the public is to classify them and print them in volumes properly indexed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I desire to ask him a question. The Senator is himself holding these hearings from day to day, and he hears all that is said by the witnesses. I do not know whether or not he reads all the briefs that they file.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not been able to read all of them.

Mr. LODGE. The information, however, comes to him from day to day, but it does not come to the rest of us from day to day. When general public hearings before a full committee have been held, as they were in the last Congress on the schedule bills, every day the testimony of that day was printed, as were the briefs which were filed, so that the whole Senate got the information from day to day exactly as did the committee.

The only distinction is that these hearings are by subcommittees and the others were by the full committee. I do not see the practical objection to that system.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To which system?

Mr. LODGE. I do not see the practical objection to the system of printing what occurs from day to day, as was done last year on all the schedule bills, instead of massing it at the end in one great pile. I repeat the Senator from Georgia is getting his information from day to day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LODGE. Information or misinformation, whichever you choose to call it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am getting more information by the examination of existing records than I am from the witnesses. I confess very frankly that my examination each day applies more to records already made than to the testimony of new witnesses.

I can not agree to the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] that views that I entertain have been substantially changed. There were a number of subjects upon which I had no views, as to which I had no detailed information, until I began to investigate the various schedules. I do not think any Senator has accurate information about a schedule unless he takes a great deal of time to investigate and to study it.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly true, and that is why I venture to suggest that the Senator and other members of the subcommittees have the advantage of getting their information or misinformation, or whatever it is, from day to day, whereas, if the plan of the Senator from Georgia is followed, the whole great mass will be thrown in on the rest of us at one moment, and that, too, probably when the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would think that the Senator from Massachusetts were right but for the general condition of information with reference to the tariff question. For four years examinations as to the tariff schedules have been going on. I do not think we have obtained before our committee any information of any value that was not already in print. I do not think any of the briefs that have been furnished really give us any substantially valuable information that we do not already find—in most instances more completely furnished—in existing reports. As to a number of matters that witnesses have discussed before us, I find more complete information in the records of the Tariff Commission; I find more complete information and more accurate information in numerous volumes already printed. I do not think that the new information we are getting really contributes largely to the present store of information in print upon the subject. I think that is really true; and while we have been having stenographic reports for two or three days past of the statements before our subcommittee, we have had them because we felt that if any Senator did wish to read what we were hearing we desired to give him the opportunity. So I am in favor of printing these briefs in order that if anybody wants them he shall have them; but I really believe that from the record heretofore made we can dig out more complete information than we are now getting.

The special value, I think, of these briefs is that these particular persons have put their finger on an exact schedule that they criticize. As suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], they came before us and objected to putting certain dyes on the dutiable list and called our attention to the fact that derivatives from indigo as well as other dyes ought to be on the free list. There are particular items of that kind which have been called to our attention, as distinguished from the large volume of testimony that has been taken upon the tariff bill; and to that extent it is available. I am sure that it is our purpose to print these briefs very shortly and in ample time for Senators to examine them in such a way as will be most convenient.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it highly probable that the statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] as to the value or the lack of value of these new statements may be quite correct, but I think all Senators would rather like to form their own judgment of them. If the Senator will forgive me one moment, it reminds me of a gentleman in Boston many years ago in the days when they had college rebellions, as they were called. Hearing that there was to be a college rebellion and that his son was to engage in it, he rushed out to Cambridge and sent for his son, and said: "My son, I beg that you will not enter upon this rebellion; I have been through one of them and I have seen the folly of it." The son said: "That is just it; I want to see the folly of it, too." [Laughter.] We want to see the folly of this, too; we want to see what these discussions amount to.

The Senator has been very good-natured, and he will allow me to say that I did not mean to suggest for a moment that he was desiring any secrecy. On the contrary, I referred to his subcommittee and to what he said and praised it. What misled us was that we thought this morning the chairman of the committee was resisting the passage of this resolution, and that gave us the idea that he did not want these names published. If we have been misled about that and every Senator is ready to have the information published, I apologize for the time that I have wasted, and the sooner the resolution passes, with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, the better.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania has accepted the amendment?

Mr. PENROSE. I have accepted the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution as modified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to hear read the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution the following words:

And that the minority members of the committee be requested to report to the Senate the names of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the minority members of the committee relative to H. R. 3321.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the resolution as it now stands:

Said committee shall also, as far as possible, report the names of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who appeared before the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof when it had under consideration what are commonly known as the Dingley bill and the Payne-Aldrich bill. Said committee shall further report whether at the times last aforesaid any clerks or experts employed or used by said committee were furnished by or were in the employment of manufacturers or associations interested in maintaining a high tariff tax.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, I hope he will accept that amendment. I should like very much to have printed the names which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] suggests, so that we may be able to form a comparison between them.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will accept that amendment. I am very glad the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has offered it. It will be an enlightening contribution to the discussion to which this matter is going to lead. The records, so far as the Finance Committee is concerned, are absolutely intact. Every letter received by Senator Aldrich when he was chairman of the committee is on file in the Office Building of the Senate, and I presume the journals of the committee are also there—they ought to be there.

I want to say further, Mr. President, in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I did not know the Senator was going to address himself to his amendment.

Mr. REED. I was.

Mr. PENROSE. I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. REED. I do not object to the Senator going on, but I wanted to hold the floor; that is all.

Mr. PENROSE. Has the Senator any objection to my going on for a few moments?

Mr. REED. No; I will take the floor when the Senator is through.

Mr. PENROSE. I also want to say that I am very glad the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has offered his amendment. Of course the minority members of the committee are not organized. I do not know that there will be any concerted action on tariff legislation on the part of the minority. Individual Senators will doubtless offer amendments to paragraphs and perhaps amendments to schedules; but up to the present time there has been no effort at concerted action, and, in my opinion, there is no probability of such action. We do not need any; we know that any amendments which we may offer as a minority party will be voted down, and we do not want to delay this bill.

Of course every Senator will exercise his individual prerogative to offer amendments and to express his views. We have no subcommittees; but I want to inform the Senate that, as former chairman of the committee, I directed my clerks on the first day of this session to keep a record of every person who called at my committee room on tariff legislation. I have that record, and I shall furnish it at the very earliest opportunity to the Senate as part of this report.

Of course the minority is in an entirely different position from the majority. The majority are engaged in their inner recesses in framing rates. All that my visitors do is to call upon me to ask me where the majority are; where they can get hold of the subcommittee. Sometimes they ask me whether I think they would receive a sympathetic hearing. I can assure them of the sympathy, but I can not predict the result. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this discussion has been carried on in so serious a manner as almost to convince me that our brethren on the other side of the Chamber are really in search of information, but the last remark made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] discloses what I have suspected all along, that they do not so much want information as to fill the air with dust, and if possible convince the public they have suddenly become the advocates of publicity. The remark of the Senator to which I refer was substantially that "the minority members of the Finance Committee do not need any information, and hence they do not meet."

Mr. PENROSE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I made no such statement and had no such idea in mind.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, the record of course will show.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the record be read, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. I was trying to quote the Senator correctly. That certainly is the way I heard the remark on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE. With all due respect to the Senator, he is under such an entire misapprehension of the very insignificant remarks I did make that I should like to have the record read. It will take but a moment.

Mr. REED. I am equally content to have that done, and if I misheard the Senator, no one will more frankly right the matter than myself.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the RECORD be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Reporter will read.

The Reporter read as follows:

Mr. PENROSE. I also want to say that I am very glad the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has offered his amendment. Of course, the minority members of the committee are not organized. I do not know that there will be any concerted action on tariff legislation on the part of the minority. Individual Senators will doubtless offer amendments to paragraphs and perhaps amendments to schedules; but up to the present time there has been no effort at concerted action, and, in my opinion, there is no probability of such action. We do not need any; we know that any amendments which we may offer as a minority party will be voted down, and we do not want to delay this bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I insist that the spirit of the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania as they have just been read was fairly expressed in the statement I made. I now understand the Senator to say that the minority members of the Finance Committee have not organized; that they have not organized because it would be useless for them to do so; that they are making no effort in that direction; and the reason must be that they do not expect to gain any light that will be of value.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, we expect to be here from two to three months debating every paragraph of this bill; and the Senator will be convinced before we are through that we are in the pursuit of light and knowledge on every line of it.

Mr. REED. If the desire for information has not been sufficient to bring together the minority members of the Finance Committee, I strongly suspect the motives back of this clamor for information.

In the second place, Mr. President, I call attention to a fact well known to every Senator upon the floor, namely, that the representatives of the interests affected by this bill have not confined their attentions and solicitations to the subcommittees of the Finance Committee. On the contrary, they have visited Senator after Senator, and our time is constantly being taken up in listening to their arguments.

But when was it that the Republican Members of this body became so solicitous for public hearings, such earnest seekers for the light? Truly, a change has come over the spirit of their dreams. It is a conversion so sudden that it could not have been accomplished by anything except an unusual supply of divine grace—an attribute that is not often manifested upon the other side of the Chamber.

I hold in my hand the Payne-Aldrich bill. When that bill was passed, the present distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was a member of the Finance Committee. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was also a member of that committee. I want to contrast the hearings then had with the hearings now being granted, and the discussion which then took place with the discussion of the present bill. I utterly repudiate the idea that the hearings now being held are, in their great essentials, at all similar to the hearings then held.

At that time the majority members of the Finance Committee were committed to the policy of a high protective tariff. They believed in building a legal wall around this country so high that goods could not be imported from abroad. They were devoted to that policy, and had been for years. Their minds were made up on that side of the question.

The men who came before them were the men who also wanted the tariff high. They were the beneficiaries of the system. They came before the committee to have schedules made to suit themselves, and the committee wanted to make schedules to suit them. The manufacturers knew what they wanted and the committee intended to give them what they wanted. Thus these gentlemen met with a common purpose—the committee representing the manufacturer's idea and the manufacturer being there to represent his own idea. They proceeded to make up a bill; and there was not a single man among the Republican majority members of the Finance Committee to represent the consumers of the United States.

Observe, now, the contrast: When the manufacturer now comes before the Democratic majority members of the present Finance Committee he confronts men every one of whom is devoted to a reduction of the tariff. He submits his case to men who are determined that there must be a reduction. He faces a committee the Democratic members of which intend to represent the consuming population of the United States and see that justice is done to all the people. When he presents his case to that board it is a very different proposition from going before one that already agrees with him, but proposes and desires to assist him in plundering the people of the United States.

Such is the contrast we observe as we enter upon this discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. According to current rumor—I know that rumors, as a rule, ought not to have much importance attached to them—a very receptive mood is supposed to exist on the part of these subcommittees toward raising certain duties on protective lines. I think the Senator overrates the stern way in which the subcommittees are guarding the consumer. I do not know whether he is fully aware of all that is going on in the inner circles. It is currently said that we are to have a repetition of the performances of Senator Gorman in this body in connection with the Wilson-Gorman bill. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not like to have my party tried by rumor, any more than the Senator would like to be tried by rumor. I have not heard the rumor referred to. But if the rumor exists, and is based upon fact, it must have been a pleasing bit of news for the responsive ears of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. It was pleasing.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator will be doomed to about the same kind of news when we get through with this bill that the people sent to his party in the last election and that he will find out that there is a great difference between a tariff-reform Democrat and a high-protection, stand-pat Republican.

Mr. President, every candid man must concede that there is a great difference between the receiver of stolen horses meeting with the horse thieves for the purpose of regulating the business of horse stealing and that same receiver of stolen horses being brought before an antihorse-thief association organized for the purpose of suppressing the crime of larceny. So there is a great difference between the beneficiaries of a tariff system meeting in friendly conspiracy with the men whose campaigns they financed and whom they put into office and then and there agreeing upon the amount of loot to be exacted from the people and those same beneficiaries coming before a body of Democrats committed to an opposite theory for the purpose of submitting arguments and facts which may call for just consideration. The two situations are as far apart as right and wrong, as justice and injustice, as criminal conspiracy and fair dealing.

I next call attention to the kind of tariff hearings our Republican brethren have hitherto given. They now declare that they want light; they passionately cry for time for unlimited debate; they lift up plaintive voices; their eyes are wet with tears; they cry aloud for time and still more time. My friend from Michigan a day or two since raised his voice so high that I imagined I could see the old deadheads and stumps of the lakes of Michigan bobbing up and down in unison with the sweet cadences of his elocution.

What about the Payne-Aldrich enormity. It reached the Senate of the United States on the 10th day of April, 1909. It was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance on that day. On the 12th day of April, 1909, just two days after it had been sent to the Senate from the House, it was reported back by the Finance Committee, and it had 847 amendments grafted onto it—amendments that were written in advance, amendments that were prepared before the bill ever reached the Senate committee, amendments that were written without any semblance of hearing, except the private hearing when the manufacturer whispered into the willing ears of the men who believed just as he believed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, knowing the friendship which the Senator entertains for publicity, I want to call his attention to the fact that at the hour of 2 o'clock this very meritorious resolution will go over.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt the Senator would like to call time on me, but I do not intend that he shall succeed.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no; I should like to have a vote on the resolution, and hear the Senator afterwards.

Mr. REED. We will vote on the resolution in ample time, and then you can also hear me. You will thus revel in a double pleasure. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will preserve order in the galleries.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what kind of hearings did they have? You now want all hearings recorded. I wish the hearings then had might have been all recorded. I wish we might have the light poured in upon the back-room hearings held when Republican politicians secretly met and conspired with their masters. Who was then present? We asked that question one day here upon the floor. The distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the leader of all the forces which march forth to man the walls of protection, admitted upon the floor of the Senate that they had had no reporters present when Aldrich was framing his amendments. Where was the press then? We did not then hear any Republican clamor for publicity. The eloquent and learned Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] did not then lift up his voice in demand for the admission of the reporters. The eyes of my friends upon the other side of the Chamber were not so often turned toward the Press Gallery. They were not at that time praying for the light. They neither took down in shorthand nor preserved in any other manner the hearings they had before the majority members of the committee. They were, in fact, engaged then in writing a bill. They were not engaged in scrutinizing the bill passed by the House of Representatives for the purpose of rectifying its defects. They were in conference with the beneficiaries of the tariff system, ascertaining how much extortion the latter desired to practice upon the American people.

I affirm now that when the Dingley bill was written—and I think he was continued until the Payne-Aldrich bill—the expert and confidential adviser of the Republican members of the Finance Committee was an employee of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association. This man was in the pay of the woolen manufacturers; he was sent to report the proceedings of the committee; he sat with the committee to represent the men who employed and paid him. I charge this servant of the woolen manufacturers substantially wrote Schedule K, and did his work so well, or so infamously—whichever term it is proper to employ—that he received a gratuity of $5,000 from the woolen manufacturers. That sum was handed to him because as the confidential man of the committee he had so successfully served the interests of his private employers.

You clamor for publicity. You ought to have it, and you ought to have a large amount of it; but publicity, while bringing notoriety, will hardly give you fame.

Mr. President, the gentleman to whom I have referred was one S. N. D. North. He had been for a long time the secretary of what is known as the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers. He was sent here by the president of that association to give private and confidential information which he was to gain as the secretary of the committee. That fact is disclosed in correspondence which I propose briefly to epitomize, and which I shall ask to have printed in full in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

Here is a letter dated April 4, 1897, addressed to the president of the National Woolgrowers' Association:

DEAR MR. WHITMAN: Now, about the tariff. I can not, after what has been said to me in reference to my confidential relations with the committee, keep you posted as I would like to do. But if I find that it is desirable that you should come on here I will telegraph you that the situation requires attention, and you will doubtless have no trouble in finding out what is the matter.

In the meanwhile let me ask this question:

Should tops at a 24-cent line have the same compensatory duty as yarns at a 30-cent line? Should tops at a 24-cent line have a compensatory duty of 27½ cents? Putting that value line so low was unfortunate, in view of the appearance it presents of making the compensatory duty alone more than 100 per cent. I am aware that the same thing occurs in cloths at the 40-cent line, but this tops is a new paragraph and will get closer scrutiny on that account. I do not want you to intimate to any Senator that I have written you on this subject, but to consider whether you can not, when the time comes, suggest raising the value line in the top paragraph to meet this kind of criticism.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the morning hour has expired.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be proceeded with until it is disposed of. There is no real opposition to it now that the resolution has been amended, I understand, and there is no unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had just risen to make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to it? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. This was the confidential adviser of Senator Aldrich and the confidential clerk of the then majority members of the Finance Committee engaged in writing a tariff bill for 100,000,000 people.

I am well, although I am kept at work from 10 a. m. until midnight. There is an immense amount of detail, and I have not sufficient clerical assistance as yet. I am the only person whom the committee allows in its meetings, and it makes it very hard, but I expect to pull through all right.

What a spectacle for the American people! The only man permitted to know what the committee was doing was the employee of those gentlemen who are aggregated together to tax the American people. And when that infamy was being perpetrated upon the American people gentlemen upon the other side sat as mum as oysters and with about the same interesting cast of countenance. Not a protest came from their lips. Behold what a marvelous change one sound licking has wrought!

I proceed. Here is another letter. This is from Mr. Whitman, the president of the association. It bears date of April 6, 1897. Notice the plaintive protest he utters because North has been told "that what he receives is confidential," and that "he can only advise him when there is danger," and thus enable him to look out for himself:

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: I have received your letter of the 4th, for which I am obliged. I suppose there is nothing for me to do but accept the situation as regards your keeping me posted, although I had supposed that, in reference to the interests you represent, you would be at liberty to communicate freely with your associates.

"The interests you represent." Represent where? In the secret councils of the Republican members of the Finance Committee. Represent when? At the time they are making up the schedules that will fix the price of almost everything the American people use in their daily life. "The interests you represent!"

Mr. President, you may look in vain in the history of Congress for a darker chapter than is disclosed in that one statement. Gentlemen upon the other side want publicity. One of them a little while ago told a humorous story, in which the boy at school was pictured as seeking to go into some sort of scrap or row because he said he wanted to experience the same folly his ancestor had indulged in. These gentlemen who warn us now, and knowing the kind of private hearings they held when they were in power, naturally protest against private hearings by others lest their miserable example may be followed to the injury of the Republic.

I am in favor of public hearings. There has been no denial of public hearings here, and there will be none. But I can readily understand how a Republican who has been party and privy to bringing before a Finance Committee majority the representatives of the protected interests may, out of his own conduct, suspect the motives of everybody else and naturally want to be there to look on.

Mr. President, there are more of these letters. Mr. Whitman continues as he writes to Mr. North:

I depend upon you to look out for my interests in this regard. You know how important it is, not only to me, but to the whole worsted industry of the United States, that such rates of duty should be imposed upon tops as will enable them to be made here and not be imported from foreign countries. If there is a single point in reference to this that you do not understand, you ought to communicate with me at once, so that it may be explained.

Again he calls upon his servant, agent, and employee, also at that time servant, agent, and adviser of the Aldrich branch of the Republican Party, then dominant upon the Finance Committee, to keep him constantly advised.

I come to June 2, 1897, and here Mr. Whitman writes again:

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: We all depend upon you to watch closely our interests, to see that nothing is overlooked or neglected by our friends on the committee.

Who were "our friends on the committee"? Was it not the stalwart Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and the equally magnificent specimen from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]? Were they not all "our friends upon the committee," bone of the same bone and flesh of the same flesh, inspired by the same high idea and philosophy of government that the way to make a people rich is to get together in a back room and tax them to death?

Mr. President, on June 9 Mr. Whitman wrote again to Mr. North:

Bear in mind that I am depending upon you wholly to look after my interests in connection with the tariff bill.

"Look after my interests." Yet he was in the employ of the committee and the committee was in the employ of the people of the United States. He was the only man who was permitted to be present all of the time when the discussions were going on.

Do you think that the Republican members of that committee, do you think the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the acute leader upon the other side, the Senator from Utah, for one moment did not know the relations of Mr. North with this association of woolen manufacturers? If there be any here so credulous as to entertain even a suspicion that these astute gentlemen were in the dark, that their keen eyes had not pierced the veil of secrecy and discovered the exact truth, then that Senator needs a guardian ad litem to conduct him from this Chamber to his own office.

Mr. President, there is more of this. Notice how regularly these gentlemen wrote to each other. Never did sweethearts exchange lovesick billets with greater regularity. Their letters passed each other on the way. Mr. North writes to Mr. Whitman:

I have your letter and the memorandum for Senator Aldrich regarding cotton yarns.

Now, what a convenient thing it was for these woolen manufacturers to have their employee sitting at the right hand of the chairman of this committee, the then potential boss of the Republican Party, slipping to him the private communications that had been sent the day before by his employer. Attend to what follows:

I have your letter and the memorandum for Senator Aldrich regarding cotton yarns. I am somewhat at a loss to know what is best to do these days. Senator Aldrich has been seriously sick. * * * I am doubtful if he will appear again in tariff matters for some time, not merely because of his health but because I suspect he feels keenly the manner in which the Republican Senators are treating the tariff bill—so largely the work of himself. The general character of the bill is being changed at nightly meetings, which are more like town meetings than meetings of the Finance Committee, and it must be humiliating and galling to him in the extreme.

Why, here was this echo of Aldrich, this connecting link between Aldrich and the woolen manufacturers, voicing the sentiments of the Republican majority of that day. Doubtless they were also the sentiments of some of the Senators who are protesting so loudly to-day. At that time publicity was such an unthinkable thing that public hearings so offended the delicate sensibilities of Aldrich that the good man actually fell sick of disgust.

How doth the leopard change its spots! It would appear that after reading the election returns last fall the Republican Party not only changed its spots, but it turned inside out, so now the grand old party makes virtuous companionship with that publicity it once sought to slaughter.

Again, on June 20, Mr. North writes to Mr. Whitman:

It is lucky I was here and just in the position I am. It has given me a whole day to work on the matter and get it right, and, with Aldrich away, there is no one on the committee who knows anything about it. But Allison and Platt trust me, and I expect they will both agree to what I have asked. I went all over the matter with them last evening.

And so the gentlemen of the other side who have vacated their chairs are now doughty champions of publicity, albeit a few short years ago they were permitting this confidential clerk of the manufacturers to hobnob with Platt and Aldrich and fix legislation in private. I am glad you have been converted; I am glad you have come into the tabernacle of publicity; but I would like to know that your conversion will last after you cease to profit by its profession. You know it was said—

When the devil was sick the devil a saint would be;
When the devil got well the devil a saint was he.

I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of my friends of the other side, nor exactly to compare them to Beelzebub. The couplet none the less has its applicability to the professions of the hour.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has not given us the date as to the year, but perhaps he has overlooked the fact.

Mr. REED. In each instance I have given it. I certainly gave it for the first two or three letters.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Taking that for granted, the Senator, in alluding personally to Senators by name, alludes to the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. PENROSE, and the Senator from Utah, Mr. SMOOT, Senators who were not on the Finance Committee when that tariff bill was being considered. The Dingley bill, with which the Senator from Missouri connects the name of Mr. S. N. D. North——

Mr. REED. I prefaced——

Mr. WARREN. In fact, there is not a Senator in this body now who was a member of that committee at that time. That does not necessarily change the course of the argument of the Senator, except as to his personal references.

Mr. REED. The Senator need not be worried about my misstating the record. I said—when perhaps the Senator was out—that Mr. North was the secretary at the time the Dingley bill was passed, and that I believed he sustained the same relation to the committee at the time the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed; but this correspondence bears relation more particularly to the Dingley bill.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should not apply the proceedings and happenings of the Dingley bill to the Payne-Aldrich bill with respect to persons, because he is mistaken in thinking that Mr. North occupied any position with the committee at the time of the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator desires to plead the statute of limitations that is a right every man has. Upon July 10, 1897, Mr. Whitman wrote Mr. North:

I am unable to go to Washington and have no one to look out for my interests there but yourself, and I depend upon you. Of course Messrs. Aldrich and Dingley will do all they can, but I depend upon your letting them know what I need. I depend upon you. Dress goods, yarns, and tops.

Yours, very truly, WM. WHITMAN.

Now, consider the kind of atmosphere in which we lived then, when it was possible for a great manufacturer to assert with entire and complete confidence that Aldrich and Dingley, the two leaders of the party, could be depended upon to do what he wanted and to protect his interests and when his confidential clerk could in like manner get the ear and assistance of two other Senators, Platt and Allison (see letter of June 20). Even if this did occur some years ago, nevertheless it is an important fact for all of us to consider when men who, representing the same philosophy and speaking for the same ideas and standing for the same doctrine, standing pat for them, are here to-day suddenly clamoring for the light of publicity.

The Democrats are all agreed to give forth all the information desired. We agree to this because we regard it as proper that every man, woman, and child in the United States should know who appears before the committees of Congress. Yet it is highly proper to call attention to the fact that we have at last advanced to a point where the protected industries can no longer not only pack the committees but employ and control the committees' clerks.

I depend upon you. Dress goods, yarns, and tops.

How well Whitman knew his man, North. How well North knew his master, Whitman. How well they understood each other.

It appears that in 1902 there was some kind of a trial down in Boston. Mr. Whitman was cross-examined, and he was trying to exculpate himself from the charge of having been a paid lobbyist. He first swore, as I interpret his testimony, that he did not get any pay for being a lobbyist, but was afterwards forced to substantially admit the charge. Here is the evidence:

Q. Do you mean to tell me that you did not receive compensation from other manufacturers when you first went to Washington in regard to tariff matters?—A. I will tell you all about it; but if you ask me the question in that form I will say no; I was never compensated for anything.

Q. Very well. If the form of the question permits that answer, what do you mean? What is your explanation?—A. Why, much to my surprise there was somewhere about 1883—I think it was in 1883—a few gentlemen got together and made up a small purse to help me and gave it to me. I have forgotten how much it was. But I had been paying my own expenses there, and had been there a great deal. That was way back, 20 years ago.

Q. You say you were paying your own expenses? Do you mean that those were paid by the Arlington Mills?—A. What?

Q. Do you mean you were paying them—the Arlington Mills were paying them?—A. I don't know. I don't remember now who paid the expenses.

Q. I thought you said you had been paying your own?—A. I paid them myself; whether I was reimbursed by the Arlington Mills or not for my expenses I don't remember. * * *

Q. You generally collected from the Arlington Mills all your expenses in Washington, didn't you? You would not undertake to say that all that work that you did in the tariff was a waste of time? A. Well, if I have not collected my expenses I have been very remiss.

So it appears now that Mr. Whitman was not only the chairman of this manufacturers' association, but he was a lobbyist in Washington; that he was here frequently, and that his expenses at least were paid. Thus we have this lobbyist at Washington putting his man, his henchman, his tool, into the committee that he might know and report the secrets of the secret hearings; that he might guard the interests of the manufacturers and assist them in levying tribute upon the American people. Nay, more, that he might be the go-between for Senators seeming to protect the public and manufacturers seeking to prey upon the public.

Mr. President, how fared Mr. North, and how did he do his work? Here is his letter of December 3, 1908. It answers questions. It was written to SERENO E. PAYNE, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It is in the nature of a plea in confession and avoidance, but it is principally confession. I shall not read all of it, but I shall ask to incorporate it in the RECORD, so that the Senate may once more have the benefit of this interesting document. He states:

When the Wilson tariff bill of 1894 was about to reach the Senate, Senator Aldrich said to me one evening that he was entirely without expert clerical assistance in connection with the work of the tariff bill, and without any funds to pay for it, and that he urgently desired that I would remain in Washington and assist him while the bill was passing through the Senate.

Thus he became the confidential man of this committee at the request of its chairman, who then constituted about all there was of the Republican Party in the United States Senate:

I consulted with the officers of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, of which I was the secretary, and they consented to Senator Aldrich's request. Accordingly I remained in Washington during the entire period that the Wilson bill was under consideration in the Senate, occupying a desk in Senator Aldrich's rooms in the Maltby Building. My duties were mainly the care of the correspondence, the making of tables, percentages, etc.

That was away back, when the Wilson bill was here. The letter continues:

When the tariff bill of 1897 reached the Senate, Senator Aldrich made the same request of me, and, again, after consulting the officers of the association, I went to Washington. From the date of my arrival until the bill became a law I acted as the clerk or secretary of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee. I was in charge of a number of clerks, who were loaned to the committee by the Treasury Department and the General Appraisers in New York.

Let all the gods at once bear witness to that declaration. The tool and employee of the lobbyist who represented the woolen manufacturers' association, then and there engaged in trying to tax the American people, was not only the confidential clerk of the chairman of the committee, but he was put over all the other clerks who were brought there from the other departments of the Government. No wonder gentlemen upon the other side who have been privy to that kind of legislative iniquity now insist that the acts of others shall be open to public scrutiny, lest their performance may be repeated. But, sir, I do protest when they stand here and lift their holy hands and cry for the light they ought first to go to the confessional and admit that their own palms need thorough purging. I do insist that the tongues of such men should call for publicity in gentle accents and with very modest intonation.

I read on:

During the time that the subcommittee was going over the House bill section by section I sat with it, reading the old and the proposed new rates paragraph by paragraph.

Why, this manufacturer's agent had a seat at the table with the committee.

Mr. Arthur B. Shelton, now the clerk of the Senate Finance Committee, alternated with me in this duty. When this was completed the subcommittee went into executive session and I was no longer present at its sittings, but remained in the rear rooms of the suite which the committee occupied and in which the clerical force was located.

Then the writer states that he never gave any illicit information to anyone regarding the bill. He continues:

As a matter of personal protection, however, I wrote President Whitman, as appears from the published correspondence, that he must not expect any information from me in view of my confidential relations with the committee, and he never received any such information.

And yet I have read you a letter where this gentleman, to use a slang expression which exactly expresses the meaning—and therefore I beg pardon for using it—I read you the letter in which North had "tipped it off" to Whitman that he had better get on the ground and look after his interests, and laid out a plan by which he would call him there, letting him know when there was danger. Once on the ground, the writer declares, Mr. Whitman could easily get the facts. Doubtless the discovery would have been speedy once he had arrived at the boarding place of the man to whose tender solicitude he had consigned "dress goods, yarns, and tops."

It is my belief that the wool manufacturers would have been in a much more favorable situation if their secretary had been free to advocate their wishes.

And yet I read you a letter in which he was charged with "dress goods, yarns, and tops," and another in which he states that he can talk to Aldrich and to Platt and to Allison and they will look after the wishes of the manufacturers. These Senators appear to have been charged with a portion of the "dress goods, yarns, and tops" trust and responsibility. So this letter does not even have the grace of a reasonable regard for truth. The letter proceeds:

The fact that I was acting as clerk to the subcommittee of the Finance Committee was universally known in Washington at the time, both in and out of Congress, and no criticism ever reached my ears. It was a frequent occurrence for some Member of Congress to say to me that the Finance Committee was fortunate in having been able to secure my services.

And now in these hours when so many declare that our country is a vast quagmire of corruption, when we are told that morals have sunk to the lowest level, when men bemoan the death of virtue and regret that the high ideals of a past age have ceased, it is indeed a refreshing, a soul-stirring thing to be able to so fortunately contrast our present mental and moral attitude with that which was observed in "the good old days," when it could be publicly known upon the streets of Washington and generally understood in the Halls of Congress that the monopolistic Wool Manufacturers' Association had not only put its confidential man into the very committee that was framing the bill that would tax every inhabitant of the Republic for their benefit, but that that man was actually framing the bill, and yet all men were so content and happy, that not even a single voice was lifted in protest. Truly we have advanced a little. As I gaze back upon that dark hour of our country's history when the Republican Party was in the saddle, when Aldrich was astride the horse, when the Wool Manufacturers' Association's hired man was acting as groom, and at the same time wearing the livery of the Federal Government, and I remember that this infamous spectacle brought never a protest from the lips of gentlemen upon the other side—when I contemplate that scene I am almost content with present conditions, I am almost constrained to agree with the old darky that "it is a God's truth that the world 'do move.'"

But, Mr. President, I proceed with this remarkable document, a part of which I am omitting:

Following my return to Boston, after the passage of the tariff bill, the officers of the National Wool Manufacturers' Association informed me that, in recognition of the arduous and responsible work which I had performed for the committee—

Not for the wool manufacturers, mark you, but for the committee; not for those who were grafting upon the Government and who had been grafting upon it for 50 years; not for them; ah, no; but in consideration of the arduous duties he had performed for the committee; in consideration of the good he had done his country and the public, looking after "dress goods, tops, and yarns"— and the serious injury to my health, which had resulted from an assignment entirely apart from my duties as secretary to the association, they believed I had been underpaid, and, accordingly, as an expression of their personal good will and regard, they presented me with the sum of $5,000. Shortly afterwards my salary was increased from $4,000 to $6,000 per annum.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggests that it would be interesting to know how much of the $5,000 he got for taking care of dress goods, yarns, and tops.

Mr. President, the only reason I have taken the time of the Senate to make these remarks is because I have been somewhat disgusted at the recent performances on the other side of the Chamber. Here are men who rise in their seats and try to give an impression to the country that the Democratic members of the Finance Committee are meeting behind locked doors; that they have excluded the press, while they are engaged in a foul conspiracy, for the purpose of doing what? Putting up the tariff? Such is the impression they would give the country, when they know that if there be a conspiracy it is a conspiracy on behalf of the American people; and if there be a plot, it is not hatching to raise the taxes upon the necessities of life, but has for its purpose a reduction of the cost of living. During the past week and to-day gentlemen have here shouted for publicity upon whose lips the word was a complete stranger. They are declaring that each word spoken shall be taken down in shorthand—they did not erstwhile so conduct their hearings. They are clamoring for time for debate—these men who gave 48 hours for the consideration and report of the bill. They demand hearings now, but they did not give us hearings then.

The Payne-Aldrich bill came from the House to the Senate on April 10. It was read twice and referred to the committee on that day. On April 12 it was reported by Mr. Aldrich with, as I have said before, 847 amendments. On April 15 it was recalled by the House. It was returned to the Senate on April 19, and was on the same day referred to Mr. Aldrich's committee; and on the same day it was reported back to the Senate.

What kind of public hearings did you have in committee then? You did not have the bill there to consider; you had the same kind of hearings that the subcommittee of the Finance Committee have been holding on this bill before it reached here, of which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] so loudly complained; but the mistake was so thoroughly exposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in his remarks the other day that I do not need further to refer to it.

You were not clamoring for publicity then; and when the bill was framed and sent here, instead of doing as the Democrats are now asking you to do, have the bill itself sent to the committee to the end that there may be hearings, and that all objections to the phraseology or the substance may be thrashed out, you reported the bill back, in the first instance in 48 hours and in the second instance upon the same day and, I apprehend, within the hour.

I would not, and I do not, direct these remarks to the Members on the other side who were not responsible; I do not direct them to the Members on the other side who have come in since; but the two loudest to proclaim their virtues and to demand the publicity are the two Senators who were members of the committee at the time the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I think that all business of the public is public business and should be publicly transacted. I think that no committee of this Senate has a right to close its doors to any man who comes there with a proper petition or remonstrance. For my part, I regret that the majority members of the Finance Committee, when they divided this work up, did not request the minority members to sit with them; but they pursued a course that is sanctioned by time and precedent of the past, if it be not sanctioned by the character of the performances of the past.

I recognize the fact that in these hearings the press ought to be permitted to be present, and I am glad to know, that which every Senator knows, that there has been no secrecy and that the press were welcome to come if they thought the news was of sufficient importance.

I am in accord with the committee in the theory that they probably get better results by requiring the filing of briefs than they do by long speeches, which generally consume the time of the committee without going to the point or arriving at the kernel of the discussion. I am in sympathy with the idea of printing those briefs, and of printing them rapidly, and I think the committee is in sympathy with it.

The Democratic Party has nothing to conceal in this contest. It is not representing special interests; it is not here to add to the profits of manufacturers by taxing the people. It is not committed to the doctrine of laying burdens upon the great masses in order that money may be gathered into the pockets of a favored class, even though it be engaged in manufacturing. We are endeavoring to lift the burdens; but in taking them off we will have regard for the fact that the system, however iniquitous and however villainous in its origin, has been so fastened upon the country that the work of reduction should be executed with care and patience. It will not be done with the strong arm. It can not be accomplished in a day's time. We recognize the difficulties and will meet them to the best of our ability. Every man on this side of the Chamber is trying to solve the problem honestly and fairly. When our work is accomplished we will not have a perfect bill; there will be some mistakes; but there will be no "jokers" written into it by the paid employees of the woolen manufacturers or any other class of manufacturers. There are not in the employ of the Democratic Finance Committee men who are also in the pay of those who make a profit by the aid of the Government.

We may make mistakes, but they will be honest mistakes, and in the end we will have taken the first great step in that advance which will ultimately lead to that happy day when the American Government will not tax one class of men for the emolument and enrichment of another class of men.

So, Mr. President, I am in favor of this resolution; I am in favor of it with all of the amendments which have been proposed. I am glad we have arrived at a time now when we can say that private hearings are at an end and when the employment by committees of men who are also employed by the protected industries has finally come to its infamous end.

Mr. President, I desire to have printed in full as a part of my remarks, and at the end of them, the several letters excerpts from which I have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The letters referred to are as follows:

ELSMERE, April 4, 1897.

DEAR MR. WHITMAN: Now, about the tariff. I can not, after what has been said to me in reference to my confidential relations with the committee, keep you posted as I would like to do. But if I find that it is desirable that you should come on here I will telegraph you that the situation requires attention, and you will doubtless have no trouble in finding out what is the matter.

In the meanwhile let me ask this question: Should tops at a 24-cent line have the same compensatory duty as yarns at a 30-cent line? Should tops at a 24-cent line have a compensatory duty of 27½ cents? Putting that value line so low was unfortunate, in view of the appearance it presents of making the compensatory duty alone more than 100 per cent. I am aware that the same thing occurs in cloths at the 40-cent line, but this tops is a new paragraph and will get closer scrutiny on that account. I do not want you to intimate to any Senator that I have written you on this subject, but to consider whether you can not, when the time comes, suggest raising the value line in the top paragraph to meet this kind of criticism.

I am well, although I am kept at work from 10 a. m. until midnight. There is an immense amount of detail, and I have not sufficient clerical assistance as yet. I am the only person whom the committee allows in its meetings, and it makes it very hard, but I expect to pull through all right. The retroactive provision of the House bill is an inexcusable thing, and it can not stand an instant in the courts, nor, as things appear, in the bill as it goes to the Senate. At present progress it will take a month to report the bill. How it will appear in comparison with the House bill can not yet be said.

Truly, yours,

S. N. D. NORTH.

BOSTON, April 6, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: I have received your letter of the 4th, for which I am obliged. I suppose there is nothing for me to do but accept the situation as regards your keeping me posted, although I had supposed that, in reference to the interests you represent, you would be at liberty to communicate freely with your associates. It seems to me only reasonable that you should have this right.

In my opinion the committee will find it impossible to modify the duties on wool, but in the event of their succeeding in securing such modification there should be no change in the duties on goods.

Mr. North, no change ought to be made in the top schedule. It is right just as it stands. It is an enormous reduction from the McKinley law. No possible legislation in connection with the woolen schedule could be so dangerous to the woolen industry as legislation that would favor the importation of tops, and all the representatives of the woolgrowers would oppose legislation that would in any way favor the importation of tops. There was never any complaint of the top paragraph in the McKinley law. There was never any complaint of the construction of the tariff laws in reference to tops prior to 1890. There should be no complaint now in reference to the proposed duties on tops, which are very materially lower than they have been at any time since 1867. I depend upon you to look out for my interests in this regard. You know how important it is, not only to me, but to the whole worsted industry of the United States, that such rates of duty should be imposed upon tops as will enable them to be made here and not be imported from foreign countries. If there is a single point in reference to this that you do not understand, you ought to communicate with me at once, so that it may be explained. There would be no difficulty in my satisfying the members of the subcommittee on this point, and if there is the slightest danger of any change I must see these gentlemen before it is too late. If they understand the matter properly they will make no change. The prosperity of the woolen industry in this country depends wholly upon the ability of the domestic manufacturers to manufacture the tops here. What a ridiculous position we should be in under any legislation that would favor importing tops and discontinue making them here! * * *

Yours, very truly,

WM. WHITMAN.

BOSTON, June 2, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: We all depend upon you to watch closely our interests, to see that nothing is overlooked or neglected by our friends on the committee. I have no doubt they will do all they can do, but with so many interests to look after, our special representative must see to it that our interest receives proper attention.

Yours, very truly,

WM. WHITMAN.

BOSTON, June 9, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: [After some discussion of other matters.] Bear in mind that I am depending upon you wholly to look after my interests in connection with the tariff bill. I do not want anything that is not given to others, but it is of the greatest importance that the Arlington Mills products have the full measure of protection accorded to associated industries.

Yours, very truly,

WM. WHITMAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10, 1897.

DEAR MR. WHITMAN: I have your letter and the memorandum for Senator Aldrich regarding cotton yarns. I am somewhat at a loss to know what is best to do these days. Senator Aldrich has been seriously sick, and he does not appear to be getting any better. I am doubtful if he will appear again in tariff matters for some time, not merely because of his health, but because I suspect he feels keenly the manner in which the Republican Senators are treating the tariff bill, so largely the work of himself. The general character of the bill is being changed at nightly meetings, which are more like town meetings than meetings of the Finance Committee, and it must be humiliating and galling to him in the extreme. I have not heard him say a word, and I may be all wrong in my surmise. He has not read his mail for 10 days—and that is one reason for my thinking as I do—although his sickness is doubtless sufficient to account for that. What will happen when the textile schedules are reached—which ought to be by next week—I can not say. I will do the best I can with Mr. Allison when the time comes, but he knows nothing about the understanding I have with Aldrich on the worsted-yarn schedule. The cotton manufacturers, I understand, are coming next week to demand additional duties on certain paragraphs because of the 20 per cent duty on cotton.

Please say nothing to anybody about what I have written as to Mr. Aldrich. I have said it to no one else, and I may be all wrong, as I trust I am.

Sincerely, yours,

S. N. D. NORTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 20, 1897.

DEAR MR. WHITMAN: It is lucky I was here and just in the position I am. It has given me a whole day to work on the matter and get it right, and with Aldrich away there is no one on the committee who knows anything about it. But Allison and Platt trust me, and I expect they will both agree to what I have asked. I went all over the matter with them last evening.

Truly, yours,

S. N. D. NORTH.

BOSTON, July 10, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. NORTH: I am unable to go to Washington, and have no one to look out for my interests there but yourself, and I depend upon you. Of course, Messrs. Aldrich and Dingley will do all they can, but I depend upon your letting them know what I need. I depend upon you. Dress goods, yarns, and tops.

Yours, very truly,

WM. WHITMAN.

MR. WHITMAN AT WASHINGTON.

In a case which was on trial in Boston in April, 1902, Mr. William Whitman was cross-examined, with the following result:

"Q. Now, you say you were never a lobbyist? 'Lobbyist' is an elastic phrase. You went to Washington; you have been on to Washington a good deal to interview committees and Members of Congress in support of certain legislation, haven't you—tariff legislation?—A. I have never solicited. I don't know just what you mean.

"Q. Perhaps you can just listen to my question. I think my question admits of an answer yes or no. [Question read by the stenographer.]—A. I have interviewed committees; yes.

"Q. And Members of Congress outside the sessions of committees?—A. I don't think I ever did.

"Q. How long were you in Washington at a time?—A. I have been in Washington two and three weeks at a time.

"Q. And do you mean to tell me that you never said anything to Members of Congress outside of the committee room?—A. I never asked anybody in my life, anybody connected with Congress, to vote for any specific thing in my life.

"Q. And that you are willing to say?—A. It is the truth.

"Q. Now, you yourself, haven't you been paid for your services in connection with tariff matters when you first went on there?—A. No.

"Q. Do you mean to tell me that you did not receive compensation from other manufacturers when you first went to Washington in regard to tariff matters?—A. I will tell you all about it, but if you ask me the question in that form I will say no; I was never compensated for anything.

MERELY A SMALL PURSE.

"Q. Very well. If the form of the question permits that answer, what do you mean? What is your explanation?—A. Why, much to my surprise, there was, somewhere about 1883, I think it was in 1883, a few gentlemen got together and made up a small purse to help me, and gave it to me. I have forgotten how much it was. But I had been paying my own expenses there and had been there a great deal. That was way back 20 years ago.

"Q. You say you were paying your own expenses? Do you mean that those were paid by the Arlington Mills?—A. What?

"Q. Do you mean you were paying them, the Arlington Mills were paying them?—A. I don't know. I don't remember now who paid the expenses.

"Q. I thought you said you had been paying your own.—A. I paid them myself; whether I was reimbursed by the Arlington Mills or not for my expenses I don't remember.

"Q. You often pay the expenses of witnesses.—A. Well, in traveling, you know, and those kind of things, you hardly ever collect.

"Q. You generally collected from the Arlington Mills all your expenses in Washington, didn't you? You would not undertake to say that all this work that you did in the tariff was a waste of time?—A. Well, if I have not collected my expenses I have been very remiss."

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, December 3, 1908.

Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: If the Ways and Means Committee desires, I will be glad to appear before it and state, under oath, all the facts connected with my services with the Senate Finance Committee in 1894 and 1897, so far as I can recall them. I will recount these facts so that you may determine whether you desire to summon me as a witness.

When the Wilson tariff bill of 1894 was about to reach the Senate, Senator Aldrich said to me one evening that he was entirely without expert clerical assistance in connection with the work on the tariff bill, and without any funds to pay for it, and that he urgently desired that I would remain in Washington and assist him while the bill was passing through the Senate. I consulted with the officers of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, of which I was the secretary, and they consented to Senator Aldrich's request. Accordingly I remained in Washington during the entire period that the Wilson bill was under consideration in the Senate, occupying a desk in Senator Aldrich's rooms in the Maltby Building. My duties were mainly the care of the correspondence, the making of tables, percentages, etc.

When the tariff bill of 1897 reached the Senate Senator Aldrich made the same request of me, and, again after consulting the officers of the association, I went to Washington. From the date of my arrival until the bill became a law I acted as the clerk, or secretary, of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee. I was in charge of a number of clerks, who were loaned to the committee by the Treasury Department and the General Appraisers in New York. My duties were to handle, acknowledge, brief, and file the correspondence of the committee, which was enormous, sometimes reaching 200 letters a day, and to prepare such tables and computations as the subcommittee desired.

During the time that the subcommittee was going over the House bill, section by section, I sat with it, reading the old and the proposed new rates, paragraph by paragraph. Mr. Arthur B. Shelton, now the clerk of the Senate Finance Committee, alternated with me in this duty. When this was completed the subcommittee went into executive session, and I was no longer present at its sittings, but remained in the rear rooms of the suite which the committee occupied and in which the clerical force was located. I had no knowledge of a single rate on a single article agreed upon by the subcommittee until the night before the bill was reported to the Senate. On that night Senator Aldrich sent for me, and at his dictation, from a copy of the House bill, upon which he had made notes from time to time, and which never passed out of his possession, I wrote out the changes in the bill. When it was completed I took the bill to the Government Printing Office and read the proof of it as fast as it was put into type. It was about 5 o'clock in the morning when the work was finished, and the bill was reported at noon the same day.

I was never in a position to give illicit information to anyone regarding the terms of the bill. As a matter of personal protection, however, I wrote President Whitman, as appears from the published correspondence, that he must not expect any information from me in view of my confidential relations with the committee, and he never received any such information.

I told him also that if it should come to my knowledge that the situation was one that required his attention, I would telegraph him and that he "would doubtless have no difficulty in finding out what is the matter." I so wrote because I had already learned that Senators Aldrich, Allison, Platt, and Wolcott, the members of the subcommittee, talked with the utmost frankness to all the representatives of manufacturing interests who personally called upon them. They made no secret of their personal views as to what the rates of duty on any article should be, and they talked to hundreds of people.

As to the phraseology of the woolen schedule and the rates of duty to be given woolen goods, I was never consulted by the subcommittee and never communicated with except in writing. My recollection is that on several occasions Mr. Whitman wrote me suggestions regarding this schedule. They were transmitted to the committee with hundreds of similar suggestions. It is my belief that the wool manufacturers would have been in a much more favorable situation if their secretary had been free to advocate their wishes.

One does not know Senator Aldrich if he imagines that he is a man whose judgment on any question connected with tariff rates can be influenced in the slightest degree by the presence or the personality of any person employed to represent a particular industry. I have never known a man who was less susceptible to this sort of influence.

The fact that I was acting as clerk to the subcommittee of the Finance Committee was universally known in Washington at the time, both in and out of Congress, and no criticism ever reached my ears. It was a frequent occurrence for some Member of Congress to say to me that the Finance Committee was fortunate in having been able to secure my services

All the correspondence which Mr. Bennett obtained from Mr. Whitman's files, by order of the court, in the libel suit against a Lynn newspaper, was published at the time of the suit, some eight years ago, and commented upon in the newspapers. I do not recall an instance in which it was suggested that it revealed anything which I have any reason to regret or to explain.

And that is the fact. I discharged to the best of my ability the duties of clerk of the Senate subcommittee, which Senator Aldrich urgently asked me to undertake. I kept inviolate, so far as I knew them (which was very little), the secrets of the subcommittee. I had no hand whatever in the drafting of a single phrase or rate in the tariff bill reported by that committee to the Senate. I did a lot of hard work, but I did it honorably, as a duty which I owed to the public, and for which I expected no reward.

Following my return to Boston, after the passage of the tariff bill, the officers of the National Wool Manufacturers' Association informed me that, in recognition of the arduous and responsible work which I had performed for the committee and the serious injury to my health, which had resulted from an assignment entirely apart from my duties as secretary of the association, they believed I had been underpaid, and, accordingly, as an expression of their personal good will and regard, they presented me with the sum of $5,000. Shortly afterwards my salary was increased from $4,000 to $6,000 per annum.

Very respectfully,

S. N. D. NORTH.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise for one thing for the purpose of stating that Senators on this side are not in combination with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to filibuster. I am very glad to see that there seems to be a unanimity of feeling as to the hearings and as to the publicity that shall be given.

There is another matter, however, about which I desire to speak, and about which I think we ought to have some information. I believe it was the President who first stated that manufacturers—citizens of the United States—would be hung as high as Haman if they induced a panic. I also believe that it has been stated many times since by members of the Cabinet and by a leader in the House of Representatives that the law was to be invoked against manufacturers who reduced wages. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] on Friday last attempted to correct the erroneous impression, as he called it, which has been created by the remarks made by Secretary Redfield, and had his speech ordered to be published in the RECORD.

I should like to know from the chairman of the Finance Committee, or from any other Senator, if he is prepared to give the information, whether there has been any attempt made to determine whether wages have been reduced in the United States; if any attempt has been made to discover whether there has been an actual loss to business; whether there has been that apprehension in the country which has manifested itself in the reduction of pay rolls or the reduction either in the number of employees or in the wages which they have received? In other words, it seems to me so much has been made of this matter that there must be some foundation for the apprehension which Senators and others have felt as to the effect of the proposed tariff measure, or from the proposition to enact it, even as to existing conditions. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, if anything has come to his knowledge along the line I have suggested?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that I have no information that there has been, up to this time, any reduction in wages in the industries of this country. I suppose, however, that the remarks of the Secretary of Commerce to which allusion has been made grew out of the fact, not that reductions of wages have been made, but out of the threats which are constantly being made by the protected industries of the country that unless they are permitted to retain the privileges and the favoritism accorded them under the Republican law they will reduce the wages of their employees instead of cutting off their profits.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the Senator in mind any such case to which he can call the attention of the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. Only, Mr. President, that in our conferences with representatives of the protected industries they have constantly asserted that if the duties on their products were reduced they would have to cut the wages, and would cut the wages, of their employees. If the Senator will read the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives I think he will see that the testimony of the representatives of the favored industries is full of threats that if the Democrats should reduce the protection now accorded them to the slightest degree that they would reduce the wages of their laborers and recoup themselves in that way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator mean that any manufacturers have appeared before the Finance Committee, or before any member of that committee, and stated, as a threat, that they would reduce wages, or have they said that certain proposed changes would make it necessary for them to reduce their expenses?

Mr. SIMMONS. They have done so repeatedly in private conversations with me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator object to naming some manufacturer who said that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that so many of these people have been to see me that I can not carry their names in my mind; but in conversation with me representatives of these industries——

Mr. TOWNSEND. What industries?

Mr. SIMMONS. Have constantly intimated——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Could the Senator mention some particular industry?

Mr. SIMMONS. That if the duties on their product were reduced——

Mr. GORE. The blast-furnace people.

Mr. SIMMONS. The blast-furnace people and others, too—that if the duties on their products were reduced they would have to reduce, and would reduce, the wages of their employees. If the Senator will read the House hearings he will have no difficulty whatever in finding scores of just such statements as that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did the Senator understand that to be a threat or the statement of a fact?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator can construe that in whatever way he may see fit. He can construe it into a threat or he can construe it into a statement; but I take it that the Secretary of Commerce in making this statement had reference to the constant warning, if the Senator prefers that word, by the representatives of the protected industries that if there was a reduction in duties they would not themselves suffer that reduction in their profits, but they would place it upon the shoulders of their laborers and employees.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the Senator from North Carolina any knowledge as to whether any steps are to be taken to determine whether the manufacturers have rightfully reduced the cost of labor or not?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have said to the Senator that I know of no reductions that have taken place up to this time. I will state further to the Senator that I know of no arrangements that have been made in any direction for an investigation in case there should be a reduction in wages as the result of the reductions which are likely to be made in the tariff bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is it proposed by the Senator or his committee, to his knowledge, to compel manufacturers to continue doing business if they have to do it at a loss?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's committee has not had any proposition before it nor under consideration with reference to what is to happen when the tariff duties are reduced.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would it be possible for the Senator to furnish the Senate a list of the gentlemen who have made this threat, as he calls it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can furnish the Senator with the testimony before the House committee; I can furnish the Senator with the testimony or such parts of the testimony as have been taken down before the subcommittees of the Senate Committee on Finance. I can furnish the Senator, too, with the briefs which these interests have filed, and if the Senator will read those briefs he will see running all through them this very threat or warning.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator make no distinction between a threat and an expression of apprehension as to what may happen?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have said to the Senator that he could apply to this declaration of the interests whatever term of designation or definition he may see fit. I merely state to the Senator the facts.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator from North Carolina has seen fit to apply the term "threats" to an expression of apprehension merely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution as modified.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, has an amendment been proposed to the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two amendments have been proposed and have been accepted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. BURTON. I should like to hear them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as it has been modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Finance Committee be requested to report to the Senate a full list of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the majority members of the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof for hearing or conference relative to H. R. 3321; and that the minority members of the committee be requested to report to the Senate the names of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the minority members of the committee relative to H. R. 3321.

Said committee shall also, as far as possible, report the names of all manufacturers, corporations, importers, and other persons who have appeared before the Finance Committee or any subcommittee thereof when it had under consideration what are commonly known as the Dingley bill and the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Said committee shall further report whether at the times last aforesaid any clerks or experts employed or used by said committee were furnished by or were in the employment of manufacturers or associations interested in maintaining a high tariff tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question before voting upon the resolution. Can the Senator from North Carolina tell me the names of the experts employed by the subcommittee who have charge of the chemical schedule?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not able to give the names of the experts. The Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is the chairman of that subcommittee. I have not myself personally met with them at any time and do not know the names of the experts, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], as I understand, compose the subcommittee on the chemical schedule.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that in all of these cases I have simply, upon the request of the chairman of the subcommittee, asked the department to send us an expert upon a given schedule. I am not able to tell the Senator what expert has been assigned to the committee having charge of the chemical schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that none of the members of that subcommittee are in the Chamber. I will ask a further question.

Mr. PENROSE. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is here.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator from Colorado is a member of that subcommittee.

Mr. SIMMONS. He is not.

Mr. SMOOT. The members of the subcommittee on the chemical schedule, I understand, are the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

I will ask this question: Does the Senator know whether the subcommittee has employed anyone outside of the Government service?

Mr. SIMMONS. What subcommittee?

Mr. SMOOT. The subcommittee that has the chemical schedule in charge.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would know if there were such a thing?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I would; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator does not know?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know; I have heard of no suggestion of that kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution as modified.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, while I am of the opinion that the resolution ought to be referred to the committee to which it relates, together with the amendments which have been proposed and accepted, I shall not insist upon that reference and I shall not oppose the passage of the resolution. I was opposed this morning to the passage of the resolution in the form in which it then appeared, because I thought that under the resolution—and I still think it is capable of that interpretation—the committee was to be required to furnish Senators the names of all persons who had conferred with any member of the majority of the Finance Committee. That, of course, as has been explained, is an impossibility. Numerous gentlemen have appeared and talked and conferred with members of the majority, as with members of the minority, whose names have not been preserved and whose statements have not been preserved. But I am assured by the Senators on the other side that no such purpose as that is embraced in the resolution, and that no such construction as that is to be given to the resolution.

With that understanding, Mr. President, and with the amendments, I have no sort of objection to the passage of the resolution, although in the future I think I shall insist upon these resolutions first going before the Finance Committee. I think it would save time and save discussion, and I think it would be the orderly way in which to deal with these resolutions.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I understand the resolution is still open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. LIPPITT. I offer the following amendment:

And that all briefs that may have been submitted by such parties, or that may hereafter be submitted, in connection with House bill 3321 shall be promptly printed and made available for public use.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the Secretary may read that amendment, Mr. President. I did not hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the resolution, the following:

And that all briefs that may have been submitted by such parties, or that may hereafter be submitted, in connection with House bill 3321 shall be promptly printed and made available for public use.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that amendment is offered, I shall ask that this resolution be referred to the Finance Committee. I have stated frankly that it is my purpose to-morrow, when the committee meets, to present that question to the committee; and I have not the slightest doubt that the committee will order these briefs to be printed. I think it is unnecessary to be instructing the Finance Committee about all of its duties in this matter. If it is insisted upon, I shall ask that the resolution be referred to the committee, and we can bring it out in such form as the committee may desire to present it to the Senate.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, of course the only motive I have in this matter is to obtain the information that is contained in these briefs for public use and for the use of the Senate. If the Senator from North Carolina is willing to state that he will have these documents printed, and printed promptly, and made available, of course it will give the matter an entirely different aspect.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not make that statement.

Mr. LIPPITT. One of the other members of his own committee has been arguing here for some time this morning that there is no necessity for giving out this information, or that if it is given it ought to be given at some time in the remote future; that it should not be given until all briefs have been presented, and further than that, that it should not be given until the committee is satisfied that all briefs have been submitted. For my part, I think that is not the attitude that ought to be taken in regard to these matters. If the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee agrees with that statement of the case, I should like to have the judgment of this body upon whether that is or is not what they wish in regard to it. Of course, if the Senator is willing to say in behalf of his committee that this information will be given, and given promptly, I shall be very glad to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not willing to say anything except what I have said, and that is that I shall submit this question to the Finance Committee at its meeting to-morrow—not the meeting of the majority members, but the meeting of the full committee—and I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that I do not know of any Senator on this side who is opposed to printing the briefs. Personally, I am in favor of it, and as far as I recall I have heard no expressions of opposition to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the resolution is before the Senate. Of course, if the Senate wishes to vote down the amendment, well and good. But before the vote is taken upon the amendment I should like to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island certain amendments to it: First, that whatever number should be printed ought to be named in the amendment; and, second, that instead of being "for public use" it ought to be "for the use of the Senate."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senator from Utah. My attention was distracted and I did not catch his proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I was saying that I took it for granted that the resolution was before the Senate, and that if the amendment to the resolution was to be voted upon certain amendments ought first to be made to it, in my opinion. First, we ought to state the number to be printed, because unless that is done the Public Printer certainly will not know how many are desired.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator from Rhode Island to be insisting upon his amendment. Does the Senator insist upon his amendment?

Mr. LIPPITT. The amendment has been accepted by the originator of the resolution and has been made part of it. I suppose it is rather beyond my hands at the present moment.

Mr. PENROSE. I think by unanimous consent the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, which is a very proper one, could be embodied in the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that the number be 2,000 and that——

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania has accepted the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes. The Senator has no real objection to the amendment, has he?

Mr. SIMMONS. In that event I move that the whole matter be referred to the Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a debatable question.

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll to determine whether or not a quorum is present.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Overman	Stephenson
Bacon	Jackson	Owen	Sterling
Bankhead	James	Page	Stone
Brady	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Sutherland
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Swanson
Catron	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Robinson	Tillman
Colt	La Follette	Root	Townsend
Crawford	Lane	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lea	Shafroth	Walsh
Fall	Lippitt	Sheppard	Warren
Fletcher	Lodge	Sherman	Weeks
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Goff	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gore	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Md.
Hollis	O'Gorman	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is, Shall the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and the amendments, be referred to the Committee on Finance? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I wish to say only two or three words in regard to this proposition.

A resolution has been discussed here at some length to obtain certain information in regard to individuals who have appeared before the various subcommittees of the Committee on Finance for the purpose of testifying in regard to the tariff bill. Two amendments have been made to the original resolution, calling for additional information similar to that asked for in the original resolution.

The original resolution and its amendments have been accepted by the chairman of the Finance Committee, and he has announced his willingness to have them adopted. The resolution having arrived at that stage, I have proposed that there shall be included in the original resolution an amendment asking that the information filed with the committee in the form of briefs, in regard to which considerable has already been said, shall also be transmitted to the Senate.

This matter was brought up before the Senate practically a week ago—on last Wednesday—at which time the chairman of the Finance Committee said that he proposed to bring the matter before his committee the next day. At the same time he used the expression that he and the other Senators on that side of the Chamber were not asking for additional light on this subject, and that the information was being asked for by the Republican Members of this body. I quite agree with that statement of the facts; and it is in accordance with the position that we then took that I now ask to have this matter included in the resolution.

The Senator from North Carolina now says that he may take up this matter to-morrow. If he is inclined to take it up to-morrow and to favor it, it certainly will do no harm to have the request made in the resolution. There is in my mind a certain amount of doubt as to how far he may be able to influence all the majority members of the Finance Committee to sustain the position that he himself apparently takes. In either case I can see no possible reason for an objection on the part of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to having this matter discussed and settled.

For my part, I believe it is as much to the interest of the Democratic Members of this body that this information shall be given as it is to the interest of the Republican Members, if not more so. I hope the resolution will prevail.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the tariff is up for discussion, and I should like to say a few words regarding the portion of the legislative program I have offered for the consideration of the Senate which relates to the tariff.

It will be observed that the first inquiry which the resolution I have offered makes of the Finance Committee, and upon which it calls for a report, is as follows:

(a) Whether the prices of any farm products in the United States are raised above the international level of prices by the duties now imposed on such products; and if so, what products, and whether such duties on such products can be abolished or materially reduced without injury to American industry, and to what extent. In such inquiry shall be included meats, cheese, wool, sugar, tobacco, wines, citrus fruits, and dried and preserved fruits.

I might have added to that list the cereals and other products of the farm upon which we now have certain duties and which are kept on the dutiable list by the Underwood bill.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very material inquiry. We all know that the Republican Party sought to maintain its high protective duties upon manufactured products by organizing a union between the manufacturers and the farmers under which, while maintaining for the manufacturers high duties, aggregating in some instances as much as 100 or 125 per cent, they also imposed duties upon imaginary imports of farm products, and thus sought to impress the farmer with the view that he was a beneficiary of a protective tariff, and therefore should join the manufacturers in its support.

So far as I know, we never have had any definite statistics presented to Congress as to what the effect of these duties was upon farm products in the way of raising above the international level the price of farm products inside the United States. Of course we all knew that the effect of a protective tariff is to raise above the international prices the prices of domestic manufactured products similar to those on the dutiable list. That constitutes a subject of complaint and of indictment against the Republican Party—that it has sought, through this protective system, not simply to secure a revenue upon imports, but also to impose upon the consumers throughout the entire country added prices for the domestic manufactures. The statistics have been absolutely convincing that the high protective tariff has had this effect, and that wherever the Government would get $1 in duties the manufacturers were able to impose upon the consumers of the country enhanced prices to the extent of approximately $10. Thus the taxing power was exercised by the Government to the extent of only about one-tenth and by the manufacturers to the extent of about nine-tenths

We all know that this nefarious system existed, and it has been proved by the statistics, but we never have had any showing as to whether or not these duties imposed upon farm products had the effect of raising, inside of the tariff walls, the prices of domestic farm products to the extent of the duty. It seems to me that after submitting for so many years to this system of exaggerated taxation it is about time that we should know whether the farmers have been the beneficiaries of the duties imposed by the Republican Party, which they inserted in the tariff bill with a view to obtaining the farmers' support for the high duties upon manufactured products.

I hope the Finance Committee will take up this question seriously. I hope they will make use of the bureau in the Department of Commerce known as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and the experienced and capable experts there, with a view of presenting to Congress and to the people of the United States a definite statement as to the effect of the duty upon corn in raising the price of corn, and as to the effect of the duty upon wheat, barley, oats, and other farm products in raising the domestic price of those farm products. I should like, also, to have a statement presented as to what effect these duties have had upon such products as wool, wines, citrus fruits, and dried and preserved fruits.

Inasmuch as there are practically no imports of most of the farm products, and as to most farm products this country is an exporting country, I am inclined to think that the duties imposed by our tariff upon such products have been simply fictitious duties, without any substantial revenue return. If they are such, they ought to be taken out of the proposed tariff bill by the Democratic Party, which doubtless intends to deal with this great subject in all sincerity and candor toward the people.

We have for years condemned the treaty between the manufacturers on the one side and the farmers upon the other, between the wool manufacturers upon the one side and the woolgrowers upon the other, under which, by a community of interest, an exaggerated tariff has been maintained, to the injury of the American consumers. It seems to me the Democratic Party ought not to and will not be willing to maintain this system of deceit and of delusion. If, as a matter of fact, these duties have raised the domestic price of farm products, cereals, and others, we ought to know it. If they have not, and if they have been substantially without revenue to the country, these duties on farm products should be abolished.

It seems to me the Democratic Party should not obtain favor for its system of tariff taxation by permitting the farmer to rest under the delusion that a Democratic tariff is imposing duties upon farm products, the alleged purpose of which is to raise the domestic price of farm products.

We are complaining throughout the country of the high price of food. We are complaining throughout the country of the high price of farm products. The high cost of living is a question that is being considered in every household. We all know that farm products have increased in value and in price to a much higher degree than the manufactured products of the world. Therefore, in my judgment, we should remove all duties imposed upon farm products indigenous to the soil, requiring no stimulation in their production and none of the care essential to an infant industry. But the answer would be, if that is done, How can you contend for a duty upon sugar and wool, both of which are farm products?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. In reply to that——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if the complaint is not lodged as to the retail price of farm products rather than the price the farmer himself obtains for his productions?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think, Mr. President, the statistics show that the prices paid to the farmers themselves have vastly increased.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly, but——

Mr. NEWLANDS. And the prices which they have received have advanced within the last 15 years in a much higher degree than the products of the manufacturers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know precisely how that may be. Unquestionably they have advanced, as everything else has advanced. But my investigation has satisfied me that the inordinate price of farm products is largely due to the fact that the retailer and the middleman can put about what value they please on them. If the duty was taken off and a little reduction came as a result, I am not quite sure that the middleman and the retailer would not simply add that to his price, and we would be paying just the same.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is no question that owing to an imperfect system both of distribution and of retailing the price of farm products and of all products has been raised very largely to the consumer. I think the investigations have shown that a very large proportion of the high prices of which the people of America complain is due to the system of distribution and of retailing. But I am now speaking of the prices that the farmers receive. I assert that they have vastly increased during the past 15 years and have increased in a larger proportion than the prices of the manufactured products of the country. All I am contending for is that as to those farm products, the prices of which have not been raised to domestic consumers by duties imposed upon similar importations, we should ascertain the fact, obtain the report of a committee as to the fact, and then exercise our judgment as to whether those products shall remain upon the dutiable list or not.

I claim, Mr. President, as I was remarking a few moments ago, that in the case of farm products which may be called indigenous to the soil—the natural products of the country—which require no stimulus in order to insure their largest production, no duties whatever even under the protective system should be put upon similar products imported from abroad; that they should not be put on the tariff under the protective system because they do not protect, and they should not be put on the tariff under the revenue system because they produce no revenue.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if he is acquainted with the comparative Minneapolis and Liverpool prices of like grain during all the year or substantially all the year 1910?

Mr. NEWLANDS. As to what product?

Mr. McCUMBER. Take the grain product. Take wheat, for instance.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I am not familiar with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give the Senator one fact and ask him for his conclusion as to the cause.

The Minneapolis and the Liverpool price were almost exactly the same during the entire year 1910 on what we call No. 1 and No. 2 grades of northern wheat. If the Liverpool price measured what you might call the world's level of prices, then why was it, with a difference of about 18 cents in insurance and handling between Liverpool and Minneapolis, that the Minneapolis prices were equivalent to the Liverpool prices during that entire year?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I want an explanation of that fact from the Finance Committee, and that is one of the purposes of this inquiry. I do not pretend to be informed upon these questions and to be able to give the information, or perhaps I would not have offered this resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator, Mr. President; I should like to have the information myself, and I am perfectly willing that the Senator should get it in any way, but I thought I understood the Senator to state that from his view the tariff did not affect the price of grain in any way whatever, and therefore it should be reduced. I can explain to the Senator why the prices were nearly equal during that period.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is my view that it does not affect the price of the cereals. I do believe——

Mr. McCUMBER. What, then, does the Senator say affects it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I believe it affects the price of wines in this country, of citrus fruits, of dried and preserved fruits, of sugar, and I am inclined to think it affects the price of wool.

Right here I may say that if after a careful inquiry it is found that the imposition of these tariff duties has had the effect of raising the domestic prices above the international level, and has thus stimulated production in this country, I believe that as to those things they should go gradually to the free list and not immediately to the free list; that as to those products the price of which is not raised above the international level there is no reason for the duty, because the duty neither gives protection under the Republican theory nor gives revenue under the Democratic theory, and therefore it should be abolished.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply want to ascertain the fact as to whether the tariff has stimulated any industry in this country. If I find that it has, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall propose to urge a policy that will deal gently with that product, that will withdraw gradually the stimulating heat of a high protective tariff, so that that particular production can gradually accustom itself to a normal temperature.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wanted to ask the Senator another question, because I assume from his argument that he is desirous of getting at facts to prove whether he is in error in his conclusion as to the effect of tariff legislation upon farm products. The Senator will find, if he will look at the daily reports in Winnipeg, that the prices between Liverpool and Winnipeg, across the line, measure the difference between the cost of transportation, the insurance, and so forth, whereas on the American side we were just that difference practically above the Winnipeg price and the equivalent of the Liverpool price.

Then I wanted to call the Senator's attention to another fact, which was brought out in the Senate by a number of Senators from the reports during all of the winter of 1911, and when we were considering the reciprocity pact. During that time the average price of barley upon the American side was nearly double the price, during the entire winter, of the Canadian barley.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was nearly double?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. In other words, it measured just about equal to the 30 cents per bushel which was the tariff. Now, if the Canadian barley could have come in here free, as they had a very good crop in Canada that year, does not the Senator believe it would necessarily have lowered the price of the American barley, which was from 30 to 50 cents a bushel higher than the Canadian?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I think it would probably have lowered the price. I think it ought to lower the price, and that it would be very beneficial to the country if it did lower the price.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit it would have been beneficial to the brewers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the barley production has been so affected by a protective tariff that it commands a price high above the world's level, I agree entirely with the policy that would reduce the level of the domestic price.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator believe that——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Because it would be an imposition upon the consumers of the country to charge upon them a price very largely in excess of the international price. All the concession I make to the Senator is that in dealing with that particular product we should deal with it not radically but gradually and gently, by a process of graduated reduction year after year until the production of barley is upon a normal basis.

I wish to state to the Senator that I do not pretend to be as familiar as the Senator as to the facts regarding the international price and the domestic price of these farm products. I am unable to take up the discussion of those questions, and the Senator will excuse me from a further discussion of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to make just one suggestion to him?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that the price of farm products has risen very materially in the last 15 years; that farm products have risen in value until within the last few months considerably greater than the rise in the value of manufactured products. But I ask the Senator this one question: Does he believe that the farming or agricultural communities, by reason of this advance in the price of their products, compared with the rest of the people of the United States have been unduly prosperous?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am not prepared to answer that question. I really do not know enough of the comparative economic conditions of the different classes to be able to answer it. All that I say generally is, first, I want to ascertain not through the speech of a single Senator, not through the statistics he may present upon the floor, but through findings of fact ascertained by a skilled committee of the Senate after investigation as to whether or not these duties upon farm products have really raised the domestic price of similar products produced in the United States. And then, if I find that they do not, I would favor the obliteration of such duties from our tariff, whether it was a protective tariff or whether it was a revenue tariff.

If they do raise the price above the international level, then I should deal with them just as gently as I would with the manufacturing industries, and instead of bringing on a cataclysm in production in this country in any industry I would gradually reduce those duties so that the production could be put upon a normal basis. The more stimulated the production was by an excessive tariff duty the more gentle I would be in the process of gradually reducing the heat of the temperature under which that industry had flourished. I would not wish to withdraw the heat immediately so that the industry might be destroyed. I would wish to gradually reduce the temperature by reduced duties in such a way as to enable the industry gradually to get accustomed to a normal temperature.

Now, Mr. President, there is no question but that the duties imposed upon wines, citrus fruits, and dried and preserved fruits have had the effect of largely stimulating those industries in the United States, and particularly on the Pacific coast. There is no doubt but that the production has vastly increased there, so much so as to bring all these products within the reach of the masses of the people. There is no question but that all those duties are now too high. The Democratic Party has very wisely reduced them by its action in the House.

There is one industry, however, which I think they have attacked a little too vigorously. The duty on oranges, I believe, has been reduced from 1 cent a pound to half a cent a pound, a reduction of 50 per cent, but the duty on lemons has been reduced from 1½ cents a pound to half a cent a pound, making a reduction of considerably more than 50 per cent.

So far as the duty on oranges is concerned, the reduction was warranted, though it was a very much larger reduction than is made, on the average, throughout the entire tariff bill. But so far as the duty on lemons is concerned, I am inclined to think that the temperature has been reduced too rapidly, for we all know that these are both hothouse industries; that the orange industry is here to stay, even at this very much diminished duty, but there is considerable doubt in my mind as to whether the lemon industry is here to stay at this very largely diminished duty, something far exceeding the reduction that has been made upon the manufactured products of the country. For, recollect, the average reduction made has been from an average duty under the Payne bill of 40 per cent to an average duty of 25 per cent, a reduction of a little less than 40 per cent, whilst the duty on lemons has been reduced about 70 per cent. We all know that the lemon industry has not been established as long as the orange industry, that it takes very many years to perfect a lemon orchard, and that that industry is now in a critical condition. Is it wise simply because ultimately we have in view bringing lemons down to the free list, possibly to bring them down to a duty of 10 or 15 or 25 per cent under the revenue system, that we should now reduce the duty to a far greater degree than we have reduced the duties upon the other articles upon the dutiable list?

As to sugar, I would like to have the finding of the Finance Committee regarding the effect of the present duty of nearly 100 per cent upon domestic prices, and the effect upon the domestic industry of lowering this duty to zero. Would it have the effect, as I claimed in my remarks of last Friday, of transferring the industry of sugar raising from Louisiana and the Western States, as well as our insular possessions in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, to Cuba, and would it also result in the loss of $50,000,000 of annual revenue? Would it not be better to materially reduce the duty temporarily to 50 per cent, and later on to 25 per cent, rather than displace and destroy an industry upon which the prosperity of so large a part of our own country, as well as of our insular possessions, depends?

Now, I am in doubt as to the effect of the tariff on wool. I am in doubt as to whether the high duty imposed upon wool has really raised the price of the domestic wool above the international level. We hear varying statements as to that. It seems to me it ought to be a fact that could be ascertained beyond peradventure.

If, as a matter of fact, the price of domestic wool has not been raised above the international price by the very high duty imposed by the Payne tariff, then from the protective standpoint certainly that duty is not required, and the only question which remains is as to whether we shall maintain it as a revenue duty. With that duty we now get about $7,000,000 annually from raw wool, and certainly no Democrat should vote for the entire abolition of the duty if while securing $7,000,000 of revenue from it it has not, as a matter of fact, raised the domestic price of domestic wool.

But, on the other hand, Mr. President, we hear it stated that the effect of that duty has been to raise in a considerable degree the price of domestic wool over the international price. If it has, and if the effect, therefore, has been to stimulate the production of wool in this country above the normal level, and people have been induced by the existing condition to go largely into wool production, then I will say that very condition appeals to Democrats simply to reduce that duty gradually, so that ultimately the production of wool in this country will be put upon a normal basis, and in order to act intelligently upon this matter it seems to me it is incumbent that some committee, acting with authority, should investigate the statistics, ascertain the facts, and report the facts to Congress.

Of course we are told that every individual Senator can examine the statistics. It is true that every individual Senator can, if he chooses, inquire as to the statistics of every item in this tariff bill, and the items number 4,000; he can devote his entire lifetime to statistics to the utter neglect of his other legislative duties; but it seems to me that there is an orderly way to go about it, and that is either through a tariff commission, for which I have always stood and for which I still stand, or through a bureau such as has been organized in the Department of Commerce, or through a committee of Congress, which has all the sources of information open to it. As we have chosen to rely upon a committee of Congress charged with that duty it seems to me that the Committee on Finance should present to us some reliable statement as to the facts gained through investigations which it makes, with its opportunities to reach out to all the sources of information, and with its opportunities to secure the best expert assistance in both this and foreign countries; and that if we are to act scientifically not in shaping a protective system but in reducing the abnormalities of a protective system, we should do this upon information and not upon impulse.

Mr. President, we are dealing with a question which the Democratic platform declares is intimately connected with the business of the country. The Democrats of the country in convention assembled declared that this was intimately connected with the business of the country; that it expected only the ultimate accomplishment, not the immediate accomplishment, of what it desired by processes that would involve neither injury nor destruction to any legitimate industry.

Of course, we are told that the words "legitimate industry" mean economically legitimate, not legally legitimate. I happened to be upon the committee which framed that platform. I heard no such refinements there. I assumed, and I think the committee assumed, that any industry was legitimate which was legally organized in this country and under public policies that permitted its organization. Under the administration of both parties from time immemorial duties have been imposed upon sugar and wool, and the industries of producing commodities were certainly legitimate industries.

Mr. President, I believe that if the Finance Committee will occupy itself in giving us the basic facts we shall then be in a position where each Senator can exercise his judgment; and I hope that this opportunity, the first which the Democratic Party has had for many years, of basing its action upon the intelligence and the information of the members of the Democratic Party in Congress, instead of mere juggling adjustments made between industries and sections, will not be lost.

I have always believed that we could organize a tariff board, which, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, proceeding under a rule fixed by Congress, would relieve us of much of the burden of this work of adjustment, and could accomplish the work much more intelligently than we could accomplish it, not because this body would be inferior in intelligence, but because a specialized board, devoting its entire time to a particular duty under a rule fixed by Congress, would be more likely to produce a satisfactory result than could be accomplished by bringing together 96 minds in the Senate and 435 minds in the other House in the adjustment, and the nice adjustment, of 4,000 items in a tariff bill

We never hesitated when we came to the great and important question of railroad rates which involves practically a tax upon the transportation of the country, involving classifications and equitable adjustments between shippers and communities. We did not hesitate, under a rule fixed by Congress, to organize that commission as a servant of Congress to carry out its will; and the time will come when the Democratic Party, in my judgment, will see the wisdom of organizing such a board, which, acting under a rule fixed by the Democracy, will proceed to a scientific and equitable adjustment of this question.

It is true that we have made progress by the organization of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce relating to this subject, but the difficulty with the bureau is that the chief of the bureau is always a partisan; that the bureau chief changes with every administration; and that there remains no tradition, no precedent, no accumulated and composite judgment such as exist in an administrative tribunal that can be handed down continuously and consecutively as a guide to action. That has been the great trouble with our Bureau of Corporations in questions relating to interstate trade and the trusts. Had we organized that bureau just as we organized the Interstate Commerce Commission and given them jurisdiction over the trusts and had appointed to it from three to five capable commissioners from both political parties to hear complaints and to guide and control the prosecutions under the Sherman Act, under rules made by Congress, we would by this time have reached an adjustment of the interstate-trade question, as we have reached an adjustment of the interstate-transportation question.

Interstate trade and interstate exchange are just as much a part of interstate commerce as is interstate transportation, and the wisdom which guided us in the creation of a commission to regulate transportation, under rules fixed by Congress, should have guided us with reference both to interstate trade and to banking and exchange. Had that been accomplished at the time of the enactment of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and had such a board been charged with its administration and enforcement, we would have been free to-day from almost all the evils that afflict us with reference to interstate trade, just as we are free to-day from almost all of the evils that have afflicted us regarding interstate transportation.

So, I hope, Mr. President, that the Democratic Party, while felicitating itself upon the organization of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, will supplement the creation of that bureau by adding to it a board similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which, investigating questions, hearing the complaints of importers upon the one hand and of the domestic producers upon the other, will, under a rule fixed by Congress—a Republican rule if the Republicans are in power, a Democratic rule if the Democrats are in power—bring about a satisfactory adjustment of this great question of the tariff, which the Democratic Party declares is and has been intimately connected with the business of the country and ought to be taken out of purely partisan administration, and, above all, should be taken out of the juggling adjustments which, whether under Republican or Democratic administration, prevail in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. President, subdivision B of this resolution, in regard to a legislative program, relating to tariff taxation, calls upon the Finance Committee to report what products now upon the dutiable list should be put upon the free list. Of course, this committee will do that in reporting the bill, but I should like a report from the Finance Committee, outside of the bill itself, stating what products now upon the dutiable list should be put on the free list, and the reason why. I think such information will enable every Member of this body to act upon this subject, and we will not be herded together, directed by the impulse that has been given from this direction or that.

Subdivision C provides that the Finance Committee shall ascertain and report whether it is practicable and advisable to change all duties from a specific to an ad valorem basis. So far as I am concerned, I believe that we should change to ad valorem duties, and the House of Representatives has, in the main, carried out that rule.

I realize the difficulty in administration so far as the ad valorem duty is concerned; that the ascertainment of values depends not only upon the knowledge and information of the appraisers, but oftentimes upon their integrity—always, I may say, upon their integrity—and there are great opportunities for fraud, and yet, of course, the percentage basis is the only real basis for revenue duties. We find that everywhere in our State administrations. I should like the committee to state, where they preserve the specific duties and do not change them to ad valorem duties, the reason for their action.

Subdivision D provides that the Finance Committee shall report—

(d) The average percentage of the duties imposed by the existing tariff, and the average percentage to which it is desirable to reduce the duties imposed under the proposed revision of the tariff, and the maximum and the minimum duties which it is desirable to impose.

I may say with reference to that, that the other House has already acted. We know that under the Dingley bill the average duties amounted to about 43½ per cent; that under the Payne-Aldrich bill they amounted to about 40 per cent; and that under the Underwood bill they amount to about 25 per cent. The Republican tariff imposed duties all the way from 5 to 10 per cent up to 150 per cent. I do not know what the maximum tariff is under the Underwood bill, but if any of its duties are in excess of 50 per cent it seems to me that we ought to have a special report showing why. Fifty per cent seems to me to be a large tax to impose upon a consumable product and thus enlarge the price paid by the consumer. If we have such duties, as I am told we have, it seems to me that we ought to have some explanation from the Finance Committee.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether it would inconvenience him at all to postpone his remarks to a subsequent occasion, as it is desired to have an executive session this afternoon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, Mr. President, that I will very gladly yield. I hope I have not detained the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I only asked if it would inconvenience the Senator to postpone his remarks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not at all. I will be very glad to yield. I wish merely to add that later on I will take up subdivisions E, F, G, H, and I of section 2 of this legislative program relating to the tariff and taxation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that on the next regular meeting day of the Senate, at the close of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 11—Senate resolution No. 19—and proceed to the final determination of that resolution and all amendments before the close of that calendar day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to ask if we may not have a vote on the pending motion before we go into executive session? The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KERN. I will be very glad if that matter can be disposed of, if the Senator from Nevada will consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senators permit the Chair to put the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]? Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ROOT. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington requests unanimous consent that Senate resolution 19 be made a special order at the close of the morning business at the next session of the Senate. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The SECRETARY. A resolution (S. Res. 19) to authorize the allowance of an additional clerk to Senators having less than three.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object to that. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is in charge of the matter, and he is not here. I object for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I trust we may have a vote on the pending motion, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Nevada has informed me that it would not inconvenience him to have that done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. KERN. I have no objection. However, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jackson	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	James	Overman	Smith, Md.
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Page	Smoot
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Colt	La Follette	Reed	Thompson
Crawford	Lane	Robinson	Thornton
Dillingham	Lea	Root	Townsend
Fall	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Warren
Goff	Myers	Shields	Williams
Gore	Nelson	Shively
Hollis	Newlands	Simmons
Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to refer the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified, to the Committee on Finance. On that question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BANKHEAD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on business. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I inquire if he is recorded as having voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. JACKSON. Then I will withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If present, the Senator from Texas would vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON. As I have stated, I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS. I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired on this question with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted, but I find that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] did not vote. I have a pair with him, and I must, therefore, withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce—and I will not repeat the announcement—that the continued absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is due to illness.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). After transferring my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], that Senator came into the Chamber and voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). There is some question about the transfer of my pair. I do not want to have any doubt about it. Instead of transferring my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I will transfer it to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Kern	Pomerene	Stone
Bacon	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lea	Reed	Thomas
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Thompson
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Hitchcock	Myers	Shafroth	Tillman
Hollis	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hughes	O'Gorman	Shields	Walsh
James	Overman	Shively	Williams
Johnson, Me.	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Johnston, Ala.	Pittman	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—29.

Bradley	Fall	McLean	Smoot
Brady	Gallinger	Nelson	Stephenson
Burton	Jackson	Norris	Townsend
Catron	Jones	Page	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Penrose	Weeks
Colt	La Follette	Perkins
Crawford	Lippitt	Root
Dillingham	Lodge	Sherman

NOT VOTING—25.

Bankhead	Clapp	Lewis	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Sterling
Brandegee	Culberson	Oliver	Sutherland
Bristow	Cummins	Poindexter	Works
Bryan	du Pont	Simmons
Burleigh	Goff	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Gronna	Smith, Mich.

So the resolution as modified was referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as heretofore in respect to my pair and transfer. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Owing to my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] spoke to me this afternoon about pairing with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], I think. I said at that time that I would pair with him on all votes outside of executive session, and I voted on the other roll call without thinking that I had that pair. I am not in the habit of pairing. I do not know whether or not it is too late for me to withdraw it. If it is not, and this is a suitable opportunity, I should like to withdraw that vote.

On this roll call I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am informed that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] had transferred his pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Therefore he is protected, and I will allow my vote to stand as originally cast. On this roll call I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Kern	Pomerene	Stone
Bacon	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 20, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that the line of cleavage 'twixt good and evil has been clearly defined in the ten great commandments, "Thou shalt not"—illumined, crystallized, epitomized, and strengthened by the two great commandments, "Thou shalt." Blessed is the man who resisteth evil, but more blessed is he who resisteth evil and doeth good deeds. Help us, we beseech Thee, through unfeigned love for Thee, our Father, and for our fellow men, to combine in our character the power of resistance and the power of persistent energy, that we may be indeed disciples of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 16, 1913, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1913.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 4234. An act providing certain legislation for the Panama-California Exposition, to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution extending the leave of absence of Mrs. A. E. Grant.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the International Conference on Education.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech delivered by Hon. JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND, of California, a Member of this House, recently at the Lake Mohonk Conference on the question of Panama Canal tolls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech made by the Hon. JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND, of California, on Panama Canal tolls at the Lake Mohonk Conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the address referred to:

THE RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES AT PANAMA—SIGNIFICANCE OF THE OBJECTIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN TO THE PANAMA CANAL ACT.

(Address delivered by Hon. JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND, of California, before the Lake Mohonk Conferenee on International Arbitration at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., Friday, May 16, 1913.)

"No patriotic American would countenance the violation by this country of a sacred treaty obligation. On the other hand, would not the citizen be lacking in patriotism who would hastily and without most careful and painstaking investigation blindly accept an interested foreign nation's interpretation of a disputed treaty, a construction that would not only deprive this country for all time of most important commercial advantages, but would be a surrender of invaluable rights affecting the very safety of the United States?

"TREATY OBLIGATIONS FULLY CONSIDERED BY CONGRESS.

"It has been charged that when the Panama Canal bill dealing with the subject of tolls was before Congress that the question of our treaty obligations was not given the proper consideration. The truth is, and I challenge a denial because the record bears me out, that no question has been before Congress in years in which greater interest was manifested and upon which more exhaustive debate was had.

"The bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on March 16, 1912. I presented on March 20 the minority report which upheld the right of the United States Government to pass free of toll its own ships as well as American coastwise ships. Copies of both the majority and minority reports were placed in the hands of every Member of the House accompanied with a letter calling particular attention to the toll section. It was not until May 21, two months later, that the toll provision was voted upon. While the bill was actually considered in the House but six days, the time allotted was longer than usually accorded measures other than great appropriation bills. The chief debate was upon the toll provision which naturally provoked a discussion of the concomitant question of our treaty obligations. The amendment providing free tolls for our American coastwise ships was adopted on roll call by a majority of 19. This vote carries with it a particular significance when we consider that the majority of the committee in charge of the bill opposed free tolls, which made the fight more difficult owing to the inclination of Members to follow committee recommendations as a matter of regularity. Let it also be borne in mind that this vote was taken before either the national platforms of the Democratic or Progressive Parties had declared in favor of the policy of free tolls for American coastwise ships.

"THE BILL IN THE SENATE.

"The bill then went to the Senate, and on May 24 was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. It was not reported from that committee until June 12, and did not finally pass the Senate until August 9. In the meantime this Government was officially notified of Great Britain's protest. The vote in the Senate on the provision favoring free tolls for American coastwise ships was 44 in favor to 11 against, a decisive majority of 33. The debate in the Senate was even more exhaustive than that which took place in the House, and both in the Senate and House there was not a Member who voted for the exemption who was not firmly convinced, after careful investigation, that the enactment of the bill into law would not be in contravention of any treaty obligation. I know from personal knowledge that in the House many voted against the exemption because opposed to the policy, but still held strongly to the belief that our treaty obligations did not prevent us from favoring our own ships if we saw fit to do so.

"PROVISIONS OF THE PANAMA CANAL ACT TO WHICH GREAT BRITAIN OBJECTS.

"The Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, which provides for 'the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation' of this American waterway is objected to by Great Britain—

"First. Because of certain language contained in section 5, which provides in fixing tolls that the rate may be less for 'vessels of the United States and its citizens than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal.' The significance of this language is that it reserves to the United States the right to pass through this canal, constructed through what is practically American territory, and which will have cost our Government over $400,000,000 before completed, its own ships of war and other Government vessels free of toll. It also leaves open for the future determination of the President of the United States the question of favoring American ships utilizing the canal in the foreign trade. The President, however, in his Panama Canal proclamation of November 13, 1912, fixed the same rate of toll for American ships in the foreign trade as for foreign ships.

"Second. Great Britain objects to the language of this same section by which we fulfill our treaty obligations with the Republic of Panama in accordance with article 19 of that convention, permitting the Government of the Republic of Panama 'to transport over the canal its vessels and its munitions of war in such vessels at all times without the payment of tolls.'

"Third. Great Britain further objects to the exemption from the payment of tolls of 'American vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States.'

"Fourth. It is attempted to limit and restrict our power even to remit tolls as is done by certain foreign nations using the Suez Canal, although the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, according to the British note of November 14, 1912, aimed 'at carrying out the neutralization of the Panama Canal by subjecting it to the same régime as the Suez Canal.'

"Fifth. Section 11 of the act, which seeks to prevent railroad control of this waterway is questioned by Sir Edward Grey because of the fear that its provisions may apply, as they unquestionably do in my opinion, to the Canadian transcontinental railroads which have voluntarily placed themselves under the provisions of the interstate commerce act of the United States.

"SIGNIFICANCE OF BRITISH OBJECTIONS.

"To sum up the British objections, we are denied the right to pass free of toll our own battleships and other Government vessels; ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, in which traffic the ships of England can not now engage, must pay a toll in passing through this American waterway; we are virtually asked to violate our treaty obligations with the Republic of Panama; there is a practical denial of, or at least an attempt to limit, our right to follow at Panama the practice of foreign nations in remitting tolls to merchant ships through the Suez Canal, thus placing this country at a disadvantage, and finally, in reference to the excellent provisions of section 11, we are threatened with a protest if Canadian steamships owned by Canadian railroads, which railroads have voluntarily come under the interstate commerce act and thus subjected themselves to the same restrictions and regulations as American railroads, are to be amenable to the same laws. Was there ever a more striking example of inconsistency? Equality of treatment demanded for British shipowners in sharing benefits, but a protest against equal treatment when the act imposes restrictions applying to American shipowners!

"I call attention in detail to these British objections because there are evidently many citizens who have been led to believe that the protest refers only to the exemption of American coastwise ships. By this brief statement it can be appreciated that the protest is more far-reaching and consequential.

"BRITISH PROTEST INSPIRED BY CANADIAN RAILROADS.

"It is generally believed in Washington that the British protest was due to the action of Canadian railroad officials. Prior to the receipt of the first English note certain Government officials of Canada visited England, and we were informed by cable dispatches printed in the newspapers that they took up this question with particular reference to the provisions of section 11, the railroad section. Of course, they had the sympathy and active support of American transcontinental railroad interests, which interests are now engaged in urging the repeal of the objectional provisions of the canal act, namely, sections 5 and 11. I am fair and frank enough to admit that many excellent citizens, advocates of peace—and I am a peace advocate and in favor of arbitration, as I will show later—favor repeal because of the belief, and in some instances solely upon the authority of certain Americans, that we have violated a treaty. I am constrained to direct attention to the fact that there are representatives of powerful interests favoring repeal who are crying 'live up to our treaty obligations,' but who are, I fear, far less interested in this phase of the question than they are in the more important consideration of preventing the canal from becoming too great a competitor of the transcontinental railroads.

"ANALYSIS OF SITUATION.

"Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which it is claimed we violate, reads as follows:

"That the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

"I have always contended that this section simply bound us as the owners of the canal to treat all foreign nations fairly, preventing discrimination in favor of one foreign nation as against another. The use of the words 'vessels of war' to my mind is conclusive evidence that the word 'vessels' referred exclusively to foreign nations, for it is inconceivable and a reflection upon the patriotism of the framers of the treaty that the United States would foreclose its right to pass free of toll through its own waterway warships as well as lighthouse tenders, revenue cutters, transports, and other craft. Realizing the force of this argument the opponents of exemption now say that we must consider this section in connection with certain language of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty (which many had supposed was superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote convention), contained in article 8, which still compels us to carry the burden of that instrument. What is the meaning of neutralization? Many authorities contend, and I think rightfully, that neutralization can not, by any strained construction, be inferred to mean conditions of traffic, but relates only to conditions of war.

"INTERPRETATION OF SENATORS PRESENT WHEN HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY WAS PENDING.

"The contention has been made that the Senate understood that the words 'all nations' included the United States, and with this conception of the treaty voted down an amendment which, in specific language, reserved to the United States the right to exempt American coastwise ships from the payment of tolls. They neglect to mention that several amendments were decisively rejected that permitted us to fortify the canal, their rejection being due to the belief on the part of Senators that we had that right without such a provision. Evidence which I will now submit proves that the same opinion prevailed touching our right to exempt American coastwise shipping.

"THE BARD AMENDMENT.

"I have here a letter from Senator Bard, who resides in California, which is conclusive. I will read the following extracts from this letter:

"When my amendment was under consideration it was generally conceded (the italics are his) by Senators that even without that specific provision the rules of the treaty would not prevent our Government from treating the canal as part of our coast line, and consequently could not be construed as a restriction of our interstate commerce, forbidding the discrimination in charges for tolls in favor of our coastwise trade, and this conviction contributed to the defeat of the amendment.

"We will not rest our case in this particular upon the statement of the author of the amendment, but will quote a Senator who voted against the amendment, no less an illustrious Member of the Senate than Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, who was one of the 11 Senators who voted last year against exempting coastwise ships, so he must be regarded as a disinterested witness. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 17, 1912:

"Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it so happened that I was in London when the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty was made, and, although the draft was sent from this country, that treaty was really made in London. I mention this merely to show that I had some familiarity with the formulation as well as the ratification of that treaty. When the treaty was submitted by the President to the Senate, it so happened that I had charge of it and reported it to the Senate.

"The second Hay-Pauncefote treaty, as Senators will remember, embodied, in substance, the amendments which the Senate had made to the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty. England had refused to accept those amendments, and then the second treaty was made embodying in principle all for which the Senate had contended.

"When I reported that treaty my own impression was that it left the United States in complete control of the tolls upon its own vessels. I did not suppose then that there was any limitation upon our right to charge such tolls as we pleased upon our own vessels, or that we were included in the phrase 'all nations.'"

"Again, on July 20, 1912, Senator LODGE stated on the floor of the Senate in reiteration of this view:

"I voted against it in the belief that it was unnecessary; that the right to fix tolls, if we built the canal or it was built under our auspices, was undoubted. I know that was the view taken by the then Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Davis, who was at that time chairman of the committee. I certainly so stated on the floor. * * *

"I personally have never had any doubt that the matter of fixing tolls must necessarily be within our jurisdiction, and when I referred to our going to The Hague as useless I did not mean because our case was not a good one. I meant because, in the nature of things, we could by no possibility have a disinterested tribunal at The Hague. It would be for the interest of every other nation involved to prevent our fixing the tolls according to our own wishes. * * * I know that was my opinion and the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations at the time."

"Senator CLAPP, of Minnesota, who was present when the Bard amendment was voted upon, holds similar views, as here set forth, and I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 17, 1912:

"I know I was here at the time, although I do not recall all of the speeches. But while some of us voted insisting, in some instances, that these things should be explicit and in others voting with the majority upon the ground that they were covered anyhow, I believe, both with reference to the coastwise trade and especially with reference to the question of fortification, that many of the votes cast against those express provisions were cast upon the theory that without them we nevertheless had the right to do them.

"Mr. O'GORMAN. That the provisions were unnecessary?

"Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that they were unnecessary."

"Senator PERKINS, then and still a Member, stated in the Senate on August 6, 1912:

"I wish to state that Senator Davis, of Minnesota, was at that time chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. He was, as is conceded by all, an authority on international law, and took the view stated by the Senator from New York and that stated by the Senator from Washington. There is no question about it that the rules we did make were to govern other nations than ourselves."

"SITUATION AFFECTING THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA.

"As I have already set forth, the British note of November 14, 1912, protests against article 19 of our treaty with the Republic of Panama proclaimed in 1904. For over eight years there was no protest on the part of Great Britain against this alleged discrimination in favor of the ships of Panama. Why this belated protest, might we ask? The answer is plain. The contention of Great Britain would become untenable as to American ships if exception was not taken to the Panama treaty.

"Senator ROOT, while Secretary of State, negotiated a treaty with the Republic of Colombia which permitted that Republic to pass through the canal—

"Troops, material of war, and ships of war without paying any duty to the United States, even in the case of an international war between Colombia and another country."

"It was ratified by the United States, but rejected by Colombia. The point I wish to make is that the then distinguished Secretary of State presumably did not consider the Colombian convention a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, although England now claims that a similar treaty with Panama is in contravention of treaty rights.

"SIMILAR QUESTION PASSED UPON BY THE SUPREME COURT.

"One phase of this canal controversy has been directly passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, the question of exempting coastwise ships. Mr. Justice White, now Chief Justice, wrote the opinion. It is the case of Olson v. Smith (195 U. S., 332), in which the court held that the State law exempting American coastwise vessels from pilotage charges was not in violation of the treaty, which provided that 'no higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same port by vessels of the United States.' The point of this decision bearing upon the present question at issue, namely, the contention that British ships would not be discriminated against by the canal act because they are now barred by law from engaging in coastwise traffic, is as follows:

"Nor is there merit in the contention that as the vessel in question was a British vessel, coming from a foreign port, the State laws concerning pilotage are in conflict with the treaty between Great Britain and the United States. Neither the exemption of coastwise steam vessels from pilotage resulting from the law of the United States nor any lawful exemption of coastwise vessels created by the State law concerns vessels in the foreign trade, and, therefore, any such exemptions do not operate to produce a discrimination against British vessels engaged in foreign trade and in favor of the vessels of the United States in such trade. In substance, the proposition but asserts that because by the law of the United States steam vessels in the coastwise trade have been exempt from pilotage regulations, therefore there is no power to subject vessels in foreign trade to pilotage regulations, even though such regulations apply without discrimination to all vessels engaged in such foreign trade, whether domestic or foreign.

"TOLLS JUST AND EQUITABLE REGARDLESS OF EXEMPTION.

"The point raised by Great Britain that by exempting coastwise ships we might be placing a greater burden upon that nation has been fully answered by Secretary Knox. If we had levied a toll sufficient to pay interest upon the investment as well as cover expenses of maintenance and operation Great Britain might have had cause to complain, but in framing the act we had in mind a toll that would attract traffic and at the same time pay the expenses of maintenance and operation. The total cost of operation and maintenance, including sanitation and civil government, as carefully estimated by Col. Goethals, will not exceed $4,000,000 annually.

"The tonnage for 1914–15, when the canal is opened, is estimated at 10,500,000 tons. Of this but 1,160,000 net register tons are estimated as coastwise. Deducting this from the total leaves 9,340,000 tons, and with a toll of $1.20, which is in accordance with the President's proclamation, the annual income will be $11,208,000, over seven millions in excess of the cost of operation and maintenance. The coastwise exemption in no way, either directly or indirectly, will affect the charges to Great Britain. We have been most fair in our dealing with foreign nations as to charges.

"FOREIGN SHIPS TO RECEIVE CHIEF BENEFIT OF WATERWAY.

"Foreign ships will derive the chief benefit from the canal because we have practically no American ships in the foreign trade. Ninety-one per cent of our foreign commerce is carried in foreign ships. Unless we grant some favors to our own ships in the coastwise trade our benefit will be small. I know it is contended that remission of the toll will be so insignificant as affecting a ton of freight as to be negligible. If so, then what great anxiety for repeal. If a ship with a 7,000 ton net register capacity passing between New York and San Francisco pays a toll of $8,400, some one must pay, and it will be hard to make American consumers and producers believe that they will not assume the burden. If a ship is half loaded the toll upon each ton of freight will double, because the ship pays in accordance with its total net register capacity.

"FREE TOLLS A BENEFIT TO INTERIOR OF COUNTRY.

"In my opinion it will be the great interior of the United States that will profit chiefly because of free tolls, and particularly those sections drained by the mighty navigable rivers. Every burden placed upon traffic will impair the usefulness of the canal as a competitive route and narrow its benefits geographically. Every reduction forced by sea competition will be reflected upon rail rates throughout the entire country, as has always been the case. The output of American shipyards, according to the Department of Commerce, will be greater during the current fiscal year than for many years past. Not one of these ships, I am informed, is for the foreign trade, but are all to engage in the coastwise traffic. This will bring about the keenest competition, particularly in view of the fact that railroad owned or controlled ships are barred from the canal, and be a guaranty that to the American people will inure the chief benefit of free tolls. This great activity in shipbuilding should carry some significance.

"AN IMPARTIAL ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL POSSIBLE.

"While I am a Californian it does not follow, even in view of recent happenings in my native State, that I am particularly belligerent. A serious contention with Great Britain over this question is not probable. A mere suggestion of war is abhorent. While many who hold similar views to mine upon the abstract question of our right to control the canal are strongly opposed to submitting this question—a question which I will admit largely concerns a domestic policy—to arbitration, I will frankly state I do not go so far. A fair arbitral tribunal should be possible for the determination of this question if it can not be settled by diplomacy. The Hague would not be such a body, in my opinion. The common sense of the American and English people should enable these English-speaking nations to agree upon impartial arbitrators. Before such a body our case is so strong we have nothing to fear.

"REPEAL OF LAW INADVISABLE.

"To repeal the toll provision at this time would be a humiliating acknowledgment that after expending $400,000,000 in the construction of an American canal, through what is practically American territory, this Nation was estopped forever from according a single advantage to an American ship. Other nations might remit tolls to their ships as they are doing at Suez and preparing to do at Panama, but our hands would be virtually tied. We would be compelled to pay a toll upon Government ships. According to some very high authorities, we would surrender rights that might imperil our very existence as a nation. Repeal under present circumstances, when our Government, through the Department of State, has taken a position and negotiations are under way, would be most inopportune. It would be an unwarranted, uncalled-for, and abject surrender of American rights, far-reaching in its effect, and disastrous to American interests."

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and bill of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1913;

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the International Conference on Education; and

H. R. 4234. An act providing certain legislation for the Panama-California Exposition to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915.

MRS. A. E. GRANT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution numbered 30 and pass it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution numbered 30, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they hereby are, authorized to further extend, for a period not exceeding six months, with pay, the leave of absence to Mrs. A. E. Grant, a clerk in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House meets on Friday I be permitted to address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asks unanimous consent that when the House meets on Friday, after the reading of the Journal and the transaction of routine business, he be allowed to address the House for one hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. My attention was diverted for a moment. Has the House already decided to adjourn until Friday?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that my understanding is that it will adjourn until Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL FRIDAY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are to be entertained by a speech from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] on that day, by previous order of the House, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DYER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order agreed upon, until Friday, May 23, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 5385) for the erection of a public building at Cheraw, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 5386) to authorize the entry of lands chiefly valuable for sand, gravel, or brick clay under the placer-mining laws; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 5387) granting increase of pension to widows of the Civil War; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5391) for the erection of a public building at Yorkville, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5392) providing for the erection of a monument at Cowpens battle ground, Cherokee County, S. C., commemorative of Gen. Daniel Morgan and those who participated in the Battle of Cowpens on the 17th day of January, 1781; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PROUTY: A bill (H. R. 5393) for the further regulation of insurance companies organized in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STOUT: A bill (H. R. 5394) appropriating money to enable the Commissioner General of Immigration to gather information regarding the resources, products, etc., of the States and Territories, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 5395) appropriating $2,500 for the transportation of soldiers of the Civil War to the celebration of the Gettysburg anniversary; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 5396) to confer upon the United States Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate claims against the United States for damages arising out of the construction, use, and management of the Illinois & Mississippi Canal; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAGGART: Resolution (H. Res. 107) to investigate the affairs, business, and transactions of the Western Newspaper Union; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRITTEN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the nomination and election of President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people of the several States; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 87) authorizing the Secretary of State to issue invitations to other nations to send representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Tulsa, Okla., in October, 1913; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TREADWAY: Memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of maintaining a protective tariff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PETERS (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of maintaining a protective tariff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 5397) waiving the age limit for appointment as cadet engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States in the case of John S. McKinney; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 5398) for the relief of Oscar Samuelson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRYAN: A bill (H. R. 5399) for the relief of the widow and children of Edward Edmonds; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 5400) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester P. Warner; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5401) granting an increase of pension to Edgar J. Kempinsky; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COLLIER: A bill (H. R. 5402) for the relief of the legal representatives of James W. Brabston and Roche H. Brabston; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 5403) granting a pension to Eleanor Bartels; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 5404) for the relief of the heirs of Mahaly Fields, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 5405) granting a pension to Henry Langley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GERRY: A bill (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to George H. Naylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5407) granting an increase of pension to William Stoehr; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5408) granting an increase of pension to Elijah Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5409) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Chase; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5410) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Moan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5411) granting an increase of pension to Johanna Scully; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5412) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Simms; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HELVERING: A bill (H. R. 5413) granting an increase of pension to Mark Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 5414) for the relief of James Duncan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 5415) for the relief of Prof. E. J. McCaustland and Engineering Department, University of Washington; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill (H. R. 5416) for the relief of Eugene A. Freund and Alfred F. Roemmich; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5417) to indemnify Susan Sanders for expenses incurred and services rendered in behalf of the Cherokee Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 5418) providing for the payment of additional per diem to certain witnesses in the case of the United States v. A. L. Wisner & Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 5419) granting an increase of pension to William Woodhouse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5420) to correct the military record of John S. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H. R. 5421) granting an increase of pension to John M. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOBECK: A bill (H. R. 5422) granting a pension to Anna A. Yule; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 5423) granting a pension to Aaron P. Essex; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5424) granting a pension to Floyd L. Green; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5425) granting an increase of pension to Miller Stocking; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5426) granting an increase of pension to Ambrose A. Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5427) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Spring; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5428) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Eding; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5429) granting an increase of pension to John McIntosh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Central Labor Union of New Bedford, Mass., favoring an immediate investigation of the condition in the coal regions of West Virginia; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 22, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—RAILROAD IN ALASKA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and shall only occupy the time of the Senate for a moment or two.

Yesterday the Committee on Territories was holding hearings in reference to the construction by the Government of a railroad into Alaska, and Judge WICKERSHAM, the Delegate from Alaska, was addressing the committee on the subject. In the course of what he had to say he spoke of there being only three gateways into Alaska, and stated, in substance, that those three gateways were practically owned and controlled by the Alaska syndicate, composed of the Guggenheim Sons Co. and the J. P. Morgan interests. He said in substance that but for an accident the same interests would have obtained a monopoly of the one gateway which was not then under the control of the so-called Alaska syndicate. I interrogated him upon that subject and asked him how they were prevented from obtaining a monopoly of that one gateway and how they would have obtained the same, and he stated that I myself had introduced a bill—innocently, of course—which, in its effect, would have given the Alaska syndicate absolute control of that one gateway. The Washington Herald of this morning makes this statement in reference to the matter:

> Mr. WICKERSHAM said: "I believe Senator CHAMBERLAIN was deceived as to the character of a bill he introduced in the last Congress, which provided for the acquisition by the Guggenheim interests of the littoral at Cordova. The bill as introduced by Senator CHAMBERLAIN, if passed by the Congress, would have delivered the last remaining chance for competition in the transportation facilities of Alaska into the hands of the monopolists. The bill was so drawn that they would, upon its enactment, control the finest harbor on the Alaskan coast. I succeeded in beating this iniquitous bill in the House after it had passed the Senate."

Then the paper adds:

> Senator CHAMBERLAIN sat by and listened to the criticism of his bill without comment.

The latter part is measurably true. I did not care to interrupt Judge WICKERSHAM in the midst of his statement to the committee; but a little later on, and probably after the newspaper reporters had gone out, I asked him particularly about the bill which he claimed I had introduced, and desired that he should call my attention to the number of it, because I had no recollection of ever having introduced such a bill. He stated, in answer to those questions, that he might possibly be mistaken in reference to the matter, but that he would look it up and report to me. This morning I again called his attention to the subject, and he advised me that he was entirely mistaken about it, which I knew at the moment, but was not in a position to deny, because we introduce so many bills that I could not tell at the time to what particular bill he might have had reference. So he called my attention to the fact that the bill which he had reference to was not introduced by me at all, but that it was introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] "by request." The bill shows that the Senator from Wyoming very properly introduced it at the request of some one, probably a friend of his, or somebody else; but anyway it shows on its face that it was not even his measure, as he had introduced it by request, and that I had never had anything to do with it in any shape, form, or manner whatsoever.

I simply make this statement, Mr. President, because I have never been connected in any way with any of the people who want special privilege in Alaska. On the contrary, it has been my effort and my purpose at all times here in the Senate to do all in my power to release Alaska from the grasp that now holds it and to place its magnificent resources in the hands of the people of the whole country. I not only have insisted upon that all the time, but I introduced the bill for the construction of a railroad in Alaska by the Government of the United States, which the committee now has under consideration, and I shall do all in my power, at least, not only to place the control of the transportation of Alaska in the hands of the Government but its resources as well and their development.

The bill to which Judge WICKERSHAM referred—and I am frank enough to say that I do not believe he intended to do me any injury; I think he was just as innocent about making that statement as he claims I was in introducing a bill that had "a sleeper" in it—the bill to which he had reference is Senate bill 9163 of the Sixty-first Congress, third session, entitled "A bill to authorize the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co. to maintain and operate a wharf in Orca Inlet, in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes."

I merely make this statement in justice to myself, Mr. President, because I did not want the impression to go out from the Senate or from any committee of the Senate that I have stood in a position at any time, or that I ever will stand in a position, which would assist in placing the resources of this country, or any part thereof, in the hands of any syndicate or any body of men who would undertake to throttle competition or deprive the American people of what, in justice and equity, should be administered as a sacred trust in their interest and for their benefit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that the article as read from the newspaper stated that the bill had passed the Senate, and that Judge WICKERSHAM had caused its defeat in the other House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill did not even pass the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to state that fact, but the newspaper article said it did pass the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill did not pass the Senate. The newspaper article so stated, or rather Judge WICKERSHAM stated, that the bill had passed the Senate and had been killed by him in the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. All I want the RECORD to show, Mr. President, is that the bill never passed the Senate, and that it never was considered in the Senate at any time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] refers appears to have been introduced by me at the request of some person. I do not know who and I do not know when. It was probably introduced, as many bills are introduced, at the request of a constituent or of somebody else, and I notice that for once in my life I was discreet enough not to father the bill which I introduced. Whether the bill is a good one or not I do not know, but the bill shows upon its face that it was introduced by request. Who compose the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co. I do not know, nor do I know what or where Orca Inlet is. It was merely one of those instances where a Senator feels that he is not only justified but under some obligation to introduce a bill that is presented by those who have interests in the matter for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I so understand.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
JUNEAU, ALASKA.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a true and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 26 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 6th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

IN THE SENATE, TERRITORY OF ALASKA, FIRST SESSION.

Senate joint memorial 26.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the fishing industry of Alaska, now in the early stages of development, bids fair to be the greatest industry of its kind in the world; and

Whereas we believe the waters of Alaska and the fish therein to be the property of the people and the heritage of future generations; and

Whereas we believe it to be our duty to use every effort toward the protection and conservation of this great natural food supply of the Nation; and

Whereas the history of the fisheries of this Nation shows us that the depletion and destruction of migratory fish has been caused by the lack of restriction and regulation of the methods of fishing; and
Whereas the salmon fishery of this Territory is being prosecuted for the purpose of obtaining dividends for the present and without due regard to the conservation of the fish supply for future generations; and
Whereas we believe that upon the restriction and regulation of the gear and methods of fishing now depends the future of this great industry: Therefore your memoralists earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable body that laws be enacted for the regulation of our salmon fisheries in accordance with the following recommendations:

1. The abolishment of the contrivance known as a jigger in connection with all fishing traps, pound nets, or weirs.
2. The limiting of all leads on all fish traps to a length of 600 feet in entirety.
3. That no fish traps, pound nets, or weirs be allowed within a distance of 1 mile of any salmon stream nor in any bay, estuary, inlet, or channel which is less than a mile in width, and that traps now established within such limits be removed.
4. That the Fisheries Bureau be instructed and authorized to establish posts or monuments at the mouths of all salmon streams which shall limit the distance from such streams at which any kind of fishing gear may be used, and that such marked limits be established by practical fishermen who are familiar with all the conditions that obtain in localities in which such marked limits are to be established. The term "mouth" of a stream shall be defined to mean the place where the line of mean low tide meets and crosses the trend of the stream.
5. We object generally to the whole bill prepared by and entitled "Tentative draft of bill suggested by the United States Bureau of Fisheries and the representatives of the various Alaskan fisheries, which has been agreed upon and prepared by them jointly after numerous conferences," and especially to section 1 thereof, reading "All of the license fees and taxes derived from Alaska fisheries shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States and there kept in a special fund," on the ground that the Territory of Alaska is entitled to a reasonable proportion of the revenue derived from the fishing industry of the Territory.
6. We further recommend that it shall be made unlawful to take any salmon from any fresh-water stream by means of a spear or gaff except for personal, domestic, or family consumption; and it shall be unlawful to purchase any salmon taken by means of a spear or gaff from a fresh-water stream for use in canning, salting, or otherwise preserving for sale.
7. That a closed season be established for southeastern Alaska from September 1 to December 31 of each year as to fishing for any kind of fish above the mouths of any and all streams and outside the mouths of any and all streams during said closed season for sockeye and humpback salmon.

Further, that the Government operate all fish hatcheries of Alaska; and Further, that at the hearings held before the fishing and game joint committee of the Territorial legislature it was fully demonstrated that illegal fishing was carried on in nearly all of the localities and the inspection system as now inaugurated by the Fisheries Bureau is greatly inadequate to carry on proper inspection.

And we further recommend that no law be enacted by Congress whereby any right or title to the tide lands or waters now occupied by fishing appliances in Alaska can be acquired for fish-trap sites nor any areas of tide land or water be in any way reserved for the operation of any certain kind of fishing contrivances to the exclusion of other fishing gear.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 31.

The honorable the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, do respectfully submit the following to your kind consideration:

That the Alaska Road Commission, since its creation under the act of Congress approved January 27, 1905, has constructed approximately 900 miles of wagon road and many hundreds of miles of sled roads and trails in all sections of the Territory of Alaska.

That such construction has resulted in great benefit to the country and has aided more than any other instrumentality in developing the various sections of our Territory.

That these roads are not merely of local importance, but they form a well-devised system of highways calculated to serve the entire Territory.

That the expenses incurred in such road and trail building are defrayed by an annual appropriation made by the honorable the Congress of the United States and by a portion of what is known as the "Alaska fund." The amount appropriated by the honorable the Congress of the United States for this year amounts to $155,000, $55,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be required, is to be expended in the construction of a dam to protect the property of the Government near the town of Valdez from destruction by near-by glaciers; that the average amount per annum available from the Alaska fund amounts to $137,000, the total amount of which moneys is barely sufficient to keep the roads constructed in repair.

In view of these facts, we respectfully request that Congress increase its annual appropriation for the construction and maintenance of roads, so that a sufficient amount thereof may be set aside for further construction and extension of the road system now laid out.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 8th day of May, A. D. 1913.

IN THE HOUSE.

House joint memorial 15.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Legislature of the Territory of Alaska respectfully presents to your honorable body this, its memorial, the purpose of which is to call attention to the limited area for the extension and development of the town site of Juneau, and to the fact that under the laws of Congress and regulations of the Department of the Interior certain lands which would furnish an outlet for the growth and extension of said town are withheld from acquisition and settlement and to request your honorable body to grant certain lands to the town of Juneau for disposition by said town to home seekers under the conditions hereinafter stated:

I.

The town of Juneau is located on the mainland on the easterly shore of Gastineau Channel, a body of tidal water approximately 20 miles in length, separating the mainland from Douglas Island. On said island, almost opposite the town of Juneau, is located the Treadwell Mine, one of the largest low-grade gold mines in the world. The mineral zone in which this mine is found is extensive in area, and a company subsidiary to the Treadwell Co. is actively engaged in the development of a similar property within said mineral zone, in the immediate vicinity of Juneau, and will erect this summer a stamp mill and reducing plant within the corporate limits of said town for the purpose of crushing and reducing the ores of the mine.

An independent organization known as the Alaska Gastineau Mining Co. is spending several millions of dollars in the development of its mining properties near Juneau and in building dams and installing machinery for an electrical power plant to be used in its operations.

Still other companies have invested in mining properties in the immediate vicinity of Juneau, and plans for their development have been announced, but no work has yet begun on an extensive scale.

II.

The result of this activity is that within the last year the town of Juneau has increased in population approximately 100 per cent, with every indication that the next few years will witness the development of an extensive mining industry, which must necessarily cause a much greater increase in population.

Available building space to meet this growth is limited. In most places on the mainland side of the channel the mountains rise so precipitously as to leave no suitable space for the construction of buildings, and such buildings, if constructed, would be menaced by snow and landslides

The available area within the town site of Juneau comprises approximately 10 blocks square. In a northerly direction from said town and almost immediately adjoining it is an extensive tide flat which is used for no purpose except to convey across it an electrical transmission line and a telephone cable and pipe line. This tide flat, by means of the construction of bulkheads, could be filled in and made available for the erection of business, residence, and municipal buildings.

III.

Continuing in a northerly direction on the mainland side of the channel the land slopes back from the beach to the foot of the high mountains, and a large part of this slope, which varies in width from several hundred yards to a half mile, might be made available for building purposes and gardens.

A portion of the land on this slope between Juneau and Lemon Creek, a distance of approximately 5 miles, has been entered under the public-land laws of the United States, but because of the frontage of said land on navigable water intervening spaces between such claims have been left, in accordance with the provisions contained in Thirty-second Statutory Laws, 1028, and the regulations of the Department of the Interior thereunder, which department has construed the act of Congress to mean that between each entry of land on the shore of navigable water a space of 80 rods is reserved to the Federal Government.

Under this construction of the law the intervening spaces between the claims above referred to are not open for acquisition and settlement. It is respectfully urged that the purpose of Congress in reserving the space of 80 rods between claims was to prevent the acquisition of valuable and extensive shore line by a single interest to the exclusion of others, and that it was never intended to hold title indefinitely in the Federal Government to such reserved spaces throughout the 25,000 miles of shore line in Alaska and thereby strangle the normal growth and development of the Territory.

IV.

It is asked that the Congress of the United States do cause to be surveyed the tide flats above referred to and all the land suitable for building and garden purposes lying on the easterly shore of Gastineau Channel in a northerly direction from said town of Juneau to Lemon Creek, and thereafter do cause its proper officers to investigate and determine the rights of all private claimants to any portion of such lands, and that pending such determination the said lands, title to which is now in the Federal Government, be withdrawn from entry and settlement, and that upon the determination of the rights of private claimants all of such lands, the title to which at the time of such withdrawal was still in the Federal Government, be transferred by proper conveyance in fee simple to the town of Juneau, to be by said town disposed of in small holdings under the directions of the common council thereof upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Federal Government.

It is further respectfully urged upon your honorable body—

First. That as the streets of said town of Juneau on and near the water front are plank streets, built on wooden piles above the tide flats, and since the large increase of traffic thereon the cost of maintenance thereof is great, and said streets must, as rapidly as the resources of said town will permit, be graded and made permanent.

Second. That a few blocks from the water front the streets of said town are precipitous, and the cost of construction and maintenance of said streets and sewers and sidewalks much exceeds the usual cost of such work.

Third. That the rapid growth of said town has made inadequate the school facilities thereof, to meet which situation efforts are being made to raise money by private subscription pending the action by your honorable body upon a memorial heretofore introduced in the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska praying authority for the creation of a bonded indebtedness for school purposes.

Fourth. That the mining and other industries of Alaska give employment to large numbers of technically trained young men, and it is desirable that educational facilities be created to fit the young men of Alaska for such work. At the present time, after completing the ordinary high-school course, further training can be had only by going great distances to points in the States. It is desirable to inaugurate at Juneau as soon as funds are available therefor a trade and professional school offering instruction covering a suitable period which will fit the young men taking advantage thereof for the better class of employment in the mining and other industries of Alaska.

Fifth. That if the request herein made is granted the said town will be able to realize from the sale and development of the lands which your honorable body is asked to grant a sufficient sum to meet the demands made upon it by reason of the facts herein recited and to lay the foundation for the establishment of the trade school referred to.

V.

That in the absence of favorable action by your honorable body herein, and because of the restrictions placed upon the Territorial Legislature and upon municipal corporations in said Territory, the proper development of said town will be retarded, and the maintenance of educational facilities for its children will be dependent upon private enterprise, while the first steps in the creation and maintenance of a technical training school can not be begun until Congress assumes a more liberal policy toward education in Alaska.

VI.

That at the present time the support of public schools as provided by the Federal Government is, to the mortification of the people of Alaska, dependent upon the revenues derived from the conduct of the liquor traffic.

VII.

That action has heretofore been taken by the Juneau Commercial Club with the purpose of securing title to said town of Juneau in said tide flats, without reference to the shore land referred to, which action is hereby indorsed, and it is respectfully urged that such lands not being open to acquisition by any method except the grant of Congress that the grant thereof be executed as promptly as may be possible, and that the conveyance of said tidelands to said town of Juneau be not delayed pending the action by the Government with respect to the shore lands refered to in this memorial.

At the request of the Commercial Club of Juneau, attached hereto is a copy of the report of their special committee on tidelands.

VIII.

Therefore be it further resolved, That the honorable Senate of the United States and the honorable House of Representatives in Congress assembled are respectfully urged to take action as soon as possible, as an urgent necessity for additional ground for the future growth of the city of Juneau does now exist.

Further, resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the honorable President of the United States Senate, the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, and to the honorable JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate to the United States House of Representatives from Alaska.

IN RELATION TO THE REDEMPTION OF THE JUNEAU TIDE FLATS.

To the Juneau Commercial Club:

Your committee begs leave to submit the following report in relation to the redemption of the Juneau or Gold Creek tide flats:

First. We call your attention to the following facts:

There is now embraced within the town site of Juneau 126½ blocks, each block containing 8 lots of 50 by 100 feet each in area; or each block is 200 by 200 feet in area.

Four of these blocks are reserved by the United States Government.

Eighteen lots are used for churches, hospitals, and other public buildings.

Three lots are owned and used by fraternal organizations.

Eighty-six lots are now used for business purposes.

Fifty-two lots are on the steep hillside and are unfit for building purposes other than for cabins, making, all told, 1,012 lots for all purposes. Deducting the lots set aside as above specified, amounting to 191 lots, there is still left 821 lots suitable for residential purposes. As business grows with the town some of these lots will also be used for business purposes, and in the course of a year there will probably be not more than 750 lots left for residential purposes, which means that Juneau can accommodate 750 families. If we allow 3 persons for each family—which is the average of the families of Juneau—we will have room for about 2,250 persons, and, owing to the steep mountains and the water surrounding the Juneau town site, there is no room for expansion. In making the foregoing estimates we have not considered the Shattuck addition or the ground below the saw mill, which would accommodate about 100 more families.

There is now about 2,000 people within the corporate limits of the town of Juneau, and there is every reason to believe that our population will more than double within the next 12 months. More ground for residential purposes must be secured in some way, and in this connection we recommend the redemption of the Juneau or Gold Creek tide flats.

By building a dyke of stone and brush at a height of 1½ feet to 12 feet in height along the line of low-water mark these flats can be reclaimed at a cost of about $4,500, and the amount that can be reclaimed in this way will be over 77 acres in area. Divide this reclaimed land into town lots the size of those now in the Juneau town site and we would have 616 lots 50 by 100 feet in area. However, we would recommend that at least 25 blocks be reserved for a park and public buildings. This amount would give us a plot of ground 1,000 feet square, which would be sufficient for a baseball park, a public-school building, an armory building, a school of mines building, a fisheries building, a Territorial university and the Territorial capitol building, and other public buildings that may be required as the capital of Alaska increases in importance. If the suggestions here recommended should be carried out we would have left for building purposes 52 blocks of 8 lots each which could be sold (at a very low estimate) at $250 per lot, or the total of $104,000. This money should be used in defraying the expense of the reclamation and the construction of the aforementioned buildings.

It is well known that in the near future Juneau must have a new school building. The one now in use is old, too centrally located, and entirely too small for even the present demands and with an utter lack of playgrounds. The lots now occupied by the present school buildings could be sold, and the sum realized (which should not be less than $12,000) should be used in the construction of a new concrete and fireproof building, cost not less than $25,000, to be erected on the reclaimed tide flats, where ample room could be had for playgrounds and recreation.

We are informed and believe that the National Government has annually appropriated a sum of money for the support of State and Territorial militia. Alaska has had none of this appropriation since the time of Gov. Knapp, about the year of 1890. We believe Alaska's share of this money could be secured for the purpose of building an armory near the schoolhouse, and this armory could be used by the school children as a playroom on rainy days, which are so prevalent in this part of Alaska.

Second Street should be extended through the ridge north of town by means of a tunnel, which would not be more than 325 feet in length. The rock taken from the tunnel could be used in the construction of the dyke which, under the proposed plans, starts from the north end of this street. This tunnel should be at least 10 feet wide and 8 feet in height, and could be built for about $3,600.

We believe that the débris carried down by Gold Creek would fill the entire flat in the course of 12 months after the dyke was finished, and that buildings for homes could be constructed as soon as the dyke was started, as the entire flat is not covered by water only at extreme high tide, or twice a year.

We are informed and believe that in the near future a capitol building will be constructed in Juneau for the use of the Territorial legislature and other Territorial officers (in fact, Secretary Fisher, Gov. Clark, and Delegate WICKERSHAM have already recommended the appropriation of $500,000 for this very purpose). A school of mines building and a Territorial university will also be constructed at no distant date. These should all be erected on the reclaimed tide flats. It is also a certainty that the Government will shortly construct and operate a Government fish hatchery. This building should also be erected on the tide flats or some place near Juneau. Owing to the high values placed on lands in this immediate vicinity, it is almost a certainty that the Government will not erect these buildings near Juneau unless cheaper land can be procured, and for this reason, if for no other, we believe that we could easily secure the passage of an act by Congress allowing the city of Juneau to reclaim the tide flats, reserving as much as may be required for the erection of the aforementioned buildings.

Owing to the circuitous beach line in front of Juneau, it is impossible for the town to have adequate docking facilities for large vessels. In fact, most of the water front is now controlled and owned by the great steamship companies that ply between Alaska and Puget Sound. By reclaiming the tide flats large wharves could be constructed just north of the wharf now operated by the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., which would afford dockage facilities for all vessels making this port and greatly to the advantage of said vessels, as by this wharfage construction all vessels would be headed into the storms which prevail here during the winter months. The steamship companies are heartily in accord with these plans and will offer their holdings for sale at reasonable figures as soon as other lands are provided for them.

The logical route to Silver Bow Basin is up Gold Creek, where an easy grade could be had. By the reclamation of the tide flats the basin road would be constructed up the creek, and all heavy freight and dynamite would be landed north of the town and from there taken to the basin, thereby doing away with the transportation of dynamite and heavy machinery through the main streets of the city, which has long been looked upon as a serious menace to the lives and property of the residents.

The redemption of the tide flats would not infringe upon the rights of any person, firm, or corporation and would be of the greatest benefit to every resident of this section, beside the saving of many thousands of dollars to the national and city governments, as well as giving our city a chance to expand, which under the present conditions is impossible, and at the present date we are unable to provide suitable quarters for the men necessary to open up the great mines which are now in course of development.

We believe that the city government of Juneau should be granted authority to reclaim this land and that patent should issue to them and their successors in office, and that the profits and benefits accruing from the reclaiming of this land should be held for the people by and through its duly elected city officers, making proper reservation for the National Government to construct such buildings as may be deemed necessary and without cost to said National Government.

In order for us to secure the right to reclaim these lands it will be necessary for Congress to pass a special act giving us the right, and this we confidently believe could be done forthwith, providing the right showing was made through the proper officers at Washington.

The conditions are such that we recommend the Commercial Club and the city government to take immediate action.

Respectfully submitted.

E. VALENTINE,

FIRST REGULAR SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE
OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

House joint memorial 22.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas there is much fishing for halibut by foreign vessels within the 3-mile limit of the waters of Alaska; and

Whereas this is a gross injustice to the citizens of Alaska and is in contravention of the provisions of the alien fisheries act of Congress approved June 14, 1906; and

Whereas fishermen from the above-named alien halibut vessels are ruthlessly and illegally slaughtering deer; and

Whereas the Federal Bureau of Fisheries with its present limited facilities can not effectively patrol the region affected:

Therefore your memorialists earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable body that a revenue cutter or other suitable vessel be directed to patrol the coastal waters of southeast Alaska during the fishing season to enforce the provisions of existing law.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Senate joint memorial 17.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the Congress did on the 25th day of June, 1910, enact a law entitled "An act to provide for the care and support of insane persons in the Territory of Alaska"; and

Whereas the buildings provided for in said act to be built at Fairbanks and Nome have not been constructed for the reason, as stated by the governor of Alaska, given upon the advice of the Attorney General, that no provision was made in said act for the purchase of sites upon which to construct such buildings, and that the Government could not accept the donation of sites; and

Whereas all insane persons in the fourth and second judicial divisions are forced to remain in the United States jails, awaiting a convenient time for their transportation; and

Whereas the sum of $4,000 will purchase suitable sites in the towns of Fairbanks and Nome for the hospitals provided for in said act: Now, therefore

We, your memorialists, do most earnestly and respectfully request that an appropriation be made in the sum of $4,000 to purchase suitable sites for the construction of detention hospitals at Fairbanks and Nome, as provided in the act of Congress of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for the care and support of insane persons in the Territory of Alaska."

IN THE SENATE, TERRITORY OF ALASKA, FIRST SESSION.

Senate joint memorial 28.

To the honorable the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully submit the following facts:

That under the United States mining laws, applicable to the Territory of Alaska, it is required that $100 worth of labor be performed or improvements made on or in connection with each claim annually;

That many claims in Alaska are deep, and of such a nature that the expenditure of $100 thereon in the way of labor, as required under the said United States mining laws, can not possibly result in any improvement thereof;

That it is a well-known and generally admitted fact that the construction of wagon roads and the building of trails in Alaska are of urgent necessity to the development of the resources of the Territory;

Now, therefore, in view of these facts, we respectfully urge that the United States mining laws, in their application to the Territory of Alaska, be amended so that it may be optional with any claim owner to either perform $100 worth of labor upon his claim, as now provided by said United States mining laws, or to pay to the recorder of the precinct in which his claim is situated the sum of $100, and that all sums thus collected be expended in the construction of roads and trails in the precinct in which the same is collected, under the supervision of the Alaska road commission.

Senate joint memorial 23.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Legislature of the Territory of Alaska hereby memorializes your honorable body and respectfully represents—

First. That near the corporate limits of the town of Skagway, Alaska, a wagon bridge across the Skagway River is urgently needed to serve the needs of said town and of residents outside of the corporate limits thereof, which bridge could be constructed at a cost of from four to five thousand dollars.

Second. That the Federal Government has not constructed any roads or trails for the benefit and advantage of citizens in the vicinity of Skagway, although the license moneys collected from industries operated from said town and apportioned to road construction are extensive, amounting to approximately $2,000 annually.

Third. That your memorialists have been presented with a petition asking for the construction of the bridge referred to, signed by practically all of the adult male residents of said town of Skagway, and your memorialists believe that an appropriation for said work is urgently needed and should be made.

Wherefore it is respectfully urged that this memorial be referred to the department of the Government charged with the construction of roads and bridges in Alaska, and that the construction of said bridge be authorized to be begun without delay.

Whereas we consider the present lack of such roads, trails, and transportation facilities a most pressing and vital matter as regards the prospecting and development of the great interior of Alaska: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the National Congress be, and hereby is, requested to set apart and appropriate all moneys derived from the seal fisheries

Whereas we believe it to be our duty to use every effort toward the protection and conservation of the great natural food supply of the Nation; and

Whereas at the present time the food fish of the waters of Alaska are being depleted by the use of same for the manufacture of same into fertilizer; and

Whereas we believe that the taking and using of any food fish for any other purpose than for food and bait should be prohibited: Therefore

FIRST REGULAR SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

House joint memorial 21.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the omnibus public building act of 1910 authorized the construction of a Federal office building, intended to provide quarters for the post office, customhouse, governor's office, and other important offices of the Government at Juneau; and, although an excellent site has been acquired for said building, the limit of cost of $200,000 for the building and site has been found wholly inadequate for the construction of a building suitable for the purposes of the authorization; and

Whereas this legislature has been created since the passage of the said act, necessitating additional quarters for the legislature and Territorial offices; it will be necessary to construct a much larger building than was at first contemplated; and

Whereas the Commercial Club of the City of Juneau has heretofore presented to your honorable body a petition setting forth the needs of the Territory in this regard and explaining the situation as it now exists; your attention is invited to said petition: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, That we earnestly and respectfully petition the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled that a total sum of $500,000 be authorized for the construction of a Territorial capitol building at Juneau, Alaska, for the accommodation of the legislature, all Federal offices except the courts, and all Territorial offices; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Hon. FIRST REGULAR SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

House joint memorial 10.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent:

That the Territory of Alaska has a white population of upward of 40,000, of which approximately 3,000 are children of school age attending the public schools; that there are in the Territory of Alaska 42 white schools. Your memorialists further represent that there is not at this time a Territorial board of education, examining board, or superintendents to govern said schools.

We, your memorialists, therefore most earnestly pray that a board of education and a board of examiners be created for the Territory of Alaska, and that not less than two school superintendents be appointed to visit and superintend all public schools for white children in the Territory of Alaska, and that the honorable Senate and Congress of the United States appropriate a sufficient sum of money to defray the expenses of said boards, together with the salaries of said superintendents; and further, that the school laws of Alaska be so amended as to include amendments hereunto attached.

Amendments to Alaska school laws.

CHAPTER I.

SECTION 1. That a board of education for the Territory of Alaska shall be created, said board to consist of the governor, secretary, and treasurer of the Territory of Alaska, of which the governor shall be president and the Territorial secretary shall be secretary. The governor of the Territory of Alaska shall be ex officio superintendent of public instruction.

SEC. 2. The board shall meet at the call of the secretary at the capital of the Territory not less than once in each year, and a concurrence of a majority of all members of the board shall be necessary to the validity of any act of the board.

SEC. 3. The powers and duties of the board are as follows:

First. The board shall have power to appoint one superintendent over all public schools within the first and third judicial divisions of the Territory, except the Indian schools now under Government supervision, and one superintendent over all public schools within the second and fourth judicial divisions of the Territory, except the Indian schools now under Government supervision.

Second. To adopt rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the law of the Territory, for its own government and for the government of the public schools and school libraries.

Third. To devise plans for the increase and management of the Territorial schools.

Fourth. To prescribe and enforce the use of a uniform series of textbooks in the public schools: Provided, No change of textbooks shall be considered or made by the Territorial board of education, except at its regular meetings or at some special meeting thereof held for that purpose, and notice of such intention shall be communicated by the secretary of said board in writing to each divisional superintendent at least 90 days prior to the time of holding such meeting: Provided, That on the adoption of a uniform series of textbooks such series shall not be changed during the period of four years next succeeding the adoption of such series.

Fifth. To prescribe and enforce a course of studies in public schools.

Sixth. To adopt a list of books for school libraries.

Seventh. To grant (1) educational diplomas, valid for six years, and (2) life diplomas.

Eighth. To revoke, for immoral conduct or evident unfitness for teaching, Territorial diplomas.

Ninth. To adopt and use in the authentication of its acts an official seal.

Tenth. To keep a record of its proceedings.

Eleventh. To grant first-grade Territorial certificates, when in their judgment it seems advisable, to graduates of universities and chartered colleges of similar rank.

SEC. 4. Territorial educational diplomas shall be issued to such persons only as have held a first-grade certificate for at least one year and who shall furnish satisfactory evidence of having been successfully engaged in teaching for at least five years, or who shall be of good moral character.

SEC. 5. Every application for a Territorial diploma must be accompanied by a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Territorial board of examiners, recommending that the same be granted.

SEC. 6. Life diplomas must be issued upon all and the same conditions as educational diplomas, except that the applicant must furnish satisfactory evidence of having been successfully engaged in teaching for at least 10 years and, in addition thereto, the applicant must pass an examination in pedagogy, history of education, school economy, and school government.

SEC. 7. All diplomas issued by the board shall be signed by a majority of the members of said board.

SEC. 8. Every person receiving a Territorial diploma must pay to the board $10 to defray the expenses of issuing said diploma.

CHAPTER II.

TERRITORIAL BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

SEC. 9. The Territorial board of examiners shall consist of the superintendent of public instruction and two competent persons appointed by him, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 10. The superintendent of public instruction shall be chairman of the board.

SEC. 11. The board must meet at such times and places as the chairman directs, and must hold at least two sessions in each year.

SEC. 12. The board has power:

First. To adopt rules and regulations governing the examinations of applicants for Territorial certificates and to conduct the examination of such applicants for certificates.

Second. To prepare questions for the examination of teachers and to forward the same to the divisional superintendent for use in the semiannual examinations, which questions shall be divided into four lots, each lot to be inclosed in a separate envelope, which shall be sealed with wax bearing the imprint of the seal of the Territorial board of examiners, and shall be forwarded to the divisional superintendent of each division.

The division superintendent of each division, in the presence of any two qualified members of a district school board and of the applicants for teachers' certificates, shall open one lot of questions and distribute same to the applicants at each session of the examination, and there shall be no interruption of said session until each applicant shall have handed in to the said division superintendent his or her examination paper.

Third. To grant recommendations for life certificates and diplomas.

Fourth. To grant Territorial certificates of the first grade, valid for four years.

Fifth. To grant Territorial certificates of the second grade, valid for three years.

Sixth. To revoke certificates of teachers who are guilty of immoral conduct or are unfit to teach.

Seventh. The board may, at the expiration of time for which they were granted, renew certificates for a like period for which they were originally granted.

SEC. 13. Every applicant for a first-grade Territorial certificate must be examined by written and oral questions in algebra, geography, history, and civics, physiology, hygiene, with special reference to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics and stimulants upon the human system, natural philosophy, orthography, defining penmanship, composition, reading, method of teaching, grammar, arithmetic, and the school laws of Alaska. Applicants for a second-grade certificate shall not be required to pass an examination in algebra or natural philosophy.

SEC. 14. The standing in each study must be indorsed upon the certificate, otherwise it is not a valid certificate.

SEC. 15. Normal-school diplomas from any State normal school in the United States and life diplomas issued by the State board of examination or education in any State of the United States must be recognized by this Territory as prima facie evidence of fitness for teaching, and the board may, on application of the holders thereof, issue, without examination, Territorial certificates and fix the grade thereof.

CHAPTER III.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

SEC. 16. It is the duty of the superintendent of public instruction:

First. To superintend the public schools of this Territory.

Second. To investigate all accounts of all school moneys kept by any Territorial or district officer.

Third. To prescribe suitable forms and regulations for making all reports, for conducting all necessary proceedings under this title, and shall cause the same, with such instructions as he may deem necessary and proper for the organization and government of schools, to be transmitted to the division superintendents for distribution to the district officers and teachers, who shall be governed in accordance therewith. He shall prepare a convenient form of school register for the purpose of securing accurate returns from the teachers of public schools, and shall furnish each division superintendent with a number sufficient to supply at least one copy thereof to each district or school of such district. He shall also supply such teachers' blank certificates as may be prescribed for the division superintendents. He shall certify the cost of printing such blanks, registers, and certificates, together with the postage or expressage necessary to convey them to the division superintendent, to the Territorial auditor, who shall draw his warrant on the Territorial treasurer, in favor of the person to whom said amount is due, and the treasurer shall pay said warrant out of the money in the treasury to the credit of the school fund: Provided, The cost of printing of said blanks and books shall not exceed $600 annually.

Fourth. He shall not be required to visit the public schools in the different divisions, but shall communicate by mail with the several division superintendents.

Fifth. To make printed reports on or before the 1st day of October preceding each session of the Territorial legislature and shall transmit a copy thereof to the legislature. Said reports shall contain a full statement of the condition and amount of all funds and property appropriated for the purposes of education, the number and grades of schools in each division, the number of children in each division between the ages of 6 and 21 years, the number of such attending public schools, also the number of children between the ages of 8 and 14 years, the average number of children that have attended the public schools during the two years previous to July 1 of that year, the number attending private schools, and the number that can read and write, a statement of the plans for the management and improvement of public schools and such other information relative to the educational interests of the Territory as he may deem expedient.

Sixth. To authenticate with the official seal of the board of education all writings and papers issued from his office.

Seventh. To deliver over at the expiration of his term of office to his successor all property, books, documents, maps, records, reports, and other papers belonging to his office, or which may have been received by him for the use of his office.

CHAPTER IV.

DIVISION SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

SEC. 17. It shall be the duty of the division superintendent of each division:

First. To conduct examinations of teachers for certificates in accordance with the rules of the Territorial board of examiners and to forward to said board all answer papers, unmarked, submitted by the applicants for certificates.

Second. To certify to the Territorial board of examiners the names of persons who appeared before him for examination.

Third. To distribute all laws, reports, circulars, instructions, and blanks which he may receive for the use of school officers.

Fourth. To keep in his office the reports of the superintendent of public instruction, the reports of the school trustees and the teachers received by him; to record all official acts in a book to be provided for that purpose, and at the close of his term of office to deliver over to his successor such records and all documents, books, and papers belonging to his office, and to take a receipt for same, which shall be filed in the office of the Territorial treasurer.

Fifth. To keep a record of his official acts.

Sixth. To pass upon, approve, or reject accounts against school districts (subject to approval of the board of education).

Seventh. To appoint trustees of school districts to fill all vacancies caused by a failure to elect or otherwise. Such appointees shall hold office for the full period of the vacant term.

Eighth. To make reports, when directed by the superintendent of public instruction, showing such matters relating to public schools in his division as may be required of him on the blanks furnished him by the superintendent of public instruction.

Ninth. To immediately notify the board of trustees of the several districts in his division, upon the receipt of notice from the Territorial board of education, of any meeting to be held by them for the purpose of examining or inquiring into the expediency of a change of textbooks, as provided in subdivision 4 of section 3 of this title.

Tenth. He shall visit each school in his division at least once in each school term to confer with the teachers and school officers as to the best methods of conducting schools and audit the financial accounts.

SEC. 15. If he fails to make a full and correct report required under the provisions of this title at the time fixed by the superintendent of public instruction he may be recalled by the superintendent of public instruction and his successor appointed.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
JUNEAU, ALASKA.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a true and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 12 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 6th day of May, A. D. 1913.

Secretary of Alaska.

IN THE HOUSE.

House joint memorial 12.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, do most earnestly and respectfully request that—

Whereas the Kougarok mining district is rich in placer gold and other resources, and that from the nature of the country between the said district and the ocean the transportation charges on freight are almost prohibitive; and

Whereas it is feasible to construct a road from Davidsons Landing on the Marys River to Taylor Creek in the center of the active mining now being carried on; and

Whereas the said wagon road will be a trunk line for the whole Kougarok mining district:

We, your memorialists, do ever pray that Congress appropriate the sum of $50,000 for the construction of said wagon road, the same to be under the supervision of the Alaska road commission; and that copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, and Col. W. P. Richardson, chairman of the board of Alaska road commission.

Passed the house April 22, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.
BARRY KEOWN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate April 23, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

Memorial on bill of the Alaska Legislature recommending that the Congress of the United States appropriate $50,000 for constructing a wagon road from Davidsons Landing to Taylor Creek, on Seward Peninsula, Alaska.

Port Clarence is the only harbor on Seward Peninsula; in fact, the only harbor north of Dutch Harbor in western Alaska. Present freight rates from Seattle to ship's tackle, Port Clarence, on steamers, is approximately $12 per ton and on sailing vessels $7 per ton. From ship's tackle, Port Clarence to Davidsons Landing, the head of water navigation, freight is from $7 on sailing vessels to $10 on steamers. This difference in rate is due to dispatch required by steamers. The freight rate on steamers to Nome from Seattle is $15 per ton. The rate from Nome to Shelton when the railroad was operating, which now is discontinued, was $32.50 per ton, bringing the total cost of freight from Seattle to Shelton to $47.50 per ton, as against $22 via Port Clarence. Shelton and Davidsons Landing are located equally distant from Taylor Creek, the center of upper Kougarok operations.

The present cost of hauling freight during the summer months from either Shelton or Davidsons Landing is $140 per ton. During the winter the rate is from $35 to $40 per ton. At the present time there is absolutely no road from either point, the hauling being done over the wild tundra.

In the hauling of all the heavy supplies in the past to the upper Kougarok the Davidson route has been given preference by all freighters; in fact, so much so that the Shelton route has been practically abandoned. All freight going to the upper Kougarok is now going over the Davidson route and has been so for the past two years.

The route from Davidsons Landing to Taylor is where a road is asked for.

The natural roadbed for this road will go up Marys River on a gradual rise on gravel bars for a distance of about 23 miles; thence over a low divide a distance of about 5 miles to the head of Henry Creek; thence down Henry Creek on gravel bars to the Kougarok River, a distance of about 10 miles; thence up the Kougarok River about 2 miles to Taylor.

The building of a road on Marys River and Henry Creek and Kougarok River is naturally advantageous and can be constructed at but small cost, the 5 miles intervening between the heads of Marys River and Henry Creek being the main cost of construction over niggerheads and tundra.

The amount of freight which has been hauled into the upper Kougarok during the past eight years is about 12,000 tons. The amount of money that has been spent in building ditches and developing mines during the same period exceeds two and one-half million dollars. However, the operation of the mines and the development of the country have been retarded owing to the almost prohibitive cost of transportation. For example, coal at Taylor Creek has brought $240 per ton during the summer. The present price of flour in summer or winter at Taylor is $160 per ton. This is the cheapest commodity in this section.

At the present time one dredge is operating in the Kougarok at a cost of more than twice the cost of operation of similar dredges on Seward Peninsula, where transportation facilities are procurable, as well aside from the excessive cost of installation.

Owing to this high cost many good dredging properties are lying idle.

This section is known to contain very valuable deposits of gold-bearing gravels, and which are undeveloped solely on account of the lack of roads. The area of ground which is known to contain pay extends for more than 12 miles along the Kougarok River, centered at Taylor, besides tributaries, which in some cases are being operated during the summer and others which would be operated with reasonable cost of transportation.

Owing to the tremendous costs of operating at present many of the mines where large sums have been expended are unable to operate, and the investment remains inactive, while only the very richest mines are able to continue, and they are subjected to a tremendous handicap on this account.

The summer is the mining season in this section, and during that time all supplies are needed, and the development of the country requires a good roadway and low transportation rates to make this section the producer it is capable of being.

There are several hundreds of mine owners in the Kougarok who have spent many years of their lives in attempting to develop their properties and who are dependent on the construction of this road to enable them to actually operate.

While they are just about able at the present time to exist on the output of their claims, because they can not place machinery on the ground or open them up to be worked on an extensive or a minerlike manner owing to the excessive cost of transportation.

The present annual production of this section is approximately $250,000. It is impossible to at present estimate how many times this would be redoubled with the aid of transportation facilities.

If this road be built, it will also material assist the development of a large area of promising mining ground on the Serpentine River, a tributary of the Arctic Ocean, which lies from 10 to 15 miles from Taylor, and which at the present time is almost inaccessible. It is known to contain placer gold, and the coming season will see a dredge operating on Dick Creek, a portion of this last-mentioned section. The cost of placing this dredge on the ground is enormous, but it could be placed at a reasonable figure if there were transportation facilities to Taylor.

Copper ore is known to exist in paying quantities also in this section, and could be made to pay if the ore could be hauled to tidewater at a reasonable figure.

These are some of the reasons why this appropriation should be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE, ALASKA TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE, FIRST SESSION.

House joint memorial 16.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent:

That experience has demonstrated the system of rebating permitted by section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, wherein the owners of private hatcheries for salmon propagation in Alaska have obtained undue advantage, also has resulted in great dissatisfaction among the independent salmon packers of Alaska, and such system has become most obnoxious to the people of Alaska:

Therefore your memorialists pray the repeal of said section 2 of said act, and that all fish hatcheries in Alaska be taken over, operated, and maintained by the Federal Government.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Adopted by the house April 22, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.
BARRY KEOWN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Adopted by the senate April 23, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska, May 10, 1913.

Honorable PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with the request of the House of Representatives of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copy of house joint memorial 8.

Very respectfully,

WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

FIRST REGULAR SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE
OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

House joint memorial 8.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent that—

The act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a Legislative Assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," withholds the authority from this legislature to alter, amend, modify, and repeal the laws providing for taxes on business and trade in the Territory (as provided in section 460, chapter 44, title 2, of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for the District," amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1900, providing a civil code for Alaska).

That said taxes are in some instances inequitable and deterrent to the best interests and development of the Territory, and for the further reason that some of these taxes are in conflict with necessary Territorial taxes.

Wherefore your memorialists respectfully pray that the tax on electric-light plants furnishing light or power for sale be changed from $300 per annum to a tax of one-half of 1 per cent of the business done per annum, thus encouraging the erection of electric light and power plants in small communities.

That a license tax of one-fifth of 1 per cent on capital stock be levied on banks instead of the present tax of $250 per annum.

The tax on patent-medicine vendors of $50 per annum be not assessed against mercantile establishments who carry patent medicines as an incidental part of their stock.

The tax on transfer companies be changed from a tax of $50 per annum to a tax of $5 per annum on each rig operated by any one company.

The tax of $500 per annum on breweries be abolished, for the reason that the breweries doing business in the Territory can not pay this license and compete with breweries established outside the Territory of Alaska where such license is not imposed.

The tax of $200 per annum on bottling works be abolished.

The tax on gas plants for heat or light for sale of $300 per annum be abolished, for the reason that this tax operates to prohibit the establishment of gas plants in the Territory of Alaska.

That the tax on stamp mills of $3 per stamp per annum be abolished.

The tax of $15 per annum for cigar stores or stands apply only to regular cigar stores or stands and not to the sale of cigars in mercantile establishments or barrooms paying the tax required for mercantile establishments or barrooms; and it is

Resolved by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, That a copy hereof be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate to Congress, Washington, D. C.

Passed the house April 30, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate April 30, 1913.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and complete copy of house joint memorial 8 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 10th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
JUNEAU, ALASKA.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a true and complete transcript of house joint resolution No. 7 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 8th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

House joint memorial 7.

The Legislature of the Territory of Alaska respectfully presents to your honorable body this its memorial, and represents:

I.

That, notwithstanding the creation by your honorable body of a Territorial government for the Territory of Alaska, the Federal Government continues to levy and collect direct taxes upon the resources of said Territory of Alaska, under the provisions of section 460 of the Alaska Penal Code as amended, and to disburse the moneys so raised.

II.

That your memorialists must necessarily resort to the same source for the collection of any revenue which may be raised to defray the expenses of local government in Alaska, thereby imposing an additional burden upon the industries already taxed.

III.

That for the better government of the Territory of Alaska the following additional offices should be provided, to wit:

First. An attorney general for Alaska, at a salary of $7,500 per annum, whose duties shall be:

(a) To act as legal adviser to the governor of said Territory in the administration of the local affairs of said Territory.

(b) To similarly advise and confer with the Territorial legislature upon all matters concerning contemplated legislation which is likely to conflict with existing laws, and to suggest needed legislation concerning the administration of the local laws of Alaska.

(c) To confer with and advise the officers of the Federal Government in the discharge of duties imposed upon them by the Alaska Code.

(d) To perform such other duties as are usual and customary or as occasion may from time to time demand.

Second. A secretary of state for Alaska, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, whose duties shall be those which generally attach to such office as well as such duties as may be required of him by your honorable body, by the governor of Alaska, and by your memorialists.

Wherefore your memorialists urge that your honorable body do make provision for the appointment and compensation of the officers hereinbefore named, together with a reasonable allowance for clerk hire and for office equipment and supplies.

Passed the house April 19, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate April 25, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

By Mr. NELSON:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36) proposing an amendment to the second paragraph of section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GOVERNMENT ARMOR-PLATE FACTORY.

Mr. ASHURST. I introduce a bill and ask that it be read.

The bill (S. 2308) to provide for the erection of an armor-plate factory was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,600,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of suitable buildings and the purchase of suitable machinery and materials necessary for the establishment and maintenance of a plant for furnishing armor plate for the use of the Navy of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint a board to consist of three officers of the Navy, who shall examine and report what, in their opinion, is the most suitable site for the erection of a plant provided for in the foregoing section of this act; and no money shall be expended until the site so selected shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 3. That the board so appointed shall report to the Secretary of the Navy within three months after the passage of this act and that work on the erection of the manufactory and plant shall begin within six months after this act goes into effect and be continued with all due expedition until completed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this bill is brief, is easily understood, and is important. By introducing this bill I am not pioneering any new movement or attempting to bring to the notice of Congress a subject with which Congress is unfamiliar, but I am simply endeavoring to put into law the concrete result of the valuable public services respecting this subject that were performed by a Senate committee in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

It has been a pleasant task for me to read the tomes that make up the Senate reports and to find that in the early part of January, 1896, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs had before it and considered a bill of which the one I have just introduced is almost a rescript. It is with peculiar pleasure I find that the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] were then, as now, engaged in rendering patriotic and valuable services to their country. I find that the committee which then considered the subject of the erection of an armor-plate factory was comprised of Senators Cameron (chairman), Hale, PERKINS, McMillan, Chandler, BACON, and TILLMAN. That committee, in addition to considering the bill for the erection of an armor-plate factory, had before it a resolution, agreed to on December 31, 1895, which, among other things, directed the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire whether prices paid or agreed to be paid for armor for vessels of the Navy were fair and reasonable.

On January 18, 1896, the committee began investigation by receiving a statement made in person by the then Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Hilary A. Herbert. Testimony was also taken from various sources, and hearings were granted to the Bethlehem Iron Co. and the Carnegie Steel Co. Owing to the rapid progress of Congress in dispatching its business, it was found impossible to conclude the inquiry and make a written report at the close of the session. During the recess of Congress the Secretary of the Navy proceeded to obtain information upon which to make conclusions necessary to enable him to form an opinion upon the question as to what was a fair price for armor. The committee made its report on February 11, 1897, and the testimony adduced and the statements made at the hearings were printed. No one may read the report of that committee and the testimony adduced at the hearings and fail to reach the conclusion that it is wise and salutary, indeed necessary, to establish a Government armor-plate factory.

Indeed, Mr. President, the fifth recommendation of the committee reads as follows:

> That a Government armor-plate factory could be erected for the sum of $1,500,000, and that it is expedient to establish such a factory in case the armor manufacturers decline to accept such prices for armor as may be fixed by law.

At the hearings before the committee naval officers made statements to the effect that armor plate could be furnished for $250 per ton. Among others, Lieut. Commander John A. Rogers stated:

> I am of the opinion that the average cost of labor and materials will not be more than $250 per ton of armor.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that the Government of the United States should proceed to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor plate, and in so doing it could free itself from the graspings and extortions of the Steel Trust, and I repeat that in these hearings that were had before the Naval Committee in 1896 it was demonstrated that this Government could manufacture armor plate at about one-half of the price charged by these companies that pretend to compete but in truth are in collusion and are not competitors at all.

Mr. President, I understand from the public press that it is the present view of the honorable Secretary of the Navy that the United States Government should engage in manufacturing armor plate, at least to such extent as might be necessary to force the private manufacturers to a competitive basis; and we must not forget that this system was followed with excellent results regarding battleship construction and the manufacture of smokeless powder.

It will be observed that the amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill for the construction of the factory is $1,600,000. If this sum should be ascertained to be inadequate a further appropriation could be made; but I have named this sum in the bill because that it is the sum which the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Fifty-fourth Congress found would be necessary for the construction and equipment of such a plant, and I have named this sum for the additional reason that it is the amount of money that would have been saved to this Government on the superdreadnought Pennsylvania had the Government manufactured its own armor plate for that battleship.

Mr. President, I ask that an excerpt from Senate Reports, volume 2, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, 1896–97, be at this time read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Senate Reports, vol. 2, 54th Cong., 2d sess., 1896–97.]

Conclusion of Secretary Herbert in his report of January 5, 1897, says: The Secretary called together a board composed of Lieuts. Karl Rohver, Kossuth Niles, and A. A. Ackerman, two of whom had been inspectors of armor at the Bethlehem Co.'s Iron Works; the other, Lieut. Ackerman, had been connected with the manufacture and use of steel in its different forms for a number of years, during which time he had spent several months at both the Bethlehem and Carnegie Works. These gentlemen made an exhaustive report upon the cost of labor and material entering into a ton of armor, showing in detail every little item, beginning with the cost of the several ingredients charged in the furnace for casting the ingot preparatory to the forging process and ending with the work on the finished plate. The result of their calculations was that the cost of the labor and material in a ton of single-forged Harveyed nickel steel armor, the Government supplying the nickel (nickel at $20 per ton), was $167.30.

* * * * * * *

Lieut. Commander Rodgers, who had been an inspector at Bethlehem Iron Works, was called upon to make an estimate of the cost of manufacturing armor, and his report, based upon observation in the manufacture of armor, makes the cost of labor and material in a ton of single-forged Harveyed nickel steel armor $178.59.

* * * * * * *

The inspector of ordnance at the Carnegie Steel Co., Ensign C. B. McVay, was also called upon for an estimate, and his report, though made separately without consultation with the other officers, is that the labor and material in a ton of single-forged Harvey nickel steel armor is $161.54.

* * * * * * *

Average for single forged of above estimate is $185.38, and $197.78 for reforged armor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in conclusion I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate into the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks, in order that I may have the record of the whole matter complete in one RECORD, the remarks I delivered in the Senate on the 16th instant, and that an article which I have just clipped from the Washington Post, dated May 22, may also be included as an appendix to my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARMOR PLATE FOR NAVAL VESSELS.

[Speech of Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona, in the Senate of the United States, Friday, May 16, 1913.]

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I presume that motion is not debatable, and, of course, I could not be heard now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. I will withhold the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, heretofore, to wit, on the 17th of March, 1913, and again on May 8 I introduced the following resolution (S. Res. 78):

> Whereas bids were opened by the Secretary of the Navy in February, 1913, for furnishing armor plate for the dreadnought Pennsylvania; and
> Whereas the representatives of three firms manufacturing armor plate in the State of Pennsylvania, while pretending to bid as competitors, after a conference submitted bids which did not vary more than $1 per ton; and
> Whereas the then Secretary of the Navy, notwithstanding an intimation made on the floor of the Senate of the United States that it was alleged there existed collusion among different manufacturers to advance the price of armor plate and divide the profits of the contract, awarded the contract on March 3, 1913, by dividing, for all practical purposes, the award of 8,000 tons of armor plate among the three companies; and
> Whereas it is alleged that this action of the said firms reveals that they comprise an Armor Plate Trust, and that the price named in the contract awarded by the Secretary of the Navy is in the neighborhood of about $25 per ton higher than the previous awards by the Department of the Navy for armor plate: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to forward to the Senate at as early a date as practicable a report on the amount of armor plate ordered by the Department of the Navy during the past 25 years, the prices paid in each award, and the names of the firms or corporations to whom the contracts were awarded.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I thought the Senator simply wished to make a statement.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall occupy only three or four minutes.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator desire action on the matter at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I shall not ask action on the resolution this evening.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw my objection, then. I thought the Senator wanted to take it up for action.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia; I am indebted to him for many favors, and his courtesy in withholding his motion at this time is especially appreciated.

Doubting, as I do, an opportunity to secure the early passage of this resolution, I therefore lay before the Senate and before the country the following facts: When the bids were called for, or proposals were published asking for bids for furnishing 8,000 tons of armor plate for the dreadnought Pennsylvania, three bids were submitted—one by the Carnegie Steel Co., which is a subsidiary to the United States Steel Co.; one by the Bethlehem Steel Co., of Bethlehem, Pa.; and the third by the Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, Pa. These companies were represented in this city by President Dinkey, of the Carnegie Co.; Vice President Johnston, of the Bethlehem Co.; and Vice President Petrie, of the Midvale Co. These gentlemen all stopped at one of the leading hotels here and were frequently in conference. As a consequence, when the bids were opened it occasioned no surprise to find that the bids did not vary a dollar a ton among these three companies.

When the bids were opened not only was it ascertained that the bids did not vary a dollar a ton among the three companies pretending to be competitors, but the bids were, in fact, about $34 per ton higher than the price received for armor plate by these three companies on the last previous contract. On the 28th day of February, 1913, before any of the bids had been accepted or the contract approved, and when the United States Senate was considering an item in the naval appropriation bill as follows:

Increase of the Navy; armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament for vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $11,508,309—

I introduced an amendment to that item in the naval appropriation bill, as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall forward to Congress at the earliest practicable date a full report of all bids received by him relating to the purchase of armor, ship plates, and structural steel for the battleship or dreadnought purported to be named, when completed, the Pennsylvania; and that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed not to award any contract for the purchase of steel, armament, armor, or ship plates until further directed by Congress.

I introduced this amendment in view of the apparent collusion of these three companies, which companies, I might add, comprise the "Armor Plate Trust," as it certainly seemed inadvisable that the contract should be awarded without some investigation, especially in view of the fact that it requires about three or four years to construct a battleship, and the armor plate for these ships will not be required for nearly a year. It seemed obvious that no harm could come by a delay of a few weeks until the matter could be investigated. But a point of order was made against the amendment I proposed, which point of order was sustained by the then presiding officer.

I do not especially complain about the ruling of the Chair, as I have some doubt as to whether the amendment was cognizable under the rules at that time, and I find no fault with the rule, although in that particular case it happened to defeat a wholesome modification in the proposed law. Notwithstanding the intimation made on the floor of the Senate that there was apparent collusion among the three pretending competitors, and notwithstanding the complaint that the bids were about $34 per ton higher than the price received for armor plate on the last previous contract, the then Secretary of the Navy, in the expiring hours of a defeated, not to say discredited, administration, accepted the bids, and on the 3d day of March, 1913, let the contract by dividing, for all practical purposes, the 8,000 tons of armor plate among the three companies pretending to be competitors. Without further emphasizing the unexplained and peculiar haste on the part of the retiring Secretary of the Navy to facilitate these companies comprising the Steel Trust, I desire to state that the result of letting such contracts was and is that this Government, if the contract shall be enforced, will be required to pay $454 per ton for class A armor plate when heretofore this Government has never paid a higher price than $420 per ton for class A armor plate. But, Mr. President, the apparent collusion among the pretended competitors and the additional $34 per ton to be paid by this Government for the armor plate are not the only facts relating to that transaction which should be exhibited to the Senate and the country.

Speaking upon this subject in the Senate on May 14, I stated the following: "Our Republican friends on the other side of the aisle have recently fulminated very much and thundered in the index over public hearings, and if they be sincere they will all vote to adopt the resolution I have introduced, so that the American people may see where their money goes. You claim you want 'light.' If you assist in passing this resolution, you will see how the Steel Trust mulcted this Government to the tune of $1,600,000 in furnishing the armor plate that is to be used in the building of the superdreadnought Pennsylvania."

A Senator subsequently said to me that he hoped I would explain just how and in what manner the Public Treasury had been mulcted to the amount of $1,600,000 with respect to the armor plate for the Pennsylvania, and I am sorry to say it is a fact that the armor plate for the Pennsylvania, under these bids as accepted by the former Secretary of the Navy, will cost this Government just $1,600,000 too much, and for the following reasons: The price to be paid by the Government under these contracts is $454 per ton for 8,000 tons of class A armor plate. I have no funds at my disposal with which to employ experts to ascertain at what precise figure armor plate may be purchased, moreover, the best experts in armor are not to be expected to come before Congress and give their knowledge of the cost of armor plate or to prove the inferiority of armor plate furnished for all or for any battleships, when in so doing they would lose thousands of dollars, would be discharged from their present situations, and could obtain no further employment from large steel manufacturers; but I have obtained information from what I conceive to be a reliable source that if Congress will offer the proper compensation and protection to experts, they are able to and will furnish evidence showing conclusively that this class A armor plate may be manufactured at large profit at the price of $254 per ton. If this be true, and many persons believe it can be substantiated, this Government is paying exactly $200 per ton too much on the 8,000 tons of armor plate to be used in the Pennsylvania, which makes an excess of $1,600,000 that we are paying for the armor plate in this one battleship.

No Senator will forget it is a matter of record that the Carnegie Steel Co. has heretofore furnished defective armor plate, was convicted of defrauding the Government of nearly $500,000 in an armor-plate contract, and finally compromised the matter by paying, as I remember, about $160,000 as a penalty for its fraudulent transaction.

Therefore the following deplorable situation is before us: Only three companies in the United States manufacture armor plate, namely: The Carnegie Co., the Bethlehem Co., and the Midvale Co. They pretend to compete, when in truth they are in collusion among themselves. They submit bids for 8,000 tons of armor plate at $454 per ton—which is $34 per ton higher than has ever heretofore been paid for such armor plate—when in fact it would be possible to demonstrate that this same armor plate should cost the Government but $254 per ton. The following figures will be found interesting: Eight thousand tons of armor plate at $454 per ton equals $3,632,000; but if this armor plate can be furnished at $254 per ton, the Government should be paying $2,032,000 instead of $3,632,000, which would be a clear saving to the Public Treasury of $1,600,000 on one ship alone. In addition to the fact that these companies are furnishing armor at an extortionate price there exists also an uncertainty as to how much defective armor has been furnished or is being furnished. There exists grave doubt as to whether these companies have furnished good armor plate to the Government and not armor that will prove treacherous and defective in the time of the Nation's greatest need.

Although the Navy Department some 12 or 14 years ago used considerable care in attempting to conceal the information, it is nevertheless a fact that from certain tests made—which tests were not made voluntarily by the Navy Department, but under pressure from Congress—it was ascertained that armor plate which was supposed to be the heaviest and strongest was destroyed by an outside explosion of a single Gathmann high-explosive shell, and no recognition of the result of such tests was ever definitely or adequately reported to Congress. I therefore make this statement at this time and feel that nothing should preclude my laying these facts before the Senate and before the American people, to the end that the day may soon come when the United States shall not be obliged to submit to the extortions of this grasping Steel Trust, which extends its hungry and larcenous fingers into the Public Treasury and from the people's revenue extracts on one contract alone $1,600,000; and even then no man knows whether these companies furnish sound armor plate or defective armor plate.

I see around me Senators earnest and honest in trying to perform their public duties. They observe, as they should, every item in an appropriation bill. I had the pleasure recently to serve on one of the great committees of the Senate—I will not relate what occurred before the committee, because that is against the rules—where Senators closely scrutinized every item in an appropriation bill. That was proper and as it should be; but why not chase large game also? Why scrutinize the salary of some overworked and underpaid postal employee and ignore the fact that a defeated administration in its last hours, over protest and with what I might characterize as suspicious haste, executed a contract on the 3d of March which provides that this Government should pay $454 per ton for class A armor plate when the Government beyond doubt could manufacture its own armor plate at about $254 per ton, and, in addition thereto, know that there was no defective material in these great ships which, eastward and westward with sheen of crystal mail, we send forth upon the ocean to guard well the gleaming strand of this, our native land? I have laid these facts before the Senate in the hope that they might attract attention to the advisability of the Government making its own armor plate and thus be relieved from the extortions and larcenies of this Steel Trust.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ASHURST. I am just about to conclude. I hold the floor only by virtue of the kindness of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and I feel that I can not yield to anyone so long as I hold the floor by his kindness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire whether the Senator desires the resolution to lie on the table or to be referred?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can not at this moment ask for the adoption of the resolution, because it has always been my training never to ask for action on a proceeding, motion, or any other matter to which there is objection unless the persons making the objections are present. Observing that the Senator who made the objection the other day is not in his seat at this particular time, I do not ask for the adoption of the resolution. Moreover, I can not ask for action on the resolution at this time, for I obtained the floor upon the understanding that I would not ask for the adoption of the resolution

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator still wants the resolution to lie on the table?

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have it lie on the table. And I now give notice that at the earliest opportunity I may secure the floor properly under the rules I shall ask for the adoption of this resolution.

[From Washington Post of May 22, 1913.]

"IF WE ARE TO SUBSIDIZE ARMOR PLANTS," SAYS SECRETARY, "LET US DO SO MAN FASHION, BY STATUTE"—CONTRACTS NOT GIVEN TO LOWEST BIDDER, HE DECLARES—SURPRISED AT MODERATION OF THE STEEL FIRMS.

Responsibility for price agreements among manufacturers furnishing armor plate for American warships was placed directly upon the Navy Department itself yesterday by Secretary Daniels. In a statement following his announcement Tuesday of his intention to submit a plan for a Government armor plant, the Secretary declared that the policy of the department in dividing plate contracts among all bidders at the lowest figure offered "makes all pretense of competitive bidding to get the lowest market price a farce that can not possibly deceive anyone acquainted with the facts."

GLAD OF PROPOSED INQUIRY.

Mr. Daniels said he was glad the resolution for an investigation of this matter, introduced recently by Senator ASHURST, was before Congress, and that it only anticipated a formal statement which he proposed to prepare requesting relief from "an intolerable situation."

How contracts for armor for the new battleship Pennsylvania were let by Secretary Meyer last March was told in detail in the statement. Three steel companies submitted virtually identical bids, and the contracts were divided among them.

WANTS NO SUBTERFUGE.

"If we are going to subsidize the Carnegie, Midvale, and Bethlehem companies," said Mr. Daniels, "so as to have the advantage of their armor plants in time of war, then let us do so honestly and man fashion, by statute, without concealment or attempt at hypocritical evasion of the intent of Congress to force competition and to award contracts to the lowest bidder.

"If we are, on the other hand, going to honestly award our contracts to the lowest bidder, let us do so. The effect will be, possibly, to encourage real competition among the companies, provided always that the present contention of the Department of Justice that the steel companies are a combination is disproved by the evidence."

"Bids for the Pennsylvania armor were opened," the statement continued, "after the publication of a notice 1 inch long, in the smallest type, in one paper only, the Philadelphia Item, that sealed proposals would be received at the Navy Department at 12 o'clock noon, February 18, with no hint of the amount, and only four weeks in advance of the date set for the receiving of the bids."

CONTRACT ARBITRARILY DIVIDED.

"It would be natural," the statement continued, "to suppose that the lowest bidder would receive the award, but such was not the case, nor has it been the case for a long time past, and here is where the whole trouble lies. On the theory that all three companies must be encouraged to maintain their armor-plate departments, the contract was arbitrarily divided among them. All three companies agreed to a price of $454 per ton for class A, $518 for turret armor, $496 for class B, and $548 for class C. Under the circumstances, I am surprised at the moderation of the bids, because, under this theory that we must distribute the work at the lowest price among the three firms, I do not see that anything but modesty or fear of a congressional investigation keeps them from putting in, say, $700 per ton as their lowest bid."

STEEL COMPANIES ARE FRANK.

The Secretary made public two letters which he received from companies which submitted bids for the Pennsylvania contract, because, he said, they were "so remarkable for their frankness and so completely illustrating from their own words, the evils of the situation."

The Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, write:

"It has been the custom to divide the work between the competing companies at the price of the lowest bidder after asking if the other bidders will accept their portion of the work at this price, this method being deemed expedient by the department. On subsequent bids for similar material it was but natural for the competing companies to bid the price set by the previous divided order."

HIGHER THAN PREVIOUS BID.

The Bethlehem Steel Co., of South Bethlehem, Pa., told practically the same story:

"Instead of awarding a contract for the whole of an order to the lowest bidder the department has in most cases of the kind divided the order between two or more of the competing firms upon the higher bidders agreeing to reduce their prices to the price named by the lowest bidder. In view of that practice it has come to be understood by every manufacturer that the naming of a lower figure by him would merely lower the price that he and each one of his competitors would receive for a part of the order."

Concluding his statement Mr. Daniels commented on the fact that the bids for the Pennsylvania armor were 8 per cent higher than the price of the last previous armor made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to enter a notice of a proposed amendment to the rules of the Senate, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XIX of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 6. That debate or dilatory motions which in the opinion of the Senate are intended to prevent the majority of the Senate from exercising the full and free right to control any matter pending before the Senate, either in legislative or executive session, may be terminated by a vote of the majority of the Members of the Senate upon notice given by the Senate: Provided, however, That this rule shall not be invoked to prevent reasonable debate by any Senator who requests opportunity to express his views upon such pending matter within a time to be fixed by the Senate.

"The notice given by the Senate under this section, except by consent, shall not be less than a week, unless such request be made within the last two weeks of the session."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be entered.

SEMINOLE INDIANS OF FLORIDA (S. DOC. NO. 42).

Mr. FLETCHER. I have received a letter from F. H. Abbott, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inclosing a partial report of conditions existing among the Seminole Indians of Florida. I ask that the letter and accompanying report be printed as a public document and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Unless there are other Senators who desire to introduce bills or resolutions——

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask, Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will yield to me for just a second?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Morning business has not closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business has not closed. The Chair recognized the Senator from Nevada for the introduction of a bill or a resolution, as he supposed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What I desire to say will require but a second.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thought morning business had been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet been concluded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. As I have said, Mr. President, I will take but a moment. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to say that, in view of the fact that for the past two months we have had one long doleful and tearful tale on the sugar question to the effect that the planters of the South would be annihilated at one fell swoop, I felt that it would be refreshing, at least, to have the testimony of some others not belonging to that particular class.

I have clipped from a prominent paper published in my State, the Newark Evening News, the statement of Mr. George F. D. Trask, a gentleman whom I know, a man of wealth and large business interests, living in Orange, N. J. He writes to Representative McCOY, thereby putting himself on record as one exception in believing that the sugar interests are not going to be destroyed. Mr. Trask urges that free sugar will advance not only the people's interest but will advance at the same time the interests of the sugar planters. He has bought and invested largely in Louisiana lands in consequence of and in the hope of this step, and he finally says:

I am heartily in favor of free sugar. I think it will be a fine thing for the country as a whole, and that the injury which the present producers claim it threatens to them is grossly exaggerated. I do not believe that it will result in shutting down any plant or factory that ought not to be closed anyhow.

I know that in one case a very large producer has lately added enormously to its cane-producing acreage in anticipation of the reduction or abolition of the duty.

I desire that this shall be known and go on record as the testimony of a capable, ingenious, bright, and successful business man and investor, who is willing to invest his money notwithstanding the calamity howls of the sugar planters.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I received by mail this morning three or four clippings from newspapers published in the State of Louisiana giving accounts of public sales of certain plantations. I desire to refer them to the Senator that he may in turn refer them to the gentleman whom he has quoted, so that he can be made aware of the fact that he can buy plenty of such land right now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall be very glad to have them; but I will say further, for the enlightenment of the Senator, that even in my Commonwealth I can show him not only 3 or 4 but I can show 44 parcels of farm lands in New Jersey that are offered for sale under the benign and beneficent blessings of the Republican tariff.

THE TARIFF—THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if morning business is closed, I should like to address the Senate for just a few minutes.

On the 15th of this month the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] delivered what I considered a rather sensational address in this Chamber. In it he referred particularly to a circular claimed to have been issued on the 12th day of March, 1893, and read from what he claimed——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah will observe that the Senator from Colorado is not in the Chamber. I do not know whether or not the Senator wishes to go on in his absence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am only going to give the absolute history and facts. That is something that can not affect the Senator from Colorado in any way. I do not want the Senator to understand that I am going to reflect upon the Senator from Colorado in the least.

The Senator read the circular and stated that it was from the March, 1912, issue of Pearson's Magazine. In order that the facts in relation to this circular may be known to all, I wish to say that I have taken up this question with the American Bankers' Association, for that article stated that the circular emanated from that association. I want briefly now to review the history of this fraudulent circular.

So that there may be no mistake about it, I want to read from the RECORD the statements that were made by the Senator from Colorado, or a part of them.

He began by stating:

President Cleveland was elected, and on the 4th day of March, 1893, took his seat. Eight days afterwards, on the 12th day of March, this circular was sent to national banks in the United States:

"DEAR SIR: The interests of national bankers require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired and the national-bank notes, upon a gold basis, made the only money. This requires the authorization of $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman law, and act with other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, as per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen, and, particularly, let your wishes be known to your Senators."

The Senator then goes on to say:

Then, as now, the votes of Senators seemed to be of supreme importance, perhaps of controlling importance, the House of Representatives being then, as now, too unwieldy and with a majority too great, coming fresh then, as now, from the people, to be influenced in the right direction.

* * * * * * *

That circular acted, as a writer upon the subject has well said, "like a bombshell in a glass factory." A third of the bank notes were to be retired from circulation; in other words, millions of circulating money were for all practical purposes to be destroyed and money made as dear as possible. On the other hand, one-half of all the outstanding loans were to be called in. No enginery which the mind of man can conceive, Mr. President, is so powerful as those two agencies combined for the production of widespread and universal national disaster, and it came. And the interests which to-day are declaring their belief that disaster may result from the enactment of legislation designed to reduce the burdens of taxation may, if it becomes necessary from their point of view, precipitate panic through their control of credits and exchanges. I said that that was a conspiracy. There can be no question about it.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] interrupted and said:

I would ask the Senator particularly if the banks did immediately, and for the reason that they were commanded to do so by the circular, call in one-half of all their loans?

Mr. THOMAS. The bankers retired a good part of their circulation and called in their loans, or a great many of them did.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] then says:

The pamphlet which I have in my possession is an article upon the subject by Allan L. Benson, which appeared in Pearson's Magazine for March, 1912. I shall be very glad to give it to the Senator,

Speaking to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], Mr. LANE, during that speech, also said:

I will say for the information of the various Senators, while I am not taking any part in this discussion, that I heard rumors that there was such a circular in existence, and inquired of a friend of mine who is and was a national banker and did see the circular. He had received such a circular; it did exist; I read it myself, but I regret to say I have forgotten who signed it. It came from New York. I saw that identical circular, and I was assured by this banker that he acted upon it.

You may have that for just what it is worth. You are entirely welcome to the information.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] said:

I did not observe who signed this circular. I did not hear the Senator read the name of the signer.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not give the name of the signer, because there is no signer in the copy I have.

Mr. ROOT. Was this an anonymous circular?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know, but I do not think it was. I think perhaps the Senator knows better than I do where it came from.

I made this statement in answer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]:

Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado does not know the name, and the Senator from Oregon will give us the name of the banker to whom he refers, we can telegraph and find out; perhaps he can remember the name of the gentleman who signed the circular.

Mr. LANE. I must decline to give the name of the banker. He is a friend of mine and is still in the banking business, and I fear that it would be disastrous to him.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Oregon is very wise.

The following day I directed a letter to the secretary of the American Bankers' Association, inclosing the statement made by the Senator from Colorado, and asking whether there was any truth in the statement that this circular was issued by the American Bankers' Association, or if the circular was issued and signed by anyone else, so far as he knew. This morning I received a letter from Fred. E. Farnsworth, the general secretary of the American Bankers' Association, which I will read:

THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, May 21, 1913.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Acknowledging your letter of May 19, 1913, and the information contained therein regarding a part of a speech delivered by Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 16, 1913, I am glad, indeed, to be given this opportunity to stamp the circular referred to as a fraud and a dastardly attack reflecting upon the American Bankers' Association and the bankers and financiers of the country. I am familiar with the article referred to, which appeared in Pearson's Magazine of March, 1912, headed "That money difficulty."

We have had several inquiries since March, 1912, concerning the circular mentioned, but have not considered that it was worthy of notice or publicity on the part of the American Bankers' Association. However, now that the matter has been brought up in Congress, I am pleased to furnish you with documentary evidence as to the fraud perpetrated at the time named—1893.

Under separate cover I am sending to you by express, charges prepaid, the proceedings of the American Bankers' Association for the years 1894 and 1896, so that you will have at first hand the original denial of this circular and the action taken in regard thereto.

The controversy starts on page 17 of the proceedings of 1894. A copy of the circular is printed in these proceedings, and you will note that it was unsigned and dated on the Sabbath. You will also note that under the signature of E. H. Pullen, chairman of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association, the circular was declared a fraud and an authoritative statement made that it was not issued or countenanced by the American Bankers' Association.

This entire matter was brought to the attention of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association, and the chairman of the executive council, Mr. E. H. Pullen, was afterwards, in 1895, president of this association, as well as vice president of the National Bank of the Republic of New York City, well known and respected in this community and now deceased.

In the proceedings of 1896, page 21, you will also find a copy of a communication from W. J. Bryan, which, at that time, was answered by Joseph C. Hendrix, chairman of our executive council and a prominent banker of New York City, as well as a Member of Congress representing this section.

As these two copies of the proceedings are taken from the library of the association and are the only copies we have, you will appreciate their value to us and kindly return them when they shall have answered your purpose.

I trust now that this matter can be placed in its proper light and repudiation given to the attacks made on the banks and bankers of the country and the American Bankers' Association, and I notice with great satisfaction and pleasure your statement proving the assertion of Senator THOMAS untrue regarding the decrease of circulation during the Democratic administration of 1893–1897.

Very truly, yours,
FRED. E. FARNSWORTH,
General Secretary.

Mr. President, I have here the proceedings of the American Bankers' Association for 1894, and also the proceedings of the same association for 1896. On page 17 of the proceedings of 1894 Mr. E. H. Pullen, then chairman of the executive council, in his annual report, referring to this circular, makes this statement:

On the 29th day of March, 1894, we received the following letter addressed to the chairman:

GERMAN NATIONAL BANK,
Little Rock, Ark., March 26, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Herewith I inclose you clipping from the Little Rock Daily Press in their issue of the 24th instant which explains itself. It seems that Mr. Sovreign, grand master of the Knights of Labor, read what purported to be a circular issued by the American Bankers' Association last March upon which the officials of the two national banks of this city were interviewed with the result as printed.

If our statements are incorrect, will you kindly so indicate in your letter? If it is not objectionable to you, it might be to the advantage of the banks that your reply be published. However, if you would prefer that this should not be done, you can so indicate in your answer.

Very truly, yours,

In answer to which letter the chairman sent the following telegram:

NEW YORK, March 29, 1894.

GERMAN NATIONAL BANK,
Little Rock, Ark.

Your letter 26th with slip received. The American Bankers' Association never issued such circular. It is a fabrication and forgery. March 12, 1893, was Sunday. The association repudiates the circular as a lie out of whole cloth. I write to-day.

He also wrote a letter to said bank under same date, as follows:

"The circular in question was never issued by the American Bankers' Association. It bears no signature and is dated on the Sabbath. It carries in its mandatory language extraordinary suggestions and idiotic theories, the evidence of its falsehood, and no sane man could possibly accept it as genuine. I am very anxious to fasten upon the proper person the responsibility of this false circular. I shall write to Grand Master Sovreign on the subject and demand from him the proof of the genuineness of the circular (which I am sure he can not furnish), or an acknowledgment that he has no proof to offer. It is questionable, however, whether I can trace the lie to the party who originally uttered and published it. I should be glad if the Little Rock Daily Press would publish this letter."

This letter was signed by the chairman, who addressed the following letter under date of March 29, 1894, to—

"J. R. SOVREIGN, Esq.,
"General Master Workman, Knights of Labor,
"Des Moines, Iowa.

"SIR: At a meeting held at Little Rock, Ark., on Thursday, March 22, 1894, you spoke to a large audience and embodied in your address what you are pleased to call 'The Panic Circular,' which you stated was issued March 12, 1893, by 'The American Bankers' Association.' No such circular was or could be issued by the American Bankers' Association. It carries on its face the evidence of its falsehood. It is unsigned, and dated on the Sabbath. Will you be good enough to inform me what proof you can furnish of your statement and send me one of said circulars, bearing the signature of one or more of the officers of said association. I take it for granted that you satisfied yourself, by careful investigation, as to the authenticity of the said circular before you declared it to have been issued by 'The American Bankers' Association.' Please give me the data you obtained. I also take it for granted that you will cheerfully give as wide publicity to our denial of the genuineness of this circular as you have in the statement that it was issued by this association. Awaiting your reply, I am,

"Very truly, yours, etc."

This letter was signed by the chairman of the council.

Then follows the letter of J. R. Sovreign, grand master workman, dated Des Moines, Iowa, April 4, 1894, in answer to the one addressed to him by the chairman of the council, dated March 29, 1894:

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 4, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your kind favor of 29th ultimo, I beg to inform you that the circular letter issued in my address at Little Rock, Ark., to which you referred, I cut out of a newspaper or magazine, I do not now remember which; I carried it in my pocket for two or three months and never referred to it in any public way except at Little Rock, and by mere incident I happened to think of it and took it from my pocket and read it to the audience, and after the meeting I turned it over to the city press of Little Rock to copy, at their request. I saw the circular in several newspapers about the time it first appeared to the public, and I did not know until I received your letter that its authenticity was questioned. The circular does not bear the signature of anyone. I assure you that I have no desire to misquote any person or association, and your statement that that circular is false will be accepted by me, and I will notify the press of Little Rock that the authenticity of the circular is denied by your association, and at the earliest possible time I will return to Little Rock and in a public address will correct the statement. I am of the opinion that the place to correct an error is where the error is made; therefore, in justice to your association, I will return to Little Rock and make the correction from that place and in my criticisms of our national banking system I will confine myself to the law and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS, and concerning the cause of the recent panic I will use some private letters from leading lights in financial circles, the originals of which I have in my possession.

Thanking you very heartily for calling my attention to the error made at Little Rock and pledging you all possible reparation at my hands, I am,

Respectfully, yours, J. R. SOVREIGN, G. M. W.

Mr. Pullen, as chairman of the executive council on April 10, 1894, addressed this letter to Henry W. Ford, secretary:

NEW YORK, April 10, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The following circular has appeared during the last year in a number of newspapers:

"Issued March 12, 1893, by American Bankers' Association to all national banks.

"DEAR SIR: The interest of national bankers require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired, and national-bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money. This will require the authorization of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, and act with the other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, as per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen, and particularly let your wishes be known to your Senators. The future life of national banks, as fixed and safe investments, depends upon immediate action, as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of Government legal-tender notes and silver coinage."

You will observe that the circular is unsigned, and dated on the Sabbath. The association never issued the said circular and is not responsible for it.

Its language is the very best evidence of its falsehood as purporting to have been issued by the American Bankers' Association.

E. H. PULLEN,
Chairman Executive Council.
HENRY W. FORD,
Secretary.

Mr. Pullen continued:

The attention of the chairman was called, in last June, to United States Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 192, dated May 2, 1894, said document being a memorial signed by John Cowdon, introduced by Senator Palmer, of Illinois, and finally ordered to be printed. In this document, printed by the United States Public Printer and mailed to all parts of our country, franked by United States officials—in this document that has been so freely and industriously circulated that the edition was soon exhausted—is incorporated the same fraudulent circular and attributed to the bankers' association, the word "American" being omitted.

Under date of June 18, 1894, the following letter was addressed by the chairman to the United States Senator who introduced the said memorial:

"Hon. JOHN M. PALMER,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: I have been handed copy of memorial (Misc. Doc. No. 192) signed by John Cowdon, presented by you to the Senate on or about May 2, ultimo, in which is incorporated on pages 2 and 3 a bulletin said to have been issued by the American Bankers' Association on March 12, 1893, and called the 'Panic Bulletin.'

"I inclose circular of the American Bankers' Association, dated April 10, 1894, which explains itself.

"Do you not think it would be a simple act of justice to the American Bankers' Association that this denial should be given the same publicity in the Senate as the memorial containing the false and fraudulent bulletin?

"Respectfully, yours,

"CHAIRMAN EXECUTIVE COUNCIL."

No reply has been made by said Senator to this letter, and after waiting a reasonable time for his answer we submitted the matter to Hon. Joseph C. Hendrix, Member of Congress from New York, coupled with our request that he would, in behalf of the American Bankers' Association, deny the authenticity of this circular and denounce it in suitable terms. Mr. Hendrix kindly complied with our request, as shown by the following quotation from his speech delivered in the House of Representatives on June 22, 1894:

"Mr. Chairman, I beg to avail myself of the privilege granted in this debate to nail a falsehood and expose a forgery.

"The following circular has appeared in a number of newspapers:

"ISSUED MARCH 12, 1893, BY AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION TO ALL NATIONAL BANKS.

"'DEAR SIR: The interests of national banks require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired and national bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money. This will require the authorization of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans.

"'Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law and act with the other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, as per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen, and particularly let your wishes be known to your Senators. The future life of national banks as fixed and safe investments depends upon immediate action, as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of Government legal-tender notes and silver coinage.

"'In Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 192 the same circular is printed with the word "American" omitted. The appearance of the circular in the literature of Congress has attracted the attention of the officers of the American Bankers' Association, and they request me to give public notice in this House that the circular was never issued by the American Bankers' Association; that it purports to be issued under the date of March 12, 1893, which was a Sunday; that the document, although repeated in print, never has a signature, and that "its mandatory language, extraordinary suggestions, and idiotic theories" stamp it as a fraud and a falsehood.'"

We shall take no further notice of this transparent forgery and falsehood.

We think we have exhausted all reasonable effort to expose this falsehood and forgery and to discover its author; but he, like his paternal ancestor, the Father of Lies, is invisible.

That is the report which was made by Mr. Pullen, chairman of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association, in their conference held in the year 1894.

It came up again in the proceedings of the National Bankers' Association in the year 1896, and I wish to refer to those proceedings and read from them. The chairman of the executive council in making his annual report said:

The spurious circular alleged to have been issued on March 12, 1893, by the American Bankers' Association to all the officers of the association has continued its rounds, and in correspondence the officers of the association have repeatedly denounced it as a fraud and a forgery, and have sent to all persons making inquiry the following circular, signed by the chairman of the executive council, now president of this association, and by the former secretary of the association, and circulated through the Associated Press on April 10, 1894.

I ask that this circular be printed without reading, because it incorporates exactly the same circular that was given before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEAR SIR: The following circular has appeared during the last year in a number of newspapers:

ISSUED MARCH 12, 1893, BY AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION TO ALL NATIONAL BANKS.

DEAR SIR: The interests of national bankers require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired and national-bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money. This will require the authorization of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, and act with the other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, as per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen, and particularly let your wishes to known to your Senators. The future life of national banks as fixed and safe investments depends upon immediate action, as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of Government legal-tender notes and silver coinage.

Mr. SMOOT. Under date of January 11, 1896, Mr. E. H. Pullen received from W. J. Bryan, of Lincoln, Nebr., the following communication:

My attention has been called to the following circular which, it is alleged, was sent out by your association on or about the 12th day of March, 1893. I do not, of course, desire to ask for any papers which were confidential or which you are not willing to publish, but since the inclosed letter has been published as coming from your association I would be glad to have an admission or denial sufficiently broad to cover any letter of similar import.

Yours, very truly, W. J. BRYAN.

Under date of January 15, 1896, the following reply was given:

Hon. W. J. BRYAN, Lincoln, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of January 11, inclosing typewritten copy of a circular purporting to emanate from the American Bankers' Association, under date of March 12, 1893, I beg to inclose you an official denial of its authenticity.

Very respectfully, JOS. C. HENDRIX,
Chairman Executive Council.

Mr. Bryan apparently accepted the official denial as conclusive, and so far as we know has made no use of the fraudulent circular.

At a meeting of the executive council, held March 11, 1896, in New York City, the following declaration was made by unanimous vote:

Then follows a denial of the authenticity of the circular, and I will not take the time of the Senate to read the same.

Mr. President, the authenticity of the circular has been denied by the American Bankers' Association every time it has been brought to their attention, and denied in the strongest possible terms. I think if our Democratic brethren had believed the American Bankers' Association was the author of the circular or responsible for its circulation they would have referred to it in every campaign in the United States since 1896. But the thing was dead until Mr. Allen resurrected the forgery and published it in Pearson's Magazine. Then from that magazine article it was brought into this Chamber and referred to as evidence in support of a certain contention.

It is true the Senator from Colorado stated that he did not know whether the circular was signed by anyone or not, but he believed that it was. I am not going to say one word against his action in bringing it into the Chamber, for it has given me a chance, at least, to record in the Senate of the United States the facts showing exactly what happened respecting this circular and the false and the fraudulent attempt to impress the people of this country with the belief that the American Bankers' Association, an association not only composed of representatives of the national banks of the country but the State banks as well, was the author of this fraudulent circular.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the occasion of my remarks the other day, which, among other things, resulted in the production of the circular to which the Senator from Utah has just referred, was the assertion a few days before then by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], in substance, that all attempts to enact the Democratic financial policy—I think that was the expression used—into legislation had resulted in industrial disaster; and he made specific reference to the Wilson bill of 1894 and the panic conditions which that bill was held responsible for.

My purpose in replying was to emphasize the fact that long before that bill had been formulated, long before it had become a law, the panic of 1893, as it was called, had occurred and had practically run its course, and that it was a bankers' panic produced for the purpose of relieving the statutes of the United States of an obnoxious law known as the Sherman silver-purchasing act.

In support of that contention I referred to an article which appeared in Pearson's Magazine of date March, 1912, which contained this circular and which discussed some of the consequences of the panic which was then inaugurated. That magazine has one of the largest circulations in the country. It is an old magazine. It is financially a responsible magazine. It is one which justly commands the attention and the interest of the readers of public and current topics throughout the land.

March, 1912, preceded by 15 months the occasion of my reference to that letter. During that time I saw no denial of its authenticity, notwithstanding the fact it had circulated broadcast over the country under the sanction of the proprietors of that magazine.

I referred to it in connection with a number of other circumstances that I intended to speak about, but I did not do so at that time because of the desire of my associates on this side of the Chamber to reach a vote upon the pending question as scon as convenient, but to which I shall refer more at length hereafter.

When I was asked what signature the circular bore, as stated by the Senator from Utah, I could not answer that any signature was attached to it. I gave it as it appeared in the magazine, and I am not conscious of having charged it upon the American Bankers' Association. I did say in substance that it was a part of the conspiracy, because I called it so, to produce such a condition of business distress and disaster as would lead to the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law.

During the discussion the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], who I believe to be absolutely worthy of credence, a Member of this honorable body, made the statement that he had seen that identical circular in the year 1893. I referred to the fact that it had reached my knowledge during the course of the debates at the special session of Congress in 1893, called by the President for the purpose of securing and which resulted in the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law.

Now, Mr. President, one thing is certain—at least I think it is certain—that this circular, from some source, did make its appearance in the year 1893. The fact that the date falls upon Sunday is, to my mind, immaterial. It may be that nobody was responsible for it; it may be that it was designed to carry out and effectuate a fraudulent purpose; but it did in fact appear in that year.

I have a letter from a man by the name of A. E. Beebe, who lives at Niles, Mich., and who writes me that it was called to his attention in 1893. This letter bears date the 18th of March, 1913.

In 1900 a small volume was published in the city of Chicago entitled "Business without money," by William Henry Van Ornum, Ph. D., and on page 30 of that work appears this identical circular. To what extent this book has had circulation I do not know, but I do know that it was then current in book form, and was not denied, or if its authenticity was challenged after thus appearing, the fact has not been brought to my attention.

I have yet to be convinced—although perhaps that is a matter of no concern to anyone but myself—that this circular did not in some way form a part and parcel of the general purpose to force public opinion and the hands of the Congress of the United States in the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause of the so-called Sherman law.

I do not care to say anything more about this at present, Mr. President, except to renew the statement that before Congress adjourns I shall attempt to prove or to establish step by step the great truth that the panic of 1893 was as completely dissociated from the Wilson bill of 1894 as anything could be, and also that the panic was brought about by concerted action between the great financial powers of this country and the then so-called Democratic administration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know how it was with other Senators, but the impression which was made upon me by the speech of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] was that there were two reasons for the panic of 1893. One was this circular letter; the other, that through this letter the national-bank note circulation was reduced and that the bankers of this country had followed out the instructions of the circular.

I say, Mr. President, without hesitation, that the circular is a fraud and was never issued by the American Bankers' Association. I also say without hesitation that the national-bank note circulation of this country increased from the year 1891 up to and including the year 1897. There was not a single year during that time when it did not increase. As I called attention to it the other day, I want to call attention to it now.

The circulation in 1891 was $162,220,646; in 1892 it was $167,271,517; in 1893 it was $174,600,786; in 1894 it was $200,718,200; in 1895 it was $206,903,601; and in 1896 it was $215,168,122.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Utah will contend that this great volume of constantly increasing notes was in circulation during the year 1893 or during the year 1894. On the contrary, he knows, as does every citizen who was then living, that there was a constantly contracting circulating medium. There are more ways to retire circulation than one; and one of them is to pile it up in the vaults of the banks. The Senator knows, as does every contemporary of his who was living at the time, that the depositors of money in the banks and entitled to it could not get it out, and that the clearing house in New York, in violation of the law, had resort to the issuance of clearing-house certificates for the purpose of supplying the want of money with which to transact the business of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is wrong.

Mr. THOMAS. And while that circular, of whose spurious character the Senator says he is convinced, may have some earmarks of a fraud, it certainly outlined the situation as it afterwards developed; because there is no time in the history of this Nation when money was so difficult to obtain as it was then, when the value of debts increased appallingly, when ruin and bankruptcy and disaster attended the business of the country as they did during that frightful period in which the Senator now, years afterwards, complacently assures us that the national-bank circulation was actually expanding.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Senator through?

Mr. THOMAS. I am not.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield if the Senator desires to interrupt me.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is not through, I will wait until he concludes.

Mr. THOMAS. I will give way to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question right here for my own information. Does the Senator himself believe that the American Bankers' Association ever sent out such a circular?

Mr. THOMAS. I have never said so; but I believe that that circular was issued at the time from some source that was connected with the general purpose of bringing about a repeal of the statute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator imagine that any society supposed to have the intelligence of the American Bankers' Association, with their vast numbers, would have been guilty of so simple and so unbusinesslike an act, even had they been so criminally inclined? Would it not be so foolish to send out a circular of that kind that the Senator could scarcely conceive of a possibility of its being done?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes, Mr. President; I can conceive of an association desiring to secure the repeal of an obnoxious law doing a great many things; and while I am casting no imputation upon individual bankers, I expect hereafter to show the meeting of some of the members of this association, shortly after the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, with the Treasurer of the United States and with the Secretary of the Treasury, outlining a system or a plan—I care not what you call it—which broke in full force shortly afterwards. It was accentuated by the suspension of silver coinage by the Indian mints in June, which was the straw that broke the camel's back and accelerated the tremendous disaster of that year.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado asked me the question whether I did not know that the national bank-note circulation was held in the vaults of the banks and was not put in circulation by the banks in 1893 and in 1894. National-bank notes were not counted as a part of the reserve required to be held by national banks. Mr. President, national banks do not take out note circulation and pay an amount equal to 2 per cent interest on it unless they are going to put the notes in circulation. No bank in this country would be so foolish as to have a note circulation and put the circulation in their bank vaults when they were compelled to pay an amount equal to 2 per cent interest on it. The mere proposition on its face can not be true. A man standing at the head of a national bank and who would do such a thing would not be worthy of the position as teller in a bank.

I was going to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] the same question that was asked him by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. THOMAS. Do you want the question answered the second time?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I was going to ask the Senator if he now believed that that circular was issued by any responsible person in the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am glad I secured a direct answer from the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator could have got it at any time by asking the question. I have never sought to evade a question of the Senator; at least, I hope I have not.

Mr. SMOOT. But does the Senator think that any responsible man or anyone who has any influence at all in the financial affairs of the Government would issue such a circular and not sign it?

Mr. THOMAS. I think that when the money power of this country makes up its mind to carry out its purposes it is capable of doing whatever is necessary to accomplish its end. That is my opinion, and the history of the country proves it, Mr. President.

The Senator is somewhat inclined not to accept, at least at its full currency value, my assertion that this money was not in circulation—I mean this tremendous bank-note issue for which the Senator says the banks paid the munificent sum of 2 per cent—but the Senator can not deny the fact that there never was such a time of currency stringency in the history of this country as that from the spring of 1893 until the latter part of 1894. Where was this money, if the banks did not have it concealed? Did the people borrow it and then stuff it in their boots? Where was it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they did not borrow it——

Mr. THOMAS. It was not in circulation and a man could not borrow it; you could not get a cent for love or money; you could not borrow $5 upon a $20 gold piece.

The Senator has referred to the lack of business involved in paying 2 per cent upon a money issue and then not loaning it out, but think, Mr. President, of the enormous profit that comes after the purpose is accomplished for which the stringency is created.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado yields too much to the Senator from Utah in admitting that national banks pay 2 per cent on their circulation.

Mr. THOMAS. I am quite willing to make it anything; I have got the everlasting fact behind me that there never was such a stringency at a time when it is claimed there was an increase in circulation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The national banks do not pay a tax of 2 per cent. The tax upon the bank currency of the country, as I recall, is one-half of 1 per cent, and not 2 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator [Mr. SMOOT] refers to the interest on the bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] argued that the bankers would hardly be willing to pay 2 per cent on their currency and then allow it to lie idle. The fact is that they do not pay 2 per cent; they pay one-half of 1 per cent, and they receive the interest on the bonds which they deposit to secure their currency.

Mr. THOMAS. The establishment of the gold standard through the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause of the Sherman law brought its harvest of fortunes to these gentlemen manyfold in the succeeding years.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in full accord with the Senator that during the years 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897 the conditions in this country were most distressing, and I want to say to the Senator now that if he and his Democratic colleagues pass the House tariff bill without any changes, and if the same conditions existed in Europe to day that existed in 1893, you would have the same conditions among the working people of the United States as existed then.

The Senator says that the banks put the money in their vaults. I want to refer him to the published statements of many of the banks in this country during that period. They will show that many of them had scarcely 5 per cent of their deposits in cash in their vaults. It is true that the people were scared; it is true that they withdrew their money; it is true that it was hoarded; and the deposit boxes in every bank which had them were filled with hoarded money placed in boxes rather than deposited with the banks. The Senator ought to know that fact.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is not only an apostle, but a prophet. He now prophesies a recurrence of the same unfortunate conditions into which this country entered in 1893 and continued in a long course of travail if the Democratic Party dares to keep its plighted faith to the people.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that is a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I tell him that if his prophecy proves correct it will be because the same interests and influences operating through the same methods will again reproduce the disaster of 1893; and I interpret his prophecy as being made perhaps upon information that, in order to get rid of or make unpopular a law which is designed to shift the burden of taxation from the shoulders of the consumers to the wealth of the country, the successful tactics of 1893 will be repeated, and then, perhaps 20 years from now, another Senator from Utah will rise in his seat and make a similar prediction when the burden again becomes so heavy that the people refuse longer to bear it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want the Senator to be accurate in quoting what I say, and I want him to mark what I say specifically, because I am ready to stand by it. If history is to repeat itself, I have no question what the result will be, and I am willing to be judged by it. If the Senator is right, I shall be only too pleased to acknowledge it; and if he is wrong, then I think that he ought to do the same.

Mr. THOMAS. May I say a word?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I will mark carefully what the Senator says, because I think he speaks not only as a Senator, but semi-officially.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, so far as any information is at my command, it comes from no different source than the one from which the Senator gets his; but I have read the history of this country; I have studied it; I have seen that certain causes have brought about certain results; and I believe they will do so again. I say this—and I do not hesitate to say it with all the power at my command—that if conditions in Europe were the same to-day as they were in 1893 we could look for a panic in this country shortly after the tariff bill became a law. I say it without a question of doubt in my mind. Am I wrong? Perhaps I am; and, if I am, I will only too gladly acknowledge it when the demonstration has been made.

The Senator refers to the question of the Democrats living up to their plighted faith with the people. Did the Democrats say in the platform at Baltimore that they were going to have free wool? Did they not indorse the House bill revising the tariff in which a duty on wool was provided? Yet the present House of Representatives has passed a bill placing wool on the free list. Is that living up to the pledges of the party to the western people? I might go on and enumerate other instances of the same kind, but I do not want to enter this discussion from a political standpoint. I simply brought this matter to the attention of the Senate this morning so that the facts may be known to the country. I know it is very, very popular, I might say, for men in public life to berate the endeavors of men who stand at the head of the great industries and the banks of this country, but the day will come when it will not be so popular. I believe that they are just as loyal, just as patriotic, and just as good American citizens as many of the men who berate them upon the platform and in their lecture courses in this country. I do not say that they are all angels; I do not say that they are all honest; but I do say, taking them as a class of men, taking them as a whole, that they are just as good American citizens and will sacrifice just as much for this country as many other people who profess so much and do so little.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, they ought to sacrifice a good deal more. I think that their atonement will only be complete when their sacrifices equal the extent of their exploitation of the consuming and producing masses of the country.

The Senator appeals to history now in support of his assertion that hard times are ahead of us provided conditions in Europe change. I think I state his proposition correctly. If not, I hope he will correct me.

The Senator is a student of history. He is a very industrious man. His power of persistent effort and accomplishment has always commanded my admiration. But the Senator has read history in vain if he has so read it as to conclude that industrial convulsions have been consequent upon tariff reform. It is not the modification of tariff schedules, it is not the reduction of taxes upon the people, that have ever operated as a cause of panic, and they never will. Every panic in the history of this Nation has proceeded from other causes than the one which is always assigned afterwards as a basis of prophecy of what is to come by those who fear a change in those laws which confer privileges upon some and burdens upon others.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest that he is not strictly accurate in stating that panics are always attributed to that cause. I do not think the panic of 1907 was attributed to that cause.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator just to wait and give these panic-prophesying gentlemen time and he will learn from them that the panic of 1907 was based upon an apprehension that President Taft would be defeated in 1912. [Laughter.] There is no question but that these gentlemen have other arrows in their quivers to be used hereafter. Yet it is just as logical to attribute the panic of 1893 or the panic of 1873 to disturbances consequent upon attempted tariff reform as it is now to make these predictions of coming disaster and base them upon the same cause.

If we must continue with the present system, which has already resulted in transferring to a few thousand people control of 80 per cent of the property of this Nation, until the rest of it shall also be transferred or absorbed, I do not know but that such a panic would be preferable. I am not afraid of it; and even if I were, Mr. President, I should stand here advocating a change in the present fiscal system of the Nation. You gentlemen promised to make it in 1908. You did not do it.

Talk about hearings! The Republican Party had its hearings upon the Payne-Aldrich bill. They not only heard, but they listened. They not only listened, but they practically allowed these great interests to write their own items and their own schedules in that bill. When they did it they wrote also "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin" upon the banquet walls of the party; and when, in November of last year, the people had an opportunity to say what they thought of your antipanic-producing tariff they spoke so loudly that only the murmur of the State of Utah and the State of Vermont survived it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, am I mistaken in my recollection that the President of the United States has recently said that he belongs to a minority party, and that the result of the last election was not a Democratic victory?

Mr. THOMAS. He said it was not a Democratic victory in the sense that we obtained a majority; but will the Senator say that the Progressive-Roosevelt bolt was an indorsement of the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. They certainly were in favor of protection.

Mr. THOMAS. That is not the question. Will the Senator say that the Bull Moose vote was a vote which favored or indorsed the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. They certainly never favored or indorsed the Democratic policy.

Mr. THOMAS. That does not answer the question. As a matter of fact, their platform, and the Senator well knows it, denounced that enactment just as we have denounced it. Moreover, gentlemen upon the other side, gentlemen belonging to the Republican Party, who voted perhaps for Mr. Taft himself, did not lend the sanction of their approval to the iniquity which is known throughout the country and abhorred as the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator expect and believe that the present tariff bill will meet the commendation of the Bull Moose Party of which he has spoken?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know. The Democratic Party has never associated with the Bull Moose Party. The Senator from Wyoming used to be in close association with its members. He can answer the question, probably, better than I.

Mr. WARREN. That is the first disavowal I have heard, and the Senator has my thanks for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it?

Mr. WARREN. It is the first one.

Mr. THOMAS. It will not be the last.

Mr. WARREN. I hope not.

Mr. THOMAS. No; it will not be the last. The Democratic Party is a party that tries to take care of itself, and it has manifested a good deal of vitality.

Mr. WARREN. Still, when the Senator disavows the Bull Moose Party, and goes back to the election, he has to admit that he is a member of a minority party, and that it was the minority of the Republic that gave its consent to the kind of a tariff bill that the Senator proposes; and, if I am not mistaken, that minority will grow smaller when they come to appreciate the results of that tariff bill, if it ever passes.

Mr. THOMAS. God knows it will never get so small as the minority party that the Senator represents. That is absolutely impossible. It is now a negative quantity. I have great admiration for the Progressive Party myself. It represents a protest against the influences that have so long controlled and dominated the great Republican Party in this Nation—that have turned it away from its purposes and objects and made it the political ally and slave of those enormous interests and institutions that control every department of industry and dominate every opportunity of the American citizen.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 66, authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to hold hearings. It has been on the calendar for some time, and I should like to have it disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 66——

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the resolution first read.

Mr. OWEN. It has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and also by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 66), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations of banking and currency matters and to compile and prepare statistics relative thereto, such as may be necessary, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the sessions of the Senate, or recesses thereof, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic and clerical assistance, or otherwise, as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid for from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to pay for such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The word "otherwise" was stricken out, I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the word "clerical" was stricken out.

Mr. OWEN. The word "clerical" was stricken out, also.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has simply read the resolution as proposed. There are several amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter an objection to this resolution, and yet I should like a little information. I notice the resolution provides that the committee may sit at such times and places as in its judgment may be deemed necessary. That means that it may go to Europe, I suppose, or to Africa, or to the Orient; that it may sit in this country or in any other country and take testimony. Am I correct in that?

Mr. OWEN. I assume the Senator recognizes the fact that the language follows the usual form.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite sure on that point.

Mr. OWEN. Then I will reassure the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recall the fact that not long ago we had a very industrious commission that traveled the world over, and spent a very large amount of money, and made a report, and collected a very valuable library, and that a bill was introduced as a result of that very expensive investigation and unanimously reported; but the bill has received scant consideration on the part of the Senate. Now is the entire ground to be gone over again and several hundred thousand dollars more used, or can the Senator give us some reasonable degree of assurance that there will be a more economical investigation than the one that was made?

Mr. OWEN. I can give that assurance to the Senator without any breach of confidence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator, supplementing the question I asked him a few days ago, give us a reasonable degree of assurance that after we get through with this troublesome tariff bill the work of the session will probably end; or are we to have an illy matured and hastily constructed currency bill to struggle with here during the latter months of the summer?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is asking a good many varieties of questions in one remark. In the first place, he desires to know what will be done by the Congress of the United States after the tariff bill is disposed of. With my limited knowledge I am unable to inform the Senator on that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it the Senator's purpose to introduce and press for consideration at this session a currency measure?

Mr. OWEN. When this matter came up before I stated to the Senator what are my personal views with regard to it. I am not authorized to speak for anyone except myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice the Senator has been in consultation with the President on this subject more or less frequently; has he not?

Mr. OWEN. I decline to submit to a cross-examination upon my relations with the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think we have gotten all the light we can get on this question.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have been very much struck by one remarkable fact. For years past the Senators on the other side of the Chamber have been very insistent that there should be legislation to reform the currency. I think there has been a remarkable unanimity on that side——

Mr. GALLINGER. And our Democratic friends did not come to our rescue.

Mr. BACON. That may be true; but we are proposing to do so now. I have not stated my proposition. I said there had been the most remarkable and noted unanimity, not simply of opinion but of expression, on the Republican side of this Chamber, that the matter ought not to be delayed. The thing that has struck me as very remarkable is that in public utterance in this Chamber, and in private expression in personal interviews, it has been apparent to my mind that the Senators on the other side have all at once become opposed to any immediate action in regard to this matter. Now, why is that? I should like the Senator to tell me what has brought about that change of opinion on the part of Republican Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator desires to apply that to me, I disclaim any purpose of that kind on my part. A few days ago the Senator took me to task and read me a very pleasant little lecture on the importance of Senators remaining here and performing public business. The Senator will, if he gives the matter a moment's consideration——

Mr. BACON. No; I certainly did not apply that to the Senator from New Hampshire, because he is one of the most regular in attendance of Senators on either side of this Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to remark on that; and I regretted that the Senator's language did seem to apply directly to me because I had suggested that I thought we ought not to be kept here until winter time, sweating ourselves over a currency bill that is not going to become a law at this session, and everybody knows it.

Mr. BACON. I do not know it; I want to say that to the Senator. If my views have any influence or prevail, we will have it at the present session. As I said the other day, if this matter is of the importance that the business men say to us it is, and that our Republican brethren for the last six or eight years have been urging upon us it is, I think we certainly ought not to delay in the effort to give them the relief which they say is required.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will join the Senator from Georgia in any reasonable effort, at any reasonable time, to secure currency legislation. I think the Senator is right in the suggestion that we ought to have currency legislation at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me for just a moment. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire the statement is made, and is very frequently repeated, that our present financial system is one which puts the business community in constant danger and peril, because of the inability of those who have the direction of our financial matters and our business operations to meet great emergencies, and no man can tell when those emergencies will arise. If that be true, can there be any greater duty devolving upon the Congress of the United States than the duty to enter upon legislation which will guard against such a danger as that? And, as I said the other day, should the question of a little personal inconvenience on the part of Senators stand in the way of the performance of so great and so urgent a duty as that?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has always seemed to me, Mr. President, that the necessity for this legislation has been considerably exaggerated. I do not think that because of our currency system we have had the cataclysms in the business world that some people are in the habit of suggesting. Yet doubtless we can improve our currency system, and I am quite in favor of the effort being made at the proper time.

I regret that I have taken so much time. I shall not object to the Senator's resolution. It is a proper one, and I have no doubt the money will be wisely expended in getting information which we all desire to have.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I think I can safely say that the Republican members of that committee are anxious to proceed with financial legislation at this session. Several bills have been introduced and are before the committee, one of them being the product of the Monetary Commission, but the Republican members of the committee are unable to move any faster than the Democratic members of the committee will allow them to move. We are ready to go on with this matter of financial legislation, and will take it up as speedily as possible.

I want further to say that while a bill has been introduced, and is pending before the committee, to establish and create a national currency association—a single central association for the entire country—I understand our friends on the other side can not approve of this, because the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore condemned it. They propose instead of one central currency association to have fifteen, or from a dozen to twenty, but in all other respects, as I understand, they practically adopt the plan of the Monetary Commission. In other words, the plan is to segregate and separate the matters into from a dozen to fifteen or twenty currency associations, but otherwise the associations are to be on the line prescribed and outlined in the report of the Monetary Commission and in the bill that was prepared by that commission and introduced in Congress.

Now, such a bill as I have indicated has been introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I want to say to the chairman of the committee and to the members on the other side of the Chamber that we Republican members of the Banking and Currency Committee are ready to proceed with that work immediately and to go at it faithfully and to the best of our ability.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from Oklahoma may have action upon his resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on the amendments reported by the committee. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 11, strike out the words "and clerical" before the word "assistance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, before this resolution is passed by the Senate I should like to say a few words.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has declared that the original Aldrich plan provided for a great central reserve association with 16 branch organizations or associations, and he intimates that the Democratic Party is now prepared to abandon the central organization and to establish the regional system by practically creating 16 independent reserve associations in the banking zones covered by the branch associations of the Aldrich bill.

I wish to say a word to the Senator from Oklahoma, who leads this committee, and suggest to him that that committee should seriously consider not the question of the economic division of the country into certain banking zones and creating in each zone a reserve association, such associations numbering 16 or 17 in all, but that it should consider the wisdom of following in the banking organization the organization of our Government, which consists of independent States, 48 in number, bound together by a union as federated States.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to the importance of organizing these reserve associations within the boundaries of each individual State, one in each State, so that in such reserve associations can be grouped not only the national banks in that State but the State banks in the State, and then the system they shall organize will cover a federation of the various State reserve associations in such a way as to make their union effective in the prevention of the interruption of interstate exchange and of national panics.

I wish, in this connection, to call the Senator's attention to the fact that one-half of the deposits of this country are in the State banks, that about one half of the loans made by banks in this country are the loans of State banks, and that we may perfect our national banking system so that it may be the most perfect in the world and yet, if we leave the other half of the banking system organized under State laws in an imperfect condition, we will fail of the accomplishment of that which we desire, and it will be in the power of the State banks, through inefficient administration and inefficient management, to embroil not only themselves in difficulties but the entire national banking system.

If we will organize a reserve association in each State we can invite the State banks to come into those associations, giving them equal privileges as to the issue of emergency currency, a power which they desire, conditioned upon their complying with the national laws regarding the relation of capital to deposits and the relation of reserves to deposits.

Thus we can, through this persuasive power, secure the precautions that will insure good banking upon the part of the State banks—such precautions as we deem essential regarding the national banks. Each State reserve association will be organized, of course, to prevent local panics, for it will unionize all the banks of the State for their prevention, and so mass together the reserves of the banks, both National and State, within the boundaries of the State as to transfer those reserves to the point of attack, just as the militia itself is mobilized for a similar purpose.

Then we can, by a system of federation of the State reserve associations, analogous to that of the National Government, have a great central organization, to be called a banking board or banking commission, and by a gradual process bring the State reserve associations in such communion as to make them absolutely effective in the prevention of interstate panics and the interruption of interstate exchange.

It seems to me that such a system is eminently democratic in character, and it likens the economic system of banking to that of our system of government, maintaining the autonomy of each State complete in itself, associating all the banks of each State together for mutual protection and support, and yet facilitating their union for national and interstate purposes.

I have regretted very much of late to see that in every announcement regarding the possible action of the committee of the Democratic House attention seems to be directed in the line of the creation of economic zones regardless of State boundaries, instead of the preservation of the political zones now existing as sovereign States. I do not believe that such an organization is democratic in character. I believe that its tendency is toward an absorbing nationalism, which will still further weaken the autonomy of the States.

I believe that by following the analogy of our system of government and making the administration of our economics and our banking harmonize with our system of government in the maintenance of State lines as to the creation of economic and financial zones we will strengthen our system of government, we will preserve the autonomy of the States, and strengthen that system of cooperation which, I am glad to say, is gradually increasing, a cooperation which on matters of mutual interest is now being so generally indulged between the Nation, the Union of the States, on the one hand, and the individual States upon the other.

It was not my purpose, Mr. President, to speak so long, but I found it impossible to express what I had to say in fewer words. I do trust that the Senator from Oklahoma will at the very initiative give some consideration to this view, for if we get headed in the other direction, the direction in which, I am sorry to say, the House committee seems to tend, we will, in my judgment, accomplish the creation of a system not so democratic in form, not so inclined to preserve the autonomy of the States, not so serviceable in the exercise of State powers as to purely domestic banking and exchange and of the national powers regarding interstate exchange as a branch of interstate commerce.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, being a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency I desire to say that I am perfectly willing to do whatever the best interests of the public service require. My judgment is that a Senator or a Representative in Congress can do better work if he concentrates his attention upon one important measure at a time. I think the revision of the tariff that is now proposed is a most important measure, and it is of such importance that it ought to command the most careful consideration and the most industrious effort of every Member of the Senate.

When that is through, when that work has been completed, if we have the time and strength to enter upon another piece of legislation I am perfectly willing to do it, but I do not think it would be wise to undertake to carry along tariff legislation and currency legislation at the same time. I think while the chairman of the committee is disposed to push the matter with as reasonable expedition as possible he has pursued a very wise course in not insisting upon the immediate consideration of a currency bill while the tariff bill is before us and commanding our attention.

I do not pretend to be an expert in financial matters. I have an impression that the evils which are complained of must arise from the banking system more than the currency system, and that a few changes in the banking system could be made and then the country would not suffer if Congress took a considerable time to study any contemplated changes in our currency laws.

I felt like I wanted to make this statement because of other statements that have been made by members of the committee, with which I agree in the main but not completely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the second amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 11, after the word "assistance," insert "at a cost not to exceed $1 a printed page."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "printing," to strike out "and binding"; and in line 3, before the word "use," to strike out the word "its" and insert "the," and after the word "use" to insert the words "of the committee."

Mr. OWEN. After the word "Senate," on the first line of page 2, I move to strike out the remainder of the resolution in the following words:

And the committee is authorized to pay for such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

The committee will not expect to have any occasion for that part of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that on page 1, line 12, the words "or otherwise" were to be stricken out.

Mr. OWEN. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary has not reported that as an amendment, and it is not so marked in the printed resolution.

Mr. OWEN. On page 1, line 12, after the words "at a cost not to exceed $1 a printed page," I move to strike out the words "or otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if striking out the clause on page 2 will prevent the committee from having the hearings or the information collected printed in document form for the use of the committee?

Mr. OWEN. The Secretary of the Senate has the right to have any binding done that may be required by the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. I did not want the committee to be foreclosed from having the hearings printed and bound in the usual way.

Mr. OWEN. No; it is not intended to prevent the binding in the usual way.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purpose of getting rid of unnecessary language, I call the attention of the Senator to lines 7 and 8, the words "by subcommittee or otherwise." It is provided in lines 2 and 3 that the investigation shall be conducted by subcommittee or otherwise. I move, after the word "sit," in line 7, to strike out the words "by subcommittee or otherwise."

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senator will not insist on that amendment. It may be necessary to use a subcommittee. We are using a subcommittee now for the purpose of framing certain questions desired by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The reason why I made the suggestion was that the resolution provides—

That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations—

And so forth.

It seems to me that it is unnecessary to repeat the language. If the Senator wants it in I have no objection.

Mr. OWEN. It is the usual form, and the committee may prefer to have the work done through a subcommittee. They are doing that now with regard to framing certain questions.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have that power under the general terms of the resolution, but I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I understand one of the reasons for urging the consideration of the currency bill at this session may be possibly to divert attention from the effects of the tariff. It has occurred to me that it would be quite enough at this time to deal with the tariff, in order that the responsibilities, whatever they may be, which shall follow can be rightly located. If it shall so happen that a business disturbance shall occur and currency legislation is enacted immediately after the revision of the tariff, the present announced plan to prosecute the business men of the country for causing such disturbance may be attended with difficulty; for is it not possible that the bankers may be chargeable with causing the panic, if one occurs?

In the old days of Rome it is recorded that the emperors, after they had brought disaster to their subjects, engaged in some new and exciting enterprise in order to divert the attention of the populace from their unhappy condition. But we have passed from those times of deception, and will it not be better and safer to try one experiment with business at a time? The effects of these two great measures should be tried separately, so that there will be no confusion as to causes, whether those effects are good or bad. The money question was invoked 17 years ago as the cause for the evil times which followed the Democratic revision of the tariff in 1894, but the people knew, Such a thing should not be tried again. The issue should not be confused now.

In order that the country may analyze both these propositions thoroughly, I sincerely hope that the committee will be content at this session to acquire information, but that it may not feel like unduly hastening the consideration of the currency bill—at least not to the extent of trying to becloud the effects of tariff revision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, before the question is put, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the resolution if he has some definite plan of an investigation that is to be undertaken under the authority that is proposed to be given by the resolution? Of course, we are all aware that the Government has spent enormous sums of money recently in investigating similar subjects. There was a very large sum of money spent by the Monetary Commission and a most exhaustive report made upon all of these subjects, covering not only this country but practically all the countries of the world. There has also been a very elaborate investigation made under the authority of committees of the other House. I do not suppose that the Senator from Oklahoma intends to duplicate those investigations. I also can not suppose that he is asking for this authority unless he has some definite plan of action. I should be very much obliged if, before the motion is put, the Senator would tell us in a definite way just what the intention is that is meant to be carried out by the resolution.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this question, of course, is not a partisan question, as has been suggested by some of the remarks which have been heard on the floor; nor is this matter a new question, as has been suggested by one of the Senators. On the contrary, this question has been under the most active study and consideration for five years. It was in 1908, five years ago, that we established a national Monetary Commission. They have done a vast work, they have accumulated a great fund of information, and incidentally accumulated quite a valuable library on the bibliography of the question of banking and currency, a library consisting of nearly 2,000 volumes. Their work is of great value, of great use, of great importance; but here is a new committee taking up this question and undertaking to digest these matters. Therefore they are impelled, by a reasonable consideration of this subject, to hear the experts of the country before the committee in order that they may be cross-questioned, and so that the committee may advise itself as fully as possible.

So now to ask the chairman of the committee what he proposes to do in the way of legislation, assuming that he represents the entire committee in the matter, is going beyond the point of reason, I think, because the committee has not instructed the chairman with regard to the matter nor has the committee itself given such consideration to the question nor to any bills before it—although there are several bills before it, including the bill prepared by the Monetary Commission—that I could answer that question, except in a general way, by saying that I shall expect the committee to consider the question in its various aspects, to hear expert opinions upon it, and making a proper record of them, so that the Senate itself shall be informed with regard to what is said by experts upon this topic.

Mr. LIPPITT. I had supposed, Mr. President, that in presenting such a resolution it would be something more than merely a digestive powder. I scarcely supposed that the committee who authorized a report of this resolution would have done so without considering pretty precisely the steps that they wanted to take and the precise information that they wanted to acquire. Of course, the duplication of investigations of this sort by Congress is something almost beyond the belief of anyone who has not been in this body and seen them actually performed.

I do not know that I am going to object particularly to this investigation being made, but I had hoped that the Senator had some definite plan, some particular form of knowledge that he wanted to bring out and make public. If it is simply a dragnet investigation in the hope of discovering something that is not at present known, why, that puts one view upon the matter. I am sorry that the Senator from Oklahoma is not in a position to state definitely what he wants the investigation for.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, not to protract this discussion unnecessarily, I should like to ask the interpretation of the Senator from Oklahoma of the last two lines of this resolution, which reads:

And the committee is authorized to pay for such printing as may be necessary for the use of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Those words have been stricken out.

Mr. BURTON. Do they mean that these publications are to be for the exclusive use of the committee or would they be available for each Member of the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. I might explain to the Senator that I have moved to strike out those two lines, and the motion has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. Then, they have been stricken out? What is the intention? Is it the intention to print the hearings?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; the hearings will be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. Is it the intention that those hearings shall be available for any Member of the Senate who is desirous of reading them?

Mr. OWEN. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that under the resolution there is no direct provision for the printing; but I take it for granted that the Senator from Oklahoma will be content with the printing of a thousand copies, which every committee of the Senate has a right to have printed under the printing law.

Mr. OWEN. That was the intention of the resolution, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON ALCOHOLISM.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1620.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1620) to provide for representation of the United States in the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "ports," to strike out: "And the President is hereby authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the said congress to hold its fifteenth biennial meeting in the United States in 1915;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,850 to defray the expenses of delegates, to be designated by the President of the United States, to the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, at Milan, Italy, September, 1913, including secretarial and stenographic work and transcription of reports.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the sum of "$6,850" be stricken out of the bill and that the sum of "$4,500" be inserted. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that the reason I do that is that these international congresses on alcoholism are held every two years, and two years ago in the appropriation bill for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, a provision was inserted as follows:

For expenses of delegates to be designated by the President to the Thirteenth International Congress on Alcoholism at The Hague, Holland, September, 1911, $4,500, including secretarial and stenographic work and transcription of reports.

That is identically the wording of this bill, with the exception of the amount and the name of the place in which the congress is to be held.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that one of the delegates informed me that the amount appropriated on the former occasion turned out to be quite insufficient.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that if we give $6,850 at this time, two years hence we shall be called upon for another appropriation, and it will not then be $6,850, but it will be $10,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the Senator is correct in that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that in appropriating for all these junketing trips we ought to hold them down to just as low a level as it is possible, and I shall ask for a vote upon the question if the Senator will not accept the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it is not a junketing trip in any sense whatever, and I resent the statement that it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps, Mr. President, I designated it rather harshly, and I will withdraw the expression; but I want to say to the Senator that this is not the only request of this kind that we have had. Hardly an appropriation bill passes but that some appropriation is made to enable somebody to go to Europe. I will appeal to any member of the Appropriations Committee as to whether that is not so. I think that if we are going to send delegates to the Fourteenth Congress on Alcoholism we ought to provide for their actual expenses, but the expenditure ought to be kept within reasonable limits.

I am perfectly willing, inasmuch as we have embarked on this business and the precedent has been established, that we shall not draw a line in the case of this particular congress. I suppose if there is any congress for which we ought to appropriate for a trip to Europe, perhaps this is as good a one as any; but this is one of dozens of similar instances, and I think the time has arrived when this sort of appropriation should at least be regulated and a limit placed on them, if possible.

I move, Mr. President, that "$6,850" be striken out and that "$4,500" be inserted, which is the amount appropriated for the same object in 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$6,850" and in lieu thereof to insert "$4,500."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I will say that he has entirely misconceived the purpose of the appropriation and the history of the Congress on Alcoholism. The junketing expeditions which he abuses so extravagantly, and properly, and with such zeal, usually originate in Congress. In this case the Italian Government has extended an invitation to the United States to send delegates to the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, which will be held at Milan. These meetings commenced in 1846. They were discontinued for awhile, but they are now held every two years. Scientific men interested in temperance meet there to discuss the effect of alcoholism in its varied phases. They consider to what extent alcohol is injurious, to what extent, if any, it should be used, and all kindred subjects.

This is the first time I have ever known of an invitation extended by a foreign government to send delegates to a congress held within its borders to be met in such a parsimonious spirit. As I understand, $6,850 is the estimate made to cover only the actual expenses which will be incurred by the delegates. If we are going to send any delegates to the congress, I can see no reason why we should not pay their expenses and let them go in a proper manner. I understand that $4,500 appropriated two years ago for a similar purpose proved to be insufficient.

The Italian Government has forwarded to the State Department an invitation for delegates from the United States to attend the congress, and the usual comity of nations, the usual courtesy becoming nations, generally requires acceptance of such invitations. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment, because the amount proposed by the bill is very small and was estimated to be needed to defray the expenses of the delegates.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say that the question is not so much the difference between $4,500 and $6,850 as it is the first step in the direction of a constantly increasing appropriation. I will say to the Senator here and now that it is not any extraordinary thing for delegates from the United States to be asked to attend congresses and conventions in foreign lands. It is of common occurrence, and I am not objecting to that. As the Senator has said, there have been held 14 of these congresses on alcoholism. When was the first time that the Government was ever asked to pay anything to send delegates to such a congress?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not remember the first time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I requested my clerk to look up the matter for me, and I am informed that the first appropriation for this purpose was made in 1911. I have not had time personally to look it up; but they tell me that that was the first appropriation ever made for this purpose. If that is the case, then there were 12 of these conventions held when there was not a cent appropriated by the Government for delegates from this country; but I will say to the Senator that when this question came up two years ago I voted for the $4,500 appropriation, which was the estimate made to pay the actual expenses of the delegates to the convention held at The Hague, Holland, at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am warmly in favor of this appropriation, but I want to ask the Senator from Virginia if it might not be well to specify the number of delegates? I think there were 12 at the last convention; and, of course, we might appropriate $25,000 and appoint 30 or 40 or 50 delegates. It seems to me that 10 delegates would probably be sufficient.

Mr. SWANSON. It would seem to me, Mr. President, that if we do not limit the number of delegates, but simply specify the amount to be devoted to this purpose, we will incur no expense in excess of that amount. If we were to name 10 delegates, and the President should appoint 10 delegates and their expenses should be in excess of $6,850, they would come and ask for more money to pay the expenses. I think the better course is to fix the amount that we are willing to appropriate, and to pay the expenses of the delegates not to exceed that amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says that at the last convention they spent more money than was appropriated. Has a report ever been made showing precisely what amount they did expend?

Mr. SWANSON. This bill was introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and I think he is probably familiar with the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I will say that I was assured by Dr. Dinwiddie, the legislative representative of the Antisaloon League and the National Temperance Bureau, that the amount furnished two years ago proved to be insufficient. I am sure that he made a report to the State Department, and that report has either been communicated to Congress or is in process of transmission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Texas fear that if we make this additional appropriation of two thousand and some odd dollars, a larger number of delegates will be appointed? Will not the fact be urged upon the State Department that they have more money and ought to have more delegates?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hardly think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. And there will be another deficit.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If there should be another deficit, there will be no request made to Congress to supply it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The request would be made when the next appropriation bill comes up and the same argument would be made that they spent more money than they got from the Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think not; the amount has been carefully estimated.

Mr. SWANSON. This is a congress of scientific men. It is to be attended by good, creditable, and splendid delegates from all the nations of the earth.

Mr. SMOOT. If it were not so, we would not make an appropriation of any amount.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me get through and then I will yield to the Senator. This is an important convention; it is not a small affair; nor is it a mere junketing expedition, as the Senator from Utah would have the Senate believe. The delegates are scientific men of ability and character. Their proceedings are printed; they discuss all the phases of alcohol—its relation to tuberculosis and other diseases, its relation to social conditions, and so forth.

If there were but 10 delegates, $6,850 would only be $685 apiece, and within that amount one could hardly pay the expenses of going there and returning, covering a six weeks' trip. I have no doubt that the delegates always expend a great deal more than is appropriated. As I have said, the amount proposed was estimated for, as I am informed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], in view of what it cost for the delegates to attend the last congress. If we are going to send delegates to this convention, if it is an important gathering, as I submit it is, inasmuch as the Government of Italy has asked us to send delegates, and we are responding to that invitation, it seems to me that we should pay the amount requested for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Virginia, I desire to say that when I used the expression "a junketing trip" I spoke, of course, in general terms covering many commissions and delegations that go to Europe. Further, the Senator no doubt heard what I stated in answering the Senator from Texas—that I withdrew the remark as to this particular commission. But the Senator must remember that delegates have been going abroad for a quarter of a century; and, of course, other men seeing that they were going to Europe and that the Government was paying their expenses to go as delegates to these conventions and congresses to all parts of the world, I did not blame those interested in alcoholism for coming to Congress and asking that Congress appropriate for their expenses for similar purposes. But I do believe an appropriation of $4,500 to send delegates to this convention or congress, as it is called, is sufficient.

Of course, a full report of the proceedings will be made. There is no one in the United States interested in the subject but who can secure a copy of the report. It does seem to me that if we increase this appropriation now to $6,850 and 10 men go, next year it will be $10,000 and 12 men will go, and next year $15,000 and 15 men will go, and I do not know what the end will be.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think it is proper for us now to say to those interested in the International Congress on Alcoholism, no matter where it is held, that the Congress of the United States is willing, for the good that may come from those congresses and for the information that will flow to the American people, to give $4,500 every two years, and no more. I will promise the Senator that if the $4,500 appropriation is made the same information will be given to the American people as if $6,850 were appropriated.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, of course the number and character of the delegates sent to these conventions is fixed with some relation to the number and character of those sent by other nations. When this Government appoints delegates it makes inquiries; it tries to ascertain the character and number of delegates sent from other nations. One man could go, but usually they have larger delegations. The number of delegates sent to a convention of this character is estimated in relation to what the other nations send. Consequently, it seems to me it is not excessive to ask that this estimate that has been made as to what is needed for this purpose should be given.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the vote is taken upon this amendment I should like to amend it by inserting the word "ten" on line 5, page 1, so that it will read:

That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,500 to defray the expenses of 10 delegates, to be designated by the President of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not exceeding 10.

Mr. SMOOT. Not exceeding 10 delegates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the two amendments submitted by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. One other word, Mr. President. I will make one more appeal to the Senator. It is not simply a question of an appropriation for delegates to this convention, but as soon as this convention is given $6,850, all of the other interested parties in other conventions will come to Congress and ask for an increase; and how are we going to differentiate between them?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, an investigation will show, I am satisfied, that less is asked for this convention, considering the character of the delegates and the character of the meeting, than almost any that comes before the Senate and House for consideration. If the Senator from Utah has such a fund of information and knows more than the people that go there, more than the people that have charge of this matter——

Mr. SMOOT. That statement is uncalled for.

Mr. SWANSON (continuing). And is satisfied that 10 delegates are all that are needed and all that other nations send, of course he has information that I do not possess. I know that in considering the delegates that are to be sent, reference is had to what other nations send, their character, their number, and so on.

If this is a "junketing expedition," do not vote for it at all; do not make any appropriation for it. I do not want to vote any money out of the Treasury for junketing purposes. If it is something worthy to be considered, if the cause is commendable, if the purpose is high and proper, and Congress desires to accept the invitation of another nation, the Italian Nation, submitted to us through its foreign department in Rome to send delegates there, it seems to me the best thing to do is to take the estimate of those who are acquainted with the situation and leave to the President the determination of the number of delegates to be sent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, upon further consideration, I will withdraw the second amendment I have offered, as to the number of delegates, and leave it to the President to use his own judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent to take up for immediate consideration House bill 32, to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 32, which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "therein," to strike out: "Provided, however, That the President shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of the person appointed as such district judge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to add as a new section, the following:

SEC. 3. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional circuit judge for the fourth circuit, who shall receive the same salary as other circuit judges now receive, and shall reside within the said fourth circuit: Provided, That the office of circuit judge to which Robert W. Archbald was originally appointed is hereby abolished and no successor shall be appointed to fill said office.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to know something of the necessity of this additional judge up here in Pennsylvania. I should like to know something about the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. This bill refers to the eastern district of Pennsylvania, Mr. President. The present judge in that district is very ill. It was stated, and it is not contradicted, that he has tuberculosis, and is in the last stages of that disease. He can not live more than a few months, as his friends and his physicians state. That was known to the House Committee and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. The business there is getting very much behind, and the docket is piling up. There is a demand to have this judge appointed at once. That is why the bill was passed by the House, and why it was recommended by the Senate committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does it create an additional judge, so that from now on there will be two instead of one?

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, no. When that judge dies there will be no one appointed in his place.

Mr. BRISTOW. It simply provides for a judge during the illness of the present judge?

Mr. CHILTON. It provides permanently for a judge, but when that judge dies or is retired no one will be appointed in his place.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is all right, then. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes."

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, there is a bill of interest to my State alone which passed the Senate at the last session, and which has been reported favorably without amendment, and is on the calendar. It is Senate bill 1027. I want to get it over into the House at as early a date as possible, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 1027) to provide for an enlarged homestead, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator's bill, if I understand correctly that it is a matter which concerns only his own State.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is. I will say to the Senator that Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, and all the adjoining States now have this identical law. We are not changing a line in it, except that we enact it so that it applies to the State of South Dakota. There is not a change in it from what exists in half a dozen surrounding States.

Mr. BACON. What is the effect of it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the case of lands in semiarid regions not susceptible of cultivation, where a settler is already living upon 160 acres of land—and God knows he can not make a living on that acreage under the circumstances—it permits him to take a contiguous tract of 160 acres more by complying with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BACON. He has to pay the same price for it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Exactly. It is indentically the same as the law now applicable to half a dozen surrounding States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 73, which has been favorably reported with an amendment and is on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. WILLIAMS on the 1st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, at $1,440 per annum, to be paid from "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments.

The amendments were, in line 2, before the word "assistant," to strike out "an" and insert "a temporary"; and, in line 4, after the word "Senate," to strike out "until otherwise provided by law," and insert: "Said employment shall terminate on May 31, 1914, unless sooner terminated by order of the Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 19, to authorize the allowance of an additional clerk to Senators having less than three.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That all Senators now having less than three employees, as chairmen of committees or otherwise, be allowed an additional employee, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution is reported adversely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the resolution was reported from the committee adversely. There are several Senators not now in their seats who I know wish to be heard upon the proposition when it comes up. I suggest that the resolution had better go over for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator if he will agree that immediately after the conclusion of the morning business next Monday we shall take up the resolution for consideration?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think it would do any good for me to agree. I think there would be objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate will agree now to vote upon the resolution and all amendments that may be pending at that time, well and good. It will at least dispose of the matter one way or the other. All I ask is that next Monday we may bring the matter before the Senate, and let the Senate decide it. I wish to say to the Senator that a good many Senators now think that if they are to be given any assistance at all they need it more at this particular time than at any other period of the year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall feel compelled to object, if the Senator urges the matter at this time, for reasons that it is unnecessary for me to state, but which are very well known.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand, of course, there was objection made to the resolution, but it was made, as I also am informed, upon the theory that there was not sufficient money to the credit of miscellaneous items in the contingent fund to pay the additional clerks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; that was not the ground of objection. The ground of objection was that we had resolved upon this side to do for the other side just what they had done for us. That was the utterance of the party and we abided by that. So it is a broader question than the Senator imagines.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I simply want to give notice that next Monday after the conclusion of the morning business I shall move to take up this resolution for consideration.

ELLEN M. STONE RANSOM FUND.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to ask consideration for a bill which has been reported on four or five different occasions from the Committee on Foreign Relations and has passed the Senate four or five times. It is the bill (S. 1864) for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, reported by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to return to such contributors, or in the event of the death of any such contributor to the legal representative thereof, as may file their claims within one year from the passage of this act, the money subscribed by such contributors to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, said total sum not to exceed $66,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARY OF CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a request?

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator from Georgia to withhold his motion just one moment. I should like to dispose of Senate resolution 67, providing for the clerk of the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate some time ago favorably.

Mr. BACON. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks for the present consideration of a resolution which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 67, increasing the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. JONES. I think the resolution had better go over.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 67 notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bacon	Hitchcock	Overman	Smoot
Bankhead	Hollis	Owen	Sterling
Borah	Jackson	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	James	Pittman	Swanson
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Thompson
Bryan	Jones	Ransdell	Thornton
Burton	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Townsend
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lea	Sheppard	Walsh
Chilton	McLean	Sherman	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Shields	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Williams
Colt	Myers	Simmons	Works
Crawford	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OWEN. I am not willing to detain the Senate at this late hour. The resolution is a very small matter and can easily go over. I therefore withdraw my motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 26, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 23, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the light which shone out of the darkness and revealed unto men the soul life, with its wonderful possibilities of growth and expansion by thought, by prayer, by contact with Thee. Grant that we may come consciously nearer to Thee day by day and receive more abundantly of the heavenly gifts; that we may render unto Thee and our fellow men a richer, fuller service, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 20, 1913, was read and approved.

LABOR IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent to have printed a report made by the Commissioner General of Immigration January 25, 1913, in relation to the Hawaiian Islands, to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the report of the present Commissioner General of the Hawaiian Islands. I ask that it be printed as a House document. It never has been printed, and contains information that is of great value as to the conditions of labor in the Hawaiian Islands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document a report made by the Commissioner General touching labor in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. MANN and Mr. HARDWICK reserved the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Is it an official report?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ascertained what it will cost to print it?

Mr. RAKER. I do not think that it will amount to more than 50 pages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. Has the gentleman from California consulted with the gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Printing, as to the cost of this?

Mr. RAKER. In response to my distinguished associate, I will say that there is no chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, the gentleman from South Carolina who was chairman in the last Congress.

Mr. RAKER. I would have consulted the chairman had there been any. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not object.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall object for the present until I can ascertain what this is.

Mr. RAKER. I will withhold it for a few moments until the gentleman from Georgia can examine it.

BILLS INTRODUCED WITHOUT THE NAME OF A REPRESENTATIVE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the Clerk announce the titles of five bills that have been put in the basket without the name of any Member upon them.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting a pension to Mary J. Brophy.
A bill granting a pension to August A. Bemtgen.
A bill granting an increase of pension to Frederick C. Hammetter.
A bill for the relief of J. Will Morton and the estate of Clarissa E. Morton, deceased.
A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Morgan.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1620. An act to provide for representation of the United States in the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, and for other purposes;

S. 1027. An act to provide for an enlarged homestead; and

S. 1864. An act for the relief of the contributors of the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 32. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution extending the leave of absence of Mrs. A. E. Grant.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolutions:

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1913;

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the International Conference on Education; and

H. R. 4234. An act providing certain legislation for the Panama California Exposition to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WEAVER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BOOHER was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of H. R. 12364, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. BOOHER was also given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of H. J. Res. 75, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REPORT OF THE EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO 52).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the last Congress the President transmitted with a message to the House a report of the proceedings of the Eighth International Prison Congress. While the message was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the report itself was ordered to lie on the table pending the disposition of the question as to who ought to pay for the printing. The document has not yet been printed. I have conferred with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with reference to having it printed as a House document. It is a report that ought to be printed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the gentleman conferred with the Committee on Printing as to the cost?

Mr. MANN. I ought to have conferred with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] as to the cost of printing it. I have ascertained myself, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, that the cost of printing the usual number, 1,320 copies, would be $213.18. I desire to have 2,000 extra copies printed, which will cost $48.70.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would like to ask the gentleman if it contains information of interest to the general public?

Mr. MANN. It is of great interest to all people interested in prison reform.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the gentleman had many requests for copies?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I have had quite a number. This meeting of the International Prison Congress was held in this country on the invitation of the United States. It has always been customary for the country in which the meeting was held to print the proceedings, and this was transmitted to be printed, but as it was a congress held on the invitation of Congress, the State Department thought that the cost of the printing ought to be paid out of the congressional funds and not out of the State Department fund. But as we do not control that fund, I know of no other way of getting it printed.

I ask unanimous consent to have this report of the Eighth International Prison Congress printed as a House document, and that 2,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the document room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document the report of the proceedings of the Eighth International Prison Congress, and that 2,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the document room. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LABOR IN HAWAII (H. DOC. NO. 53).

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent to have printed the report upon conditions of labor in the Hawaiian Islands, of date January 25, 1911, made by the Commissioner General of Immigration, the same to be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document the last report of the Commissioner General of Immigration on labor conditions, and so forth, in the Hawaiian Islands. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state why it is not printed as a departmental document?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I have talked the matter over a number of times with the Commissioner General, a year ago and two years ago. I understood the then Secretary of Commerce and Labor did not desire to have this printed. The report is made by men upon the ground and it shows the actual conditions there as to sugar and labor, also respecting immigration, showing the different nationalities there and the position taken by foreigners. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor did not think it ought to be printed. I again took it up with the Commissioner of Immigration and with the Secretary of Labor, who has had it under investigation for possibly two months. The day before yesterday he granted the request, and it was sent to me and I now have it. It has never been printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to say this, that Congress appropriates annually for the different departments money to be used in printing different reports and documents, and it seems to me that printing of this character should be charged to their allotment and not to the allotment of the House. I shall not object to this request, but I shall hereafter object to any request made to print as documents publications that should be charged to the various departments of the Government rather than to the appropriation for such purpose made for the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard on Sunday last, showing the difference in prices between the English scale and the American scale under the proposed Underwood bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article from the New Bedford Standard upon the subject of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman ask leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to changing it in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I print an article which appeared in The Textile World Record, of Boston, Mass., May, 1913:

To many who are interested in the prosperity of the cotton mills a large part of the tariff discussion is of too technical a nature to be understandable, but the accompanying table of actual present-day prices for representative cotton yarns in England and the United States has a significance that is easily seen. This table gives in American currency the most recent available English quotations on various yarns from 20s warp cops to 60s two-ply combed ring warp bundles, the per cent duty proposed in the Underwood tariff bill, the total English price, including the proposed duty, and the present prices of American yarns of corresponding grades and size. The English quotations were furnished by one of the leading spinners of Lancashire. The English terms are net cash 45 days. The American terms will average net cash 20 days. The figures tell their own story.

I also append the following dispatch, which appeared in the newspapers of Thursday, May 21, 1913:

MULE SPINNERS ARE OPPOSED TO COTTON-TARIFF SCHEDULES.

NEW BEDFORD, May 20.

The mule spinners' union voted to-night to send its secretary, Samuel Ross, to Washington to enter a protest before the Ways and Means Committee against the proposed cotton schedule in the tariff bill.

Secretary Ross is State senator from this district.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in that connection, also, at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, for the purpose of inserting a short letter of protest of mill corporations of New Bedford, Mass., addressed to him, I suppose, upon the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication referred to is as follows:

NEW BEDFORD'S PROTEST AND PETITION.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a conference of representatives of all the mill corporations of New Bedford, held May 2, 1913, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we protest against the reductions in rates on cotton cloth, cotton yarns, and cotton manufactures contained in H. R. 3321, now pending in Congress, as too radical and too drastic, and which, if finally adopted, will seriously affect the whole cotton-manufacturing industry.

"The cotton manufacturers of New Bedford realizing the great importance of this proposed revision to its continued prosperity, respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity of so amending these rates as to enable our industries to meet the competition of foreign countries in the manufacture of fine cotton goods.

"The business is a highly competitive one, and for this reason, if for no other, every effort has been made by our manufacturers to practice and encourage efficiency in every department of effort.

"The mills are modern, equipped with the best machinery skillfully managed, and manned with competent operatives. No readjustment of tariff rates is needed to stimulate efficiency in our manufacture, nor will increased efficiency take the place of the proper and more favorable consideration of tariff rates which are needed to continue the prosperity of this industry in all its branches.

"This whole community is deeply interested in this subject, and therefore not alone in our own interest but in the interest of every phase of our community life we respectfully petition for an opportunity to present to Congress and its committees the protest and views of the New Bedford manufacturers."

On behalf of the committee.

FREDERIC H. SABER, Clerk.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL DRY FARMING CONGRESS.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 87, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 87.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to issue invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Tulsa, Okla., during October, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask my friend from Oklahoma what would have happened to this dry-farming congress if there had not been an extraordinary session of Congress?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, my impression is, judging from the correspondence of the secretary of the International Dry Farming Congress, that there would have been no effort, or could have been none, to have had extended invitations to other nations to participate in the congress to be held in October. I will say to the gentleman that the congress is to be held in Tulsa, Okla., in October of this year, and the secretary, Mr. Burns, with whom a great many Members are well acquainted, made that request. As it is to be held in my district, I of course introduced the resolution. I would be glad if we could reach an agreement so that this resolution could be taken up and passed, and those other nations who desire to send delegates to this congress would feel at liberty to do so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the proceedings of another body the other day I noticed a telegram which indicated that the secretary of this dry-farming congress had sent a telegram to my friend from Oklahoma and to all of the other Representatives from Oklahoma, to the Senators from Oklahoma, and, I believe, the Representatives from Wyoming and possibly one or two other States, in the same language, asking the immediate passage of a resolution. I wondered if the gentleman had just waked up. This congress has been provided for how long?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say this: So far as I know the message came, and I introduced the resolution the next day that the House was in session.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not speaking of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] being awake; he is always awake and alive and very active; but I wondered whether the secretary had waked up.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can not tell the gentleman; but I know my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can tell the gentleman that John T. Burns is one of those fellows who is always awake, but it seems that the Secretary of State prefers to have some authority to issue these invitations, and that is as far as I can enlighten the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It looks to me as though there had been no intention to have these invitations extended and no necessity for them, because if the secretary of the association had desired the invitations extended, certainly he would not have let the regular session of Congress go by and not have communicated his desire, and it is so easy to make a proposition which involves the Government paying the expense of these congresses, but I suppose the gentleman finally got courage enough with the money that he had in hand to send these long telegrams.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming, having been dragged in, ought to have a chance to have the floor.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming had the honor at one time of being president of the dry-farming congress and had some knowledge of the splendid work which it has been doing; and, referring to the question of the activities of the secretary, I join with my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] in saying that the secretary of that congress is about as live a wire as I know. My impression is that the secretary thought that the invitations might be issued without action by Congress, or that possibly the dry-farming congress could be held this year without the necessity of invitations issued by the Department of State; but it so happens that the congress last year was held in the Dominion of Canada, and the Dominion Government did issue invitations to other nations to participate.

The secretary, Mr. Burns, has recently learned that some of the nations which participated last year, having been then invited by the Dominion Government, desire that our Government shall take the same official action with regard to the congress that the Dominion Government did last year. As a matter of fact, I am informed by Mr. Burns that there is some question as to whether there can be the same helpful participation on the part of some of the foreign nations that there ought to be unless these invitations are issued. It does not cost anything, as the gentleman from Illinois knows——

Mr. MANN. No; I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). To issue these invitations.

Mr. MANN. My observation and experience is that it always costs a good deal.

Mr. MONDELL. The Congress has already made the appropriation, a small one, to aid this dry-farming congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much?

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman from Oklahoma was very active in that matter——

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much has been appropriated?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is $20,000.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Twenty thousand dollars or $25,000, I am not positive.

Mr. MONDELL. A comparatively small amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much was appropriated for the last congress?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, not more than that; I think less.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so certain about that.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the amount was somewhat smaller.

Mr. MANN. I think we appropriated $10,000 to send our delegates to Canada, and it was very hard sledding to get that. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Dominion of Canada issued any invitations last year or the year before, or whenever the congress was held, or whether the British Government issued them?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I understand it was the Dominion Government; that is the way they do those things in Canada—the Dominion Government issued the invitations to the nations to participate.

Mr. MANN. I think it is equally proper and entirely compatible with the precedents that the State of Oklahoma should now issue these invitations.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the State of Oklahoma, as the gentleman knows, does not occupy quite the same position as a sovereignty that the Dominion of Canada occupies.

Mr. MANN. The Dominion of Canada does not occupy the position of sovereignty; that is true.

Mr. MONDELL. It is in itself a sovereign Commonwealth.

Mr. MANN. We do not have a minister here from Canada, and the Dominion of Canada is not represented officially anywhere. Canada is a part and parcel of the British Empire, just as the State of Oklahoma is a part and parcel of this Government; and if Canada should issue an invitation Oklahoma could do the same.

Mr. MONDELL. The fact is that the invitations on the part of the Dominion of Canada were issued by the gentlemen who represent the British Government in the Dominion, so that as a matter of fact the invitations were imperial in character, although they were issued under the seal of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the gentleman will excuse me a moment, replying to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], while this congress is to be held in Oklahoma this year, it is not a State affair by any means, and all the other States in the Union will participate, and I suppose, from the correspondence that we have received, that they have thought it was necessary that there should be some authority given to issue the invitations. I should be very glad to see some authority given, and I do not think it will cost the United States Government anything. With the appropriation that has been made I know from advices received from the department that they are arranging to have their exhibits and their men on the ground there in October.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not it is important that an invitation involves an appropriation. I would not oppose an invitation simply because it involves an appropriation, but I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether any invitation has been issued by authority of Congress in recent years that in the end did not involve an appropriation?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not have any before me at the moment, but——

Mr. MANN. I have one very clearly in my mind. Although we have been repeatedly told that invitations would not involve an appropriation, yet we are always asked to make an appropriation, and very properly; and at the last session of Congress the President of the United States—I suppose at the instance of the State Department—transmitted a special message to Congress, stating that in his opinion Congress ought not in any event to pass a resolution providing for invitations to be issued by the State Department to foreign Governments unless at the same time we were prepared to see that an appropriation was made to properly care for the delegates when they came here. I think that was good sense.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. COX. How extensive is this invitation to be? Is there an invitation to be issued to every Government on earth?

Mr. DAVENPORT. To any Government that desires to send representatives; any Government interested in the proposition of dry farming.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any idea at all as to what Governments would participate?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I know the Canadian Government has participated in past congresses of the kind, and some other Governments also. We do not know what Governments will participate or what Governments desire to participate; but we desire that Congress shall issue an invitation, so that if any foreign Governments do desire to send representatives here to take part in the experiments and in the discussions they will feel at liberty to do so.

Mr. COX. Is there any likelihood that any European Government will be represented?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not know what scope the invitations will take. The only desire is to give authority to extend invitations to foreign Governments.

Mr. COX. Is it the intention to give an invitation to every Government on earth? If so, and they should send invitations to those Governments and they would respond by sending representatives here, would those people be able to give our people any information at all as to dry farming, when our people have been working on that subject for the last 20 or 25 years?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think an exchange or interchange of ideas from different localities and different communities is the best way to educate men on any question, even though they may think they have reached perfection on that subject which they have been studying.

Mr. COX. How much does the gentleman think it will cost this Government?

Mr. DAVENPORT. It will not cost this Government a penny, in my judgment.

Mr. COX. How is that?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think that any Government desiring to send representatives to the dry-farming congress will bear the representatives' expenses.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not feel that if we should get responses to these invitations these representatives from foreign countries should be taken care of by our Government?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will ask the gentleman if he knows of a case where the expenses of representatives were not defrayed by their home Governments?

Mr. COX. I think there is a case right now out in Ohio, where an appropriation of $25,000 was given to maintain a delegation to attend a celebration in regard to an international shooting match. A meeting is soon to take place in regard to the naval victory of Commodore Perry. Twenty-five thousand dollars was appropriated for that purpose, and that invitation was extended at the instance of the Secretary of War. The idea was that we should participate in defraying the expenses of those people, and we have done it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not think there will be any appropriation asked for for the expenses of the delegates if any should attend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. I object.

POSITIONS EXCEPTED FROM EXAMINATION UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following list of classified positions excepted from examination under rule 2, clause 3, of the United States Civil Service Commission:

[The classified service does not include positions under the government of the District of Columbia, the Library of Congress, legislative and judicial branches, Consular and Diplomatic Services, and the Pan American Union.]

SEC. 277. Below will be found a list of classified positions which are excepted from examination by the commission. For information in regard to appointment to any of the positions mentioned therein, application should be made to the head of the department or office in which such position is located.

No office or position is excepted unless it is specifically named herein. Not more than one position is treated as excepted under the title of any such position unless a different number be indicated.

I.

THE ENTIRE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

1. Two private secretaries or confidential clerks to the head of each of the executive departments and one to each assistant head.
2. One private secretary or confidential clerk to each of the heads of bureaus appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate in the executive departments, if authorized by law.
3. All persons appointed by the President without confirmation by the Senate.
4. Attorneys, assistant attorneys, and special assistant attorneys.
5. Chinese and Japanese interpreters.
6. Any person receiving for his personal salary compensation aggregating not more than $300 per annum whose duties require only a portion of his time, or whose services are needed for very brief periods at intervals, provided that employment under this provision shall not be for job work such as contemplated in section 4 of rule 8. The name of the employee, designation, duties, rate of pay, and place of employment shall be shown in the periodical reports of changes; and in addition when payment is not at a per annum rate the total service rendered and the distribution of such service during the year shall be shown in the report of changes at the end of each year or when the employee is separated from the service. (As amended Oct. 14, 1911.)
7. Any person employed in a foreign country under the State Department, or temporarily employed in a confidential capacity in a foreign country under any department or office; but this exception shall not apply to any person employed in a foreign country contiguous to the United States in the service of the Bureau of Immigration, Department of Commerce and Labor
8. Any position the duties of which are of a quasi military or quasi naval character, and for the performance of which duties a person is enlisted for a term of years; also positions in the Revenue-Cutter Service, where the persons enlist for the season of navigation only.
9. All positions in Alaska which can not be filled from appropriate existing registers, except those in the customs service.
10. A person serving under temporary appointment continuously since May 29, 1899, may be permanently appointed, in the discretion of the appointing officer.
11. A person holding an excepted position, which he entered prior to November 2, 1894, and in which he has since served continuously, may, subject to the other conditions and provisions of these rules, be transferred to a competitive position.
12. Mechanics and skilled tradesmen or laborers (this exception refers to skilled or classified laborers; unskilled laborers are not within the scope of the civil-service act and rules), employed upon construction or repair work in the field services, under such restrictive conditions that, in the opinion of the commission, they can not as a class be appointed from registers of eligibles.
13. Cooks, when in the opinion of the commission it is not expedient to make appointment upon competitive examination.
14. One driver (the commission holds that this exception applies to chauffeurs as well as to drivers of carriages) of carriage, each, for the personal use of the President, the head of any executive department, the Secretary to the President, and such other drivers of carriages as may from time to time be authorized by competent authority, may be appointed without reference to the civil-service rules or the labor regulations.
15. Positions of unusual character as to duties or compensation and for which qualified persons are so rare that in the judgment of the commission they can not in the interests of good civil-service administration be filled through competitive examination. Prior consent of the commission must be obtained for appointments under this clause. (Amended by Executive order Aug. 26, 1912.)

II.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. Eight officers to aid in important drafting work. (As amended under Executive order Aug. 24, 1912.)
2. Assistant solicitors. (As amended under Executive order Aug. 24, 1912.)

III.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. One confidential clerk, if authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury, to each of the following officers:

The collector of each customs district where the receipts for the last preceding fiscal year amounted to as much as $500,000.

The appraisers at the ports of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

One private secretary in the office of the naval officer of customs at the port of New York.

2. One counsel before the Board of United States General Appraisers.
3. In the New York customs district: Stitch counters. (As amended June 12, 1911.)
4. Storekeepers and gaugers (Internal-Revenue Service) whose compensation does not exceed $3 per diem when actually employed and whose aggregate compensation shall not exceed $500 per annum.

This exception from the requirement of examination shall not apply to the fifth internal-revenue district of North Carolina.

5. One private secretary or confidential clerk to the superintendent, and one cashier in each mint, and one cashier in the assay office at New York.
6. Any local physician employed for temporary duty as acting assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service at stations or localities where, in the opinion of the commission, the establishment of registers is impracticable.
7. Any persons employed in the Public Health Service as quarantine attendants at stations at which, in the opinion of the commission, the establishment of registers is impracticable, and any person employed as quarantine attendant or acting assistant surgeon or sanitary inspector on quarantine vessels or in camps or stations established for quarantine purposes during epidemics of contagious diseases, for temporary duty in the United States or elsewhere in preventing the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases. (Subject to this exception at present are the following quarantine stations: Cape Charles, Columbia River, Fort Stanton, Gulf, Key West, Mobile, Mullet Key, Reedy Island, San Francisco, and South Atlantic.)
8. In the Alaska customs service all persons appointed or employed for the season of navigation only.
9. One examiner of tobacco and one examiner of tea in the customs service at the port of Chicago.
10. Mounted inspectors in the customs service on the Mexican border.
11. Civilian instructors in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service.
12. National-bank examiners and receivers under the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.
13. All persons actually employed in the Public Health Service at the leprosy investigation station, Molokai, Hawaii.
14. Informers and posse men in the Internal-Revenue Service.
15. Laborers, at $480 per annum, in the customs service, district of Hawaii, who are to perform the duties of opener and packer.

IV.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. All cable engineers and cable electricians. (Army paymasters' clerks were given a military status by the Army appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1912. The commission accordingly directed that the clause excepting them from examination as classified civil employees be stricken from Schedule A and the clauses following be renumbered accordingly. This action was approved by the President Oct. 23, 1911 (minutes of commission, Oct. 27, 1911).)
2. All telegraph operators, telegraph linemen, and cable seamen, receiving a monthly compensation of $60 or less, serving on military telegraph systems or at military stations, and who perform their duties in connection with their private business or with other employment, such duties requiring only a portion of their time. Appointment to such positions shall be subject to noncompetitive examination as to practical skill in the work required therein by a signal officer or acting signal officer, whose certificate as to the professional fitness of the appointee shall be forwarded to the Secretary of War, and a duplicate thereof to the Civil Service Commission.
3. United States Army Transport Service: Longshoremen employed by the department at ports in the United States; trade and noneducational employees in the Philippine Islands; and all employees on transport ships other than clerks.
4. All commissioners and statutory places of secretary for the national military parks, and one assistant secretary to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park Commission. (Superintendents of national cemeteries are appointed by the Secretary of War, under sections 4873 and 4874, Revised Statutes, from soldiers discharged for disability incurred in the line of duty.)
5. Consulting architect, for work of reconstructing the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.
6. All navigating positions on the torpedo and mine planters of the Quartermaster's Department at large.
7. One law officer in the Bureau of Insular Affairs.
8. One superintendent, one chief chemist and assistant superintendent, and one first assistant chemist, for service in connection with the operation of the Washington filtration plant, under the Engineer Department.
9. Caretakers of abandoned military reservations or of abandoned or unoccupied military posts when the positions are filled by retired noncommissioned officers or enlisted men.
10. Civilian professors, instructors, and teachers in the United States Military Academy at West Point.
11. Superintendent of construction, Quartermaster's Department at large, Corregidor, P. I.
12. Contract surgeons.
13. Clerk qualified as translator of the English, Spanish, and Tagalog languages in the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

V.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. Paymasters' clerks acting as principal clerks to general storekeepers at navy yards and naval stations.
2. Civilian professors, instructors, and teachers in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.
3. All positions in the island of Guam and in the island of Samoa. (As amended Feb. 21, 1911.)
4. One clerk actually on duty with each assistant paymaster of the United States Marine Corps. (Amendment of Apr. 3, 1911.)

VI.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. Wardens, chaplains, and physicians in the United States penitentiaries or prisons.
2. One clerk to each United States district attorney.
3. Examiners.
4. Any person employed as field deputy in the office of a United States marshal, or whose chief duties are to serve process.
5. All positions and employments deemed by the Attorney General to be legal or confidential in their character, and which relate to temporary service or which grow out of appropriation acts committing to the Attorney General the execution of some purpose of the law and the expenditure of the funds therefor, but not creating specific positions.

VII.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. The Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department.
2. One private secretary or confidential clerk to the Assistant Attorney General, and one to the purchasing agent of the Post Office Department.

3. One private secretary or confidential clerk to the postmaster, if authorized by the Postmaster General, at each post office where the receipts of the last preceding fiscal year amounted to as much as $350,000.
4. All employees on star routes and in post offices of the third and fourth classes, other than postmasters of the fourth class, except those in Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Samoa. (Amended by Executive order Oct. 15, 1912.)
5. One auditor at the post office in New York City.
6. Clerks in charge of contract stations, appropriated for as such and so reported.
7. Chief post-office inspector.

VIII.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. The superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation.
2. Inspectors whose duties are of a confidential nature in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and who are appropriated for by Congress.
3. Inspectors of coal mines in the Territories.
4. Temporary clerks employed in the United States local land offices to reduce testimony to writing in contest cases, not paid from Government funds.
5. Indians employed in the Indian Service at large, except those employed as superintendents, teachers, manual-training teachers, kindergartners, physicians, matrons, clerks, seamstresses, farmers, and industrial teachers.
6. Special commissioners to negotiate with Indians, as the necessity for their employment may arise.
7. One financial clerk at each Indian agency to act as agent during the absence or disability of the agents.
8. Physicians employed in the Indian Service and receiving not more than $720 per annum salary, who may lawfully perform their official duties in connection with their private practice, such employment, however, to be subject to the approval of the commission.
9. All physicians employed as pension examining surgeons, whether organized in boards or working individually under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions. This paragraph shall not include medical examiners in the Pension Office.
10. Five special pension examiners to investigate fraudulent and other pension claims of a criminal nature.
11. Six special agents of the General Land Office to investigate fraudulent entries and other matters of a criminal nature.
12. Consulting engineers of the Reclamation Service under the Geological Survey.
13. One confidential clerk and one record clerk to the Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane.
14. One private secretary to the Director of the Geological Survey.
15. Superintendents of live stock, stockmen, stock detectives, and line riders in the Indian Service.
16. Special officers to assist in the suppression of the liquor traffic in the Indian service. (Amendment of Apr. 21, 1911.)
17. Superintendent of Indian Insane Asylum, Canton, S. Dak.
18. Special agent for the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior.
19. One Indian trade supervisor.
20. Superintendents or officers in charge of national parks or reservations.
21. Chief law officer in the Reclamation Service.
22. Scouts, buffalo keepers, assistant buffalo keepers, and park rangers in the national parks.
23. One histopathologist temporarily engaged in research work at the Government Hospital for the Insane.
24. One specialist in higher education in the Bureau of Education.
25. The assistant to the Secretary in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. (Amendment of Apr. 21, 1911.)
26. All employees of the Neopit Lumber Mills on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin. (Executive order, Nov. 19, 1912. The Neopit lumbering project is a commercial enterprise conducted for the profit and sole benefit of the Menominee Tribe of Indians, and its operation is in competition with private enterprises of the same kind. It thus differs from any other enterprise conducted for the benefit of the Indians and it is believed that the work can be carried on more economically and therefore with more benefit to the Indians by excepting these employees from the operation of the civil-service rules.)

IX.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. (a) Agents employed in field positions the work of which is financed jointly by the department and cooperating persons or organizations outside of the Federal service.
(b) Local agents outside of Washington engaged in demonstrating in their respective localities the advantages of scientific methods of agriculture. Agents of this class must be representative farmers whose ability and personality make them leaders in their respective communities.
(c) Local agents, except veterinarians, employed outside of Washington in demonstrating in their respective localities the necessity of eradicating cattle ticks, scabies, hog cholera, and animal tuberculosis, and other contagious or infectious animal diseases.
(d) Agents employed in positions as such isolated places and requiring such knowledge of local conditions that they can not, in the opinion of the commission, be filled by open competitive examination.
(e) Agents employed intermittently for short periods outside of Washington, the aggregate individual length of whose service during any one calendar year shall not exceed six months, provided that employment under this provision shall not be for job work, such as contemplated in section 4 of rule 8. The name of the employee, designation, rate of pay, and place of employment shall be shown in the periodical reports of changes; and in addition the aggregate individual service rendered and the distribution of such service during the year shall be shown in the report of changes at the end of each year or when the employee is separated from the service.
(f) Student assistants whose salary shall not exceed a rate of $300 a year each while employed
Prior consent of the commission must be obtained for the appointment of agents under clause (d) above; and in making appointments under clauses (a), (b), (c), (e), and (f), a full report shall be submitted immediately by the department to the commission setting forth the name, designation, and compensation of the appointee, and a statement of the duties to which he is to be assigned, and of his qualifications for such duties, in such detail as to indicate clearly that the appointment is properly made under one of the above clauses. The same procedure shall be followed in the case of the assignment of any agent to duties of a different character. (All of sec. 1 promulgated by Executive order, Aug. 26, 1912.)

An agent is one who is employed to act for or to represent the Department of Agriculture in some locality or territory outside of Washington, and whose duties are of such a temporary or special character or whose compensation is so low as to render it impracticable to adequately fill the position by open competitive examination.

An expert is one who has such rare, peculiar, or unusual skill or experience in some department or branch of knowledge as to render his qualifications essentially different from or superior to those required of any classified employees in competitive positions and not likely to be possessed in an equal or superior degree by other persons who might be available for appointment. (Regulations approved Apr. 17, 1905, and minute of commission, Jan. 23, 1908.)

2. One statistical agent in each State and Territory where authorized by law.
3. Guards, field assistants for reconnoissance parties, guides, cooks, packers, teamsters, choppers, and skilled laborers employed temporarily during the season of danger from fires, or when other special work requires additions to the regular Forest Service force. They shall serve only as long as absolutely required and in no case more than six months in any one year, except in the case of forest guards, whose employment shall not be so limited. So far as the commission may deem practicable, such appointments shall be made from the registers of eligibles for forest rangers.

X.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. All officers and employees in the service of the Isthmian Canal Commission upon the Isthmus of Panama, except those who are to perform the duties of clerk, bookkeeper, stenographer, typewriter, surgeon, physician, trained nurse, or draftsman. Appointments to clerical positions on the Isthmus of Panama paying not more (as amended July 17, 1906) than $75 in gold per month may be made without examination under the civil-service rules. No person appointed to the service on the Isthmus of Panama otherwise than through competitive examination, or by transfer or promotion from a competitive position, shall be transferred to a competitive position, unless he was classified by the Executive order of November 15, 1904, in a position which was then and is at the time of the proposed transfer in the competitive service.
2. One inspecting engineer and inspectors in the purchasing department.

XI.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

(See excepted positions in this department under heading "The entire classified service.")

1. All persons temporarily connected with the field operations of the Bureau of Fisheries who are paid from lump appropriations for miscellaneous expense. No person employed in a position specifically provided for by statute at any station shall be regarded as excepted from examination hereunder.
2. Shipping commissioners whose compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, was, as shown by the records in the Department of Commerce and Labor, $2,500 or over. (This order applies to the ports of New York, San Francisco, Fort Townsend, and Boston.)
3. Commercial agents to investigate trade conditions abroad and in the United States, including the insular possessions, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States. (Amendment of Sept. 4, 1911.)

SCHEDULE B.

[Classified positions which may be filled upon noncompetitive examination.]

The noncompetitive examinations authorized under rule 3, clause 2, shall consist of the same tests of fitness as those applied to other persons seeking appointment through competitive examination.
Noncompetitive examinations authorized under this schedule are given only upon the request of the head of the department or office in which such positions exist.

I.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

1. Superintendent, teacher, manual-training teacher, kindergartner, physician, matron, clerk, seamstress, farmer, and industrial teacher, in the Indian Service at large when filled by Indians.
2. Messenger, assistant messenger, and messenger boy, in the Office of Indian Affairs when filled by Indians.
3. Any competitive position at an Indian school when filled by the wife of a competitive employee at that school.
4. Miners, whether employed in rescue or first-aid work at rescue stations, or on rescue cars, or at experimental mines, under the Bureau of Mines: Provided, That should the Civil Service Commission at any time have reason to believe that the privilege so afforded is abused it may revoke it.

II.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

1. Not exceeding 20 special agents under the Division of Prosecutions and 10 inspectors under the Hours of Service Division, subject to such evidence of qualification as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe after consultation with the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided, That should the Civil Service Commission at any time have reason to believe that the privilege so afforded is abused it may revoke it.
2. Inspector of safety appliances.

Salary list of officers and employees in Washington, D. C., whose appointments are not subject to civil-service examination.

RESOLUTION URGING LEGISLATION FOR A REFORM IN OUR BANKING AND CURRENCY SYSTEM.

Whereas Congress has been called in extra session for the purpose, among other things, of legislating for an adequate and safe banking and currency system; and

Whereas it is to the interest of all of our members and to the country at large to have Congress pass a new system based upon the following three principles: First, centralization and flexibility in the use of bank reserves; second, elasticity of the currency; third, an open market for the discount and rediscount of sound commercial paper; and

Whereas it is necessary to impress upon our national legislators at Washington the necessity of taking such action at this session of Congress as will give us the necessary change in our system; and

Whereas we consider banking and currency reform to be as important as any legislation which might be proposed at this extra session of Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chicago Association of Credit Men will lend its aid wherever possible to further any legislation which will give the necessary banking and currency reform and also to encourage and assist commercial organizations and business men throughout the country to do likewise.

Adopted May 20, 1913.

BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE,
I. D. BERG, Chairman (A. G. Becker & Co.).
W. G. MCLAUREY, Cashier, National City Bank, Chicago.
DAN NORMAN, Assistant Cashier, Continental and Commercial National Bank, Chicago.

TREATY-MAKING POWER OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order passed last Tuesday, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, on the 28th day of April I made a speech in the House on the treaty-making power of the Federal Government which occasioned some comment in the press. Some of the press comments were adverse, but the great majority of the adverse criticism of my speech was not for the position taken by me on the California land question, but because of my opposition to the naval program as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs to this House at the last session.

Mr. Speaker, just a word on my position on our Navy is necessary that my position may be clearly understood. I am not opposed to an adequate Navy, but I am opposed to the willful waste of public money. What becomes of the one hundred to one hundred and forty million dollars which we spend annually on our Navy? Has it been squandered? Have we nothing to show for this vast sum? Are we defenseless? If we are, then some investigation should be made to ascertain what goes with this vast sum.

Congress ought not to spend another dollar until it has reorganized this department of the Government, if it is true, as some say, that we have no Navy and that we are totally unprepared for national defense. [Applause.] If our Navy is so worthless as is contended in the "jingo" press, then there should be a most searching investigation to find out where this vast sum goes. Is it squandered on useless employees and places in the Navy Department; on high salaries to a lot of grossly incompetent officers and men who are incapable of getting value received for the money expended; on exorbitant prices paid for work done, by corruptly agreeing to pay more for steel plate and structural steel and other building material than is fair and just? Is the Navy Department honeycombed with graft, fraud, and corruption? If what my critics say of the present condition of our Navy is true, then one or all of the above conditions exist in our Navy Department. I simply do not believe that my critics are just in their criticism of our present Navy. Next to England we now have the greatest Navy in the world. In effectiveness per unit we have the best Navy in the world. The so-called friends of a big Navy just will not tell the truth about our present condition.

But, Mr. Speaker, my critics should not hold me responsible for the present condition of the Navy, even if it is worthless and useless as they say it is, because if Congress had authorized 20 battleships at the last session they could not be used for from four to five years because it takes that long to construct a battleship. It is also stated that it will require 20 years for the Naval Academy to train enough officers to man the ships now authorized and in commission. So in an impending conflict we are in no better or worse condition than if we had authorized 20 battleships. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied to leave to my constituents and to the people of the country my position on the Navy.

I understand fully how a corporate-controlled press may condemn the position which I take, especially those papers that represent in their news and editorial columns the interests of the great industrial, transportation, mining, and land corporations, and not the masses of the people.

These great corporations purchase labor, and they desire to buy it just as cheaply as they can. Their profits are increased when they buy the cheapest units of labor. It has been this portion of the press which has misconstrued and misinterpreted the remarks which I made on the floor of the House a few days ago by segregating sentences from the context and making me say in their news items and in their editorials something that I did not say.

Jefferson says that the most unfair treatment that he himself ever received at the hands of an unfriendly press was when they would quote simply a part of what he said without taking the context. This is the favorite method of the infidel and the atheist in attacking the sacred Scriptures.

There is not a sentence in that speech which I made on the California situation that will justify the headlines and press comments which stated that I made a "war speech." On the contrary, I stated at the very outset that "the situation in California is a very critical one, and I trust that I may not say anything that will in the least tend to prevent a friendly settlement or embarrass the State Department in its effort to retain the friendship of Japan." This statement is not even referred to in any of the public press. In the entire speech I simply maintained the right of America to control her own soil, and I repeat that statement, and if any nation should decide that they will dictate to us our land laws, then we would be unworthy of national existence if we submitted to such dictation. [Applause.] Does anyone claim that this is a declaration of war because I announce this truth?

I may say, gentlemen of the House, that the great English Government, the German Government, the Russian Government, the Japanese Government, no great Government, will ever permit any other Government to dictate to her her land laws and the control of her soil. For that reason I simply state a truth that is admitted by every nation on earth. You will not find a single authority on international law that differs from me on that proposition. Why, gentlemen of the House, we ourselves can not always be bound by the rules laid down by international law which arose back in a day when the central authority in the nations of the world was vested with sovereignty and absolute control, denying the principle that the sovereignty rests with the mass of the people. Therefore many of the international principles laid down in international law can not be made applicable to the United States Government. [Applause.]

It is no declaration of war for the United States Government to decline to override the rights of a sovereign State at the dictation of a foreign power. If the Government of the United States should, with its Army and its Navy and with brute force which it has superior to any one of these States, take away from the State the right to control its domestic concerns and deliver such State over to the mercies of a flood of aliens from any nation, then I maintain that the Federal Government has prostituted its authority. Is the mere announcement of this principle a declaration of war?

Let the press quote all that I say on any subject and I am willing to abide by their headlines and editorial criticism, but I am unwilling that they quote a single sentence from my speech and from such single sentence draw conclusions that could not be drawn from the entire context.

I do not care for the criticism of the press or for the effort of some of the press to put me in a false light. Am I right is and should be the great question with me. Have I spoken the truth? This is the question I ask the American people. If I have, then I will have their approval. If I have not, I will and should have their condemnation. Have I properly interpreted the treaty-making power of the Federal Constitution? If I have, then every true and loyal American should stand with me on the question.

Let my position be measured by this test. I only ask a fair hearing before the American people, and after they have heard fairly the facts as stated in that speech, then I am willing to abide their verdict and the verdict of posterity.

I assume absolutely the sole responsibility not only for the remarks which I now make, but for the remarks made on Monday, the 28th day of April, on this floor.

The views expressed by me are my own views, and the conclusions reached are conclusions for which I alone am responsible. If my views are sound and if I have spoken the truth, I will receive the plaudits of my countrymen; if my views are unsound and will not bear the test of reason, then I alone must suffer at the hands of my critics.

Nothing was further from my mind than to embarrass or tend to render more difficult the peaceful solution of whatever differences, real or imaginary, that may exist between the friendly Government of Japan and our own Government. The President and the Secretary of State are to be commended for their wise and earnest effort to maintain peaceful relations between the United States and Japan.

Whatever criticism may have been directed against the speech which I made, I think it will now be conceded by all that the construction which I placed upon the treaty is the correct one. If the newspaper accounts of the contention of the two powers is correct, it is admitted that no treaty has been violated in the enactment of the California land laws.

The speech which I made is not one-hundredth part as much calculated to inflame the minds of the people as were the unfair headlines and the unfair criticisms in the public press of this country; and the same press that published in the headlines that I made a war speech were the very papers that condemned me for doing something that I did not do. I hope the time will never come in my public life, whether it be long or short, when I shall decline to utter the sentiments which my duty and my conscience tells me to do. I would be unworthy to represent my people in this House if I did. [Applause.]

The discussion of the treaty-making power of the Federal Government by me at this time can and ought not to in any way have any but a good effect upon the present controversy, and I desire to repeat what I said in my former speech—that I sincerely trust that no word or expression which I shall utter will in any way embarrass or tend to embarrass our Government in a friendly settlement of the differences between the two nations. My judgment is that it only requires patience and cool heads for both countries to arrive at an amicable, fair, and just settlement of all differences.

At this time, however, it is of the greatest importance that the American people should have a clear understanding of the great legal propositions involved. I do not think that it would be contended by many lawyers that supreme and unlimited power is vested in the President and two-thirds of the Senate of the United States. It shall not be my purpose on this occasion to repeat any of the arguments which I made when I addressed the House before on this subject. I do want, however to assign some additional reasons for the contention that the treaty-making power is one which is limited to international questions, and one which can not invade the reserved powers of the States and overturn the State constitutions and State laws and regulate our domestic concerns and quote some authorities substantiating this position.

It is contended by some that under the second section of Article VI of the Constitution that the language "supreme law of the land" gives to the President and the Senate an absolute and unrestricted power to make any treaty that they may agree upon although it overturns all of our State constitutions and all of our State governments and destroys our Federal system entirely.

Patrick Henry, in the Virginia convention, said that this would be the argument of every Tory living in America and that of every enemy of the Declaration of Independence and the establishment of a government based upon the will of the majority of the people honestly ascertained, and that through this clause supreme power would be vested in the Government of the United States; and it was principally upon this clause that he opposed the adoption of the Constitution by Virginia. The friends of the Constitution knew that if the then powerful State of Virginia, the home of Washington, should reject the Constitution it would fail of ratification. In that Virginia convention was assembled the talent of that great Commonwealth, and every friend of the Constitution took issue with Mr. Henry and contended that his construction of that clause was erroneous. Mr. Nicholas, a leading mind in that convention, said in part:

The worthy Member says that they can make a treaty relinquishing any right and inflicting punishments, because all of the treaties are declared paramount to the constitution and laws of the States. An attentive consideration of this will show the committee that they can do no such thing. The provision of the sixth article is that this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land. They can by this make no treaty which will be repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution or inconsistent with the delegated powers. The treaties they make must be made under the authority of the United States to be within their province. It is sufficiently secured because it only declares that in pursuance of the power given they shall be the supreme law of the land, notwithstanding any thing in the constitutions or laws of the particular States. (3 Elliott's Debates, 507.)

MADISON.

Mr. Madison seems to have closed the debate for the Constitution on this question, and said in part:

I am persuaded that when this power comes to be thoroughly and candidly viewed it will be found right and proper. As to its extent, perhaps it will be satisfactory to the committee that the power is precisely in the new Constitution as it is in the Confederation. In the existing Confederacy, Congress is authorized indefinitely to make treaties. Many of the States have recognized the treaties of Congress to be the supreme law of the land. Acts have passed within a year declaring this to be the case. I have seen many of them. Does it follow because a power is given to Congress that it is absolute and unlimited? I do not conceive that power is given to the President and Senate to dismember the empire or to alienate any great essential right. I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation. One objection against the amendment proposed is that by implication it would give power to the legislative authority to dismember the empire—a power that ought not to be given but by the necessity that would force assent from every man. I think it rests on the safest foundations as it is. The object of treaties is the regulation of intercourse with foreign nations, and is external. I do not think it possible to enumerate all the cases in which such external regulations would be necessary. Would it be right to define all the cases in which Congress could exercise this authority? The definition might and probably would be defective. They might be restrained by such definition from exercising the authority where it could be essential to the interest and safety of the community. It is most safe, therefore, to leave it to be exercised as contingencies may arise. (3 Elliott's Debates, 514.)

I have carefully looked through all of the debates upon the adoption of our Constitution and I have been unable to find a single friend of the Constitution who contended that this clause conferred upon the President and a portion of the Senate unlimited power. On the contrary, they all hold that that power was limited and restricted to our external affairs, and that it could not by any reasonable construction affect, restrict, or interfere with our internal domestic concerns or violate any of the reserved powers of the States.

They all contended that it was the sworn duty of the officers of the Federal Government under the Constitution to protect the States in their reserved powers, and that this duty was as sacred as any duty devolving on them under the delegated powers of the Constitution. This was the understanding, and was a part of the contract between the States and the Federal Government. The people who were in favor of the adoption of the Constitution adopted the view expressed by Madison in the Federalist, on page 208:

The local—

Meaning the State authorities—

or municipal authorities form distinct and independent portions of the supremacy no more subject within their respective spheres to the general authority than the general authority is subject to them within its own sphere.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The distinguished gentleman will admit that the noncitizen, the rights of the citizens of other countries residing in the United States, would come within the category of external relations as described by Mr. Madison?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know exactly what the gentleman's question means, but if I catch his meaning, I do not concede that principle at all, nor does the Supreme Court, although the Supreme Court in its first decision took a different view from the one that they now take. The Race Horse case is the one where they decide the contrary of the views of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say to the gentleman that I had not finished my question. Incidentally I should like to remind the gentleman that there are some matters covered by general principles of international law and not by specific treaty. I shall now come to my question. Suppose a State should pass a law which would get us into trouble with a foreign nation because of the violation of the recognized principle of international law or treaty provisions. Supposing that to be the case; the United States Government would be obliged to make the cause of that State its own cause.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If that is the case, should not the National Government have a voice in determining legislation of that character?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. When the action of a single State can go so far as to involve the whole Nation in war it seems to me that the Nation and the National Government should have a right to determine that question.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Or to have a voice in the matter.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not; because the Government of the United States is a government of delegated powers, and the very purpose of the formation of the Government by these States was in order that they might be able to protect themselves, and that the best protection against foreign aggression of their local rights would be by a union of the States.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. I will for a question only.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to make this point——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not yielding for a speech; I yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. We will give the gentleman all the time he wants.

Mr. SISSON. Very well; if I can get all the time I want, I will yield to anybody.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not put this in the shape of a question. I merely want to state as an absolute proposition that one of the greatest functions of government is the preservation of peace. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. SISSON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In fact, that is the cardinal purpose for which governments were instituted among men—to preserve the peace. How can the National Government preserve the peace if any one of 48 of its component parts can pass laws which will get us into trouble with foreign nations at any time the legislatures see fit to do so?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the answer to the gentleman's question is simply this: When a State is clearly within its constitutional rights in the regulation of its police powers, in the regulation of its marital laws, in the regulation of its land or any other matter that is reserved to the State, it is absolutely within the power of that State to do so, and no exigency, no contingency, can arise that will justify the Federal Government in prostituting those powers which it has; and when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] takes the solemn obligation when sworn as a Member of this House not to violate any clause of the Federal Constitution he binds himself just as much to protect a State under the Constitution in the exercise of her sovereign powers that have been reserved in that instrument to the State as he does to protect the Federal Government itself, because this Government is made up of States, and each State is an integral part thereof, and it is absolutely impossible for the Federal Government under the Constitution to do those things which it has not been permitted to do under the Constitution.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I would call the gentleman's attention to what is apparent and has been known to the national economists for a long time, long before the California controversy arose, as a palpable defect in our scheme of government, namely, that the National Government is completely impotent in matters of State legislation when that legislation affects the interests of other nations.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to permit the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I want to say this, that if in the gentleman's opinion that is the unfortunate condition of affairs, then the Constitution provides a perfectly safe and legal method of curing the defect, and that is by amendment, by having two-thirds of these Houses of Congress submit to the States those propositions showing the incompetency and impotency of the Federal Government to perform its functions, and that an amendment should be made, and it ought not to be accomplished by assumption of authority on the part of the Federal Government, because if the Federal Government can assume authority because it has the might, through the taxation of the people of these States for the purpose of maintaining an Army and Navy, then the very purpose for which the Federal Government was organized, to protect these States, is lost sight of, and the Federal Government is doing for the State what a foreign power could do for each State singly, and the Federal Government doing it would simply take the place of a foreign nation—the very thing the Federal Government was organized to prevent. So the remedy is to amend the Constitution. That is the way to get at it.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. BARTHOLDT rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I simply desire to say I have introduced an amendment to the Constitution to-day covering that point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SISSON. I do not. I yielded to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me, is it not a fact that it is scarcely conceivable that any State government acting within its constitutional power shall do anything at which any reasonable foreign Government may properly take umbrage or torture into an act of hostility?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman puts his question in the form of a positive statement, I will adopt it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman may put it in any form he desires, but it seems to me there is no possibility of the dangerous situation that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] seems to have in his mind, assuming foreign nations are reasonable and understand our form of government.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I may say this, since the gentleman has raised that question, that I do not believe there is a civilized nation in the world that will take umbrage at the right of a people of a nation to control their internal and domestic concerns. I discussed that, however, when I last addressed the House.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]?

Mr. SISSON. I do; I yield with the understanding that if I do not complete my remarks I may have unanimous consent to have a little more time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. When is the time of the gentleman from Mississippi up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 75 minutes.

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman from Mississippi desire?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know; it depends upon the amount of interruptions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed until he concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] shall be permitted to continue until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, with that in my mind I may preface my question with this statement: That the total white population of the South at the outbreak of the Civil War was about 6,000,000; the total amount paid out in pensions to date has been over $4,000,000,000; then I may ask the gentleman, if we go into this war suggested by the gentleman's argument, what does the gentleman estimate the pension expenditures of this Government will be before we get through settling with the 45,000,000 Japanese with whom we have to contend?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I decline to enter into that field of speculation. On the contrary, I feel absolutely sure that there is not going to be any contention of that kind arising.

But this constitutional principle which I was discussing when interrupted is clearly and distinctly stated after a most profound consideration in the famous Kentucky Resolutions in 1798, which are said to have been written by Mr. Jefferson himself:

Resolved, That the several States comprising the United States of America are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their General Government, but that by compact under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States and of amendments thereto they constituted a General Government for special purposes, delegated to that Government certain definite powers, reserving each State to itself the residuary mass of right to their own self-government, and that whensoever the General Government assumes undelegated powers its acts are unauthoritative, void, and of no force.

Now, I may say that another clause of the Constitution gives to the Supreme Court of the United States the same right to deal with treaties that it gives to deal with statutes, so that if the Federal Government should exceed its authority in making treaties, the Supreme Court would be authorized to declare that much of the treaty unconstitutional.

What absurdities would all of these resolutions and opinions of those who made our Constitution be if the old Federalist contention was sound, that supreme and unrestricted power resided in the treaty-making power? Of what force is the sacred instrument that we are all taught to reverence as the palladium of our liberty if under one clause of that Constitution the President and a few Senators can flit them away in a moment and that in secrecy? No, Mr. Speaker; I can not subscribe to such a doctrine.

Mr. Speaker, the words "supreme law of the land" simply mean that when Congress shall enact a statute which it has the right and power under the Constitution to enact, that then such law shall be supreme; that is, it shall be in force and binding upon all of the people of the States. It does not mean that any statute passed shall be the law of the land, but any statute that has been passed which is within the grant of power under the Constitution. This is clearly all that this clause intended to do.

Since the timely death of the Federalist Party no party has been found to champion the view that the power to make a treaty was absolute and unconditional. This question first arose under the Jay treaty. When the treaty was ratified by the Senate it carried an appropriation of money, and the House passed a resolution asking the President to transmit all of the papers to the House for its consideration. Washington at first refused, but his better judgment later prevailed and he sent the treaty and papers to the House and there the principle was contended for—and from that day to this became an established precedent, which has always been followed—that when a treaty required money to be paid, the House of Representatives should pass upon it. If the House refused, the treaty would fail.

WHARTON.

Of this debate, in 1796, in the House of Representatives Wharton, in his International Law Digest, says:

On one side it was maintained that the power of the President and the Senate as to treaties was absolute, and that the House of Representatives, under the Constitution, was bound to make the appropriations necessary to carry the treaty into effect. On the other side it was contended that under the Constitution the consent of the House was requisite to pass appropriations to carry the treaty into effect, and that this was as much known to the other contracting party as was the consent of the Senate to the preliminary adoption of the treaty. (Wharton's International Law Digest, 17.)

JEFFERSON.

On March 21, 1796, Jefferson wrote to Monroe, then in France, as follows:

The British treaty has been formally at length laid before Congress. All America is atiptoe to see what the House of Representatives will decide on it. We conceive the constitutional doctrine to be that, though the President and Senate have the general power of making treaties, yet wherever they include in a treaty matters confided by the Constitution to the three branches of Legislature, an act of legislation will be requisite to confirm these articles, and that the House of Representatives, as one branch of the Legislature, are perfectly free to pass the act or to refuse it, governing themselves by their own judgment whether it is for the good of their constituents to let the treaty go into effect or not. On the precedent now to be set will depend the future construction of our Constitution, and whether the powers of legislation shall be transferred from the President, Senate, and House of Representatives to the President, Senate, and Piaminigo, or any other Indian, Algerine, or other chief. (4 Jefferson's Works, 134.)

GALLATIN.

Henry Adams, in his Life of Albert Gallatin, says of the speech made by Gallatin during this same debate in the House of Representatives that—

The debate began on March 7, 1796, and on the 10th Mr. Gallatin spoke, attacking the constitutional doctrine of the Federalists and laying down his own. He claimed for the House not a power to make treaties, but a check upon the treaty-making power when clashing with the special powers expressly vested in Congress by the Constitution. He showed the existence of this check in the British constitution, and he showed its necessity in our own, for if the treaty-making power is not limited by existing laws, or if it repeals the laws that clash with, or if the legislature is obliged to repeal the laws so clashing, then the legislative power in fact resides in the Senate and President, and they can, by employing an Indian tribe, pass any law under the color of a treaty.

The argument was irresistible; it was never answered; and, indeed, the mere statement is enough to leave only a sense of surprise that the Federalists should have hazarded themselves on such preposterous grounds. Some years later, when the purchase of Alaska brought this subject again before the House on the question of appropriating the purchase money stipulated by the treaty, the administration abandoned the old Federalist position. The right of the House to call for papers, to deliberate on the merits of the treaty, even to refuse appropriations if the treaty was inconsistent with the Constitution or with the established policy of the country, was fully conceded. The administration only made the reasonable claim that if, upon just consideration, a treaty was found to be clearly within the constitutional powers of the Government and consistent with the national policy, then it was the duty of each coordinate branch of the Government to shape its action accordingly. (See speech of N. P. Banks of June 30, 1868, Congressional Globe, vol. 75, p. 385; Life of Albert Gallatin, p. 161.)

Gallatin's views prevailed in the House by a vote of 57 to 35.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

Every Member has on his desk the House Manual and Digest, containing Jefferson's Manual, which was prepared by Jefferson when he was Vice President for his guidance, and has been used and adopted by both Houses since his day for their guidance. On page 298 of this manual, as prepared by the Hon. CHARLES R. CRISP, now an honored Member of this House from the State of Georgia, will be found, under the subject of Treaties, the following:

By the Constitution of the United States this department of legislation is confined to two branches only of the ordinary legislature—the President originating and the Senate having a negative. To what subjects this power extends has not been defined in detail by the Constitution, nor are we entirely agreed among ourselves. 1. It is admitted that it must concern foreign nation party to the contract, or it would be a mere nullity, res inter alias acta. 2. By the general power to make treaties the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those subjects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated. 3. It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way. 4. And also to except those subjects of legislation in which it gave a participation to the House of Representatives. This last exception is denied by some on the ground that it would leave little matter for the treaty power to work on. The less the better, say others.

Mr. Rawle, a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, in discussing the treaty-making power, says:

The most general terms are used in the Constitution. The powers of Congress in respect to making laws we shall find are laid under several restrictions. There are none in respect to treaties. * * * To define them in the Constitution would have been impossible, and therefore a general term could alone be made use of, which is, however, to be scrupulously confined to its legitimate interpretation. Whatever is wanting in an authority expressed must be sought for in principle, and to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported we must carefully apply it to the principles of the Constitution from which alone the power proceeds. * * *

There is a variance in the words descriptive of laws and those of treaties. In the former it is said those which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution, but treaties are described as having been made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States.

The explanation is that at the time of adopting the Constitution certain treaties existed which had been made by Congress under the Confederation, the continuing obligations of which it was proper to declare. The words "under the authority of the United States" were considered as extending equally to those previously made and to those which should subsequently be effected. But, although the former could not be considered as made pursuant to a constitution which was not then in existence, the latter would not be "under the authority of the United States" unless they are conformable to its Constitution (p. 66).

Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, says, in reference to the treaty-making power:

The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general and it, of course, embraces all sorts of treaties, for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for alliances or success, for indemnity for injuries or payment of debts, for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purposes which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may dictate in their intercourse with each other; but though the power is thus general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination of it and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constitutional powers would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill—the will of the people. (Sec. 1508.)

Mr. Speaker, it is useless to further pile up authorities to substantiate the correctness of the position which I have taken on this question, but I want to call the attention of the House to a strong and convincing argument made by Judge Shackelford Miller, of Louisville, Ky., before the Jefferson Law School, on this question. My attention had not been called to this magnificent argument of Judge Miller until after I had delivered my speech in the House on this question, but I will have it printed as an appendix to my remarks and invite the attention of the House to it, and assure you that it is worth your while to carefully read it.

I also call your attention to the very able speech made by one of the most distinguished lawyers in the present House of Representatives, the Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, of the Louisville district of the State of Kentucky. This speech also came to my notice after I had delivered the speech last month.

Mr. SHERLEY's speech was delivered on the 22d of January, 1907, and is found on page 1515 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date. It is with a great deal of pleasure that I find that this distinguished and learned lawyer is in exact accord with the views which I entertain in reference to the treaty-making power of the United States Government.

Mr. SHERLEY said, in part:

"The proposition that is involved in the present case growing out of the controversy between Japan and California is that the treaty-making power is not only able to remove alienage, so far as it relates to residence and so far as it relates to inheritance and transmission of property, but that it can go to the extent of conferring upon an alien every right enjoyed by a citizen of the United States or of any particular State. That I deny. It is manifest that no treaty could undertake to confer upon an alien the right to hold office within a State, because, gentlemen, the treaty-making clause must always be held subject to the general purpose and scope of our Government, State and National. It is unthinkable that the makers of the Constitution, who were so careful to guard the powers of every particular department, to offer check against check and counterbalance against counterbalance, were yet so impressed with the necessity of having facility of contract with foreign nations that they were willing to give to one man and two-thirds of the Senate present—not even two-thirds of all elected—the power to make a law that could override all State enactments and rule. The National Government could, if it saw fit, as it did see fit in the Chinese treaty, give to the citizens of a foreign country the right to education in the public schools of the National Government, because that is a matter that rests with the Nation. The burden is upon the Nation in maintaining these schools, and it might be proper that the Nation should impose the additional burden of education of aliens. But how can it be said, where the obligation is one that belongs to the State primarily, that is subject to the State's will, so subject that the State could to-morrow, if it saw fit, do away with its public-school system, make what appropriations it saw fit, or none at all, that the National Government could confer upon an alien such right? Once you concede that right, I see no reason, in a logical way, why you should not concede any other particular right that may be desired in regard to the internal affairs of a State.

"The Constitution provides that the President, with the consent of the Senate, may make treaties, and also provides that 'no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation.' Now, if this was all, it would be manifest that whatever agreement might be made with other nations would have to be had by virtue of a treaty made by the National Government. But this is not all. The prohibition upon the States to make treaties is contained in the beginning of section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, and in the last division of that section it is declared that 'no State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * * enter into an agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power.' Of course, it is clear that the negative form of this declaration admits the affirmative, and the State can, with the consent of Congress, enter into an agreement with another State or with a foreign power. But yesterday this House passed a bill giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between two of the States. Now, if an agreement can be made between a State and a foreign power it follows that such an agreement must be one not included in the scope of a treaty, because a State is, as we have seen, prohibited from making any treaty. That of itself is a further indication that the treaty-making power does not embrace all contracts of every kind which can be thought of between the people of one country and the people of another. What seems to my mind to have been the views of the makers of the Constitution was that the treaty power should relate to those subjects naturally belonging to treaties—should relate to those subjects that pertain to the country as a whole. It was proper—aye, it was necessary—that one voice should speak as to its contracts with other nations when it spoke on behalf of all the people, and it was further manifest that when that voice spoke within its domain the voice of every State must be silent, that no discordant note might be heard to limit or deny the solemn compact of the General Government. But it is evident that there are many things that may pertain peculiarly to one locality, to one section of the country, and to its relationship to foreign nations that do not pertain to the balance of the country and should not be embraced within a treaty."

I can not refrain, Mr. Speaker, from quoting one other authority which very clearly states the correct principle to guide us in determining to what extent the President and Senate may go in making a treaty. I call attention to The Constitution of the United States, by John Randolph Tucker, paragraph 354, page 725:

"A grave question has arisen whether the exclusive power of treaty making, vested in the President and Senate, is unlimited in its operation upon all the subjects for which a treaty may provide. Can a treaty by compact with a foreign nation bind all of the departments of our own Government as to matters fully confided to them; can it surrender, or by agreement nullify, the securities for personal liberty ingrafted upon the Constitution itself; can it cede to a foreign power a State of the Union or any part of its territory, without its consent; can it regulate commerce with foreign nations in spite of the power of Congress to regulate commerce with them; can it provide for the rates of duty to be imposed upon certain articles imported from foreign nations, or admit them free of duty, in the face of the power given to Congress to lay and collect taxes and duties; can a treaty appropriate money from the Public Treasury and withdraw it without the action of Congress; can a treaty dispose of any part of the territory of the United States, or any of their property, without the consent of Congress, which alone has power to dispose of and make rules and regulations concerning the territory and other property of the United States? These important questions have several times arisen for discussion in our history, and upon them authoritative decisions have been made by other departments of the Government, which are based upon solid reason and sound principles of constitutional construction.

"It can not be denied that very many of these questions must be answered in the negative, or the consequence would be that, under the treaty-making power the President and Senate might absorb all the powers of the Government. In favor of the extreme claim for power for the President and Senate it has been urged that a contract between the United States and a foreign nation must be conclusive against all departments of the Government, because it is a contract; but the answer to this contention is obvious and conclusive. It involves the petitio principii by assuming that the contract is complete though it trenches upon the power of the other departments of the Government without their consent. And if it be further urged that foreign nations know no party in the contract on the part of the United States except the President and Senate, the answer is equally conclusive that if our Constitution requires the consent of the departments to a treaty of the nature referred to, the foreign nation is bound to take notice of that fact and can not claim a complete obligation in the absence of the consent of the other departments. The maxim upon this subject is familiar—qui cum alio contrahit vel est, vel debet esse, non ignarus conditionis ejus. And if it be further urged that this is too refined a doctrine to regulate our delicate relations with foreign powers, the answer is that the treaty-making power of the Crown of Great Britain, where it involves a clear and absolute power of Parliament, has never been recognized as valid by the English Government, and has never been enforced. The Queen may make a treaty to pay $10,000,000 to the French Government, but unless Parliament appropriates the money the treaty will be ineffectual. It is from the fundamental laws of each State that we must learn where resides the authority that is capable of contracting with validity in the name of a State.

"A treaty therefore can not take away essential liberties secured by the Constitution to the people. A treaty can not bind the United States to do what the Constitution forbids them to do. We may suggest a further limitation; a treaty can not compel any department of the Government to do what the Constitution submits to its exclusive and absolute will. On these questions the true canon of construction, that the treaty-making power, in its seeming absoluteness and unconditional extent, is confronted with equally absolute and unconditional authority vested in the judiciary. Therefore neither must be construed as absolute and unconditional, but each must be construed and conditioned upon the equally clear power vested in the others. For example, Congress has power to lay and collect duties; the President and Senate have power to make and contract with a foreign nation in respect to such duties. Can any construction be given to these two apparently contradictory powers than that the general power to make treaties must yield to the specific power of Congress to lay and collect all duties; and while the treaty may propose a contract as to duties on articles coming from a foreign nation, such an executory contract can not become valid and binding unless Congress, which has supreme authority to lay and collect duties, consents to it. If it is then asked how are you to reconcile these two powers which appear to be antagonistic, the answer is clear. Congress has no capacity to negotiate a treaty with a foreign power. The extent of its membership makes this impracticable. The Constitution, therefore, left the House of Representatives out of all consideration in negotiating treaties. The executory contract between the United States and a foreign nation is therefore confided to one man, who can conduct the negotiations, and to a select body who can advise and consent to the treaty he has negotiated. But this executory contract must depend for its execution upon the supreme power vested in Congress 'to lay and collect duties.' It is therefore a contract not completed, but inchoate, and can only be completed and binding when Congress shall by legislation consent thereto and lay duties in accordance with the executory contract or treaty. The same reasoning may apply to all of the great powers vested in Congress, such as 'to borrow money, regulate commerce, coin money, raise armies and provide a navy, make laws as to naturalization, bankruptcies, and exercise exclusive legislation' in the District of Columbia and Territories of the country. If these are sought by the treaty to be regulated by the President and Senate, it can be done only when Congress vested with these great powers shall give its constitutional consent.

"Mr. Madison, in the reports of the convention which he has left us, used an expression which is significant upon this point. He intimated that in making treaties eventual—that is, complete and final per se—the treaty-making power might be independent; but where they referred to matters that were incomplete without legislation they would be incomplete until that consent was given.

"The absurdity of any other construction as to the power to lay taxes, duties, and so on, is very palpable. We have seen from the Constitution that all bills for the raising of revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, to which the Senate may or may not assent and the President may veto; but if the President and the Senate have the power to regulate the system of taxation and revenue by treaty without the consent of Congress, then the House of Representatives, which, by the terms of the Constitution, is made the originating body for such bills, without whose primal action the President and Senate can have no voice whatever in the matter, is to be excluded from any consent to the terms of the treaty of the President and Senate, who, by the constitutional method, are not entitled to act at all until the House of Representatives has inaugurated a bill.

"The reason, in the nature of our system, which makes the conclusion absolute is that in the balance of power which was ordained by the convention the House of Representatives was to originate all taxation upon the people. The people at large dreaded the placing of the tax power in the hands of a majority of the States without regard to their size, and insisted that the power should be in the hands of the States according to the numerical proportion of their population. To give the President, with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, the power to regulate taxation is to reverse this scheme and destroy the equilibrium of the Constitution. For in 1790 two-thirds of the States, containing 1,685,360 people, could ratify a treaty against the other third of the States, containing a population of 2,166,419; that is to say, that a minority could tax at will a majority. By the census of 1880 two-thirds of the Senate, representing 19,755,532, could regulate taxation against the other third, containing a population of 29,615,818; and by the late census of 1890 this disproportion would be greatly increased.

"It has been shown in previous parts of this work that the regulation of commerce by a majority vote of the two Houses, instead of requiring two-thirds, was the result of a concession made upon a compromise. But if this regulation of commerce can be made by two-thirds of the States in the Senate, then, under the census of 1880, shown above, two-fifths of the population of the country could regulate commerce against the other three-fifths, instead of the original purpose to require a vote of two-thirds to do so.

"355. These results demonstrate the fatal disturbance of the equilibrium of the Constitution which would arise from any such construction as would give the President and Senate the right by treaty with a foreign power to regulate the internal concerns of the country. We have had several historic precedents on this subject, to which brief reference may be made. President Washington negotiated Jay's treaty in 1795, in which were general stipulations as to commerce and duties upon British vessels, and so forth. It was insisted that this treaty was complete without any consent of the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives resolved by a vote of 63 to 36 that while the House did not claim any agency in making treaties, yet when a treaty stipulated for regulations upon any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress it must depend for its execution, as to such stipulations, on a law or laws to be passed by Congress, and it was the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such a treaty into effect and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment might be most conducive to the public good."

Mr. Speaker, since the controversy over the Jay treaty the principle for which I contend has been recognized by all the Presidents and by both branches of Congress in all of the treaties since that day. Wherever a treaty involves the payment of money, or a change of the revenue laws of the United States, before the treaty becomes operative it has been submitted to the House of Representatives for its ratification and approval. So the principle that the treaty-making power is absolute, unlimited, and unrestrained in the President and the Senate has been repudiated, and the principle thoroughly agreed upon is that the treaty-making power is one which is delegated like all other powers to the Federal Government and is limited in its scope by the provisions of the Constitution; and, like all other powers granted to the Federal Government, can only be exercised constitutionally when it does not trespass upon the reserve powers of the States.

When Jefferson purchased Louisiana he submitted the treaty to the House of Representatives and asked them to appropriate the money, and if the House had refused, the treaty would have failed. When Johnson purchased Alaska this precedent was followed. This is because Congress alone can appropriate money under the Constitution, and the House of Representatives must be consulted.

One other illustration with which we are all familiar is that Mr. Taft submitted the reciprocity agreement with Canada to Congress and not to the Senate alone, in order to make it binding.

I have no doubt that it would be more convenient to foreign nations if they only had to deal with the President as with an absolute monarch, and it would sometimes be less troublesome if the President could close the contract; but human liberty has suffered too much in the past to intrust such power to one man.

It would also be much easier if only the Senate had to be consulted as to all treaties, because they could be more easily entered into; but Americans are unwilling to be taxed by the President and the Senate alone. They are also unwilling to have the Treasury doors opened at the behest of the President and the Senate.

These few illustrations clearly show that there is a limitation on the treaty-making power. If it is limited, is it not limited by the Constitution itself? If limited by the Constitution itself, can its powers be larger than that instrument itself? To do this you must infer sovereignty from a delegated power. To deduce powers of sovereignty, unlimited, unrestrained, and undefined from delegated powers—that is, to get the greater out of the lesser and limited—is an evident inversion of reasoning which necessarily terminates in the conclusion that the limited power of government substituted for the unlimited power of sovereignty, supposed to have been abolished, furnish references which revive these same unlimited powers of sovereignty.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, our Constitution is a mockery if the unlimited and unrestrained power is vested in a portion of our Federal Government. If the ingenuity of man is great enough to thus distort the treaty-making power to this extent, then the great philosophers and statesmen who invented our Constitution and placed the treaty-making power in the hands of the President and the Senate for the benevolent purpose of civilizing intercourse between our Government and other nations and softening the evils of war have only succeeded, as if by wicked design, to increase the power of domestic oppression and destruction of our local governments by dissolving restrictions imposed by them for our security and liberty—the very protection which our States sought to secure by establishing the Federal Government. Thus the Federal Government is substituted for the foreign power and force and does the very thing that our fathers intended to prevent.

GOVERNMENT BY SECRET METHODS.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to another reason which is very strong to my own mind why our fathers did not vest this absolute power in the President and Senate. The statesmen of that day and time were learned as to the strength and evils of all of the governments of the past. They knew all of the evil effects upon free government of "back-stair conferences" and "star-chamber proceedings." They knew the absolute necessity of having the public eye on their officers and servants. Every precaution was taken that the people might know what was going on. The Constitution provides that a Journal of the proceedings shall be kept, which shall be published from time to time, and when one-fifth of the membership shall demand it the yeas and nays shall be entered upon that Journal. This clause is for the purpose of allowing the people to know how their servants are voting and what proceedings are being had affecting them and their property.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, if the contention of some men is sound, this publicity may be avoided by taking the treaty-making route and behind closed doors the Senators, or a portion of them, with no one to hear except themselves, consider a treaty about which profound secrecy has been maintained, which affects the internal affairs of every State of the Union and every citizen in those States, overturning their State constitutions and laws, affecting their most sacred property rights, affecting their marital relations, their rights of trial by jury, their rights to the divine writ of habeas corpus, and, in a word, their right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and the first intimation our people have the treaty is ratified, published as the supreme law, overturning the title to their lands and depriving them of every sacred right under their State laws and constitution. They awaken to find themselves living in a new government and under a new order of things and with two new masters—the Federal Government, exercising direct control of their land, property, home, person, family, school, and church, and, in partnership with some foreign power, ready to enforce the new edict called a treaty.

No, Mr. Speaker, our fathers did not fight and die for this sort of Government. They did not foster such a mockery as this. They did not practice this fraud upon their posterity. If the President and Senate can make such a treaty, let us tear down every door of secrecy. Let us require the President to publish every letter and telegram bearing upon a contemplated treaty on the very moment of its dispatch; let the public hear every word that he says to foreign representatives from the first to the last about all treaties; let the treaty as agreed upon by him be sent to the Senate and printed in the Journals and the RECORD; let the press have it when the Senate gets it; let the cloture of the Senate be removed; throw open the doors, let the people hear every word spoken in debate; let the roll call be public and published; let the Senator's constituents know how he votes and how he speaks.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another interruption?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What is the purpose of a treaty, as a rule? In my judgment, it is to establish peaceful relations——

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I do not think so; Mr. Speaker, I think there are thousands of questions, too numerous to mention, that are just as important. In other words, we do not simply make treaties about peace. We make treaties of commerce; we make treaties of all kinds and character that affect the great external affairs of our great Nation. I admit that the treaty-making power could be and ought to be used in enforcing, if possible, upon the nations of the world peace, because I think that nothing is more cruel and savage than war.

And that is the most expensive of all luxuries that can be engaged in. But however the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] might desire to have the form of the Government changed, he must live under the Government as it is. He can not as a Congressman, nor can he as a private citizen nor as a Senator nor as President, transgress the Constitution which he swears to support. So I shall have to decline to enter into any discussion of that kind, because I am trespassing too much already on the patience of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi declines to yield further.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will not cut me out of this discussion by so construing the Constitution.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman differs from me in his construction of the Constitution, but I will yield to the gentleman if he simply desires to ask me a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will ask the gentleman this question, the views of the gentleman to the contrary notwithstanding: Does he not believe that treaties between different governments are about the same thing and are to be compared with contracts made between individuals for the purpose of getting along peacefully? I will ask the gentleman whether that is not the real purpose of treaties.

Mr. SISSON. It is the duty of both high contracting parties to a treaty to know the authority of each, and neither has the right to exceed that authority. If I had the time at my disposal, I would be glad to read to the gentleman other authorities which he may read in the RECORD, where other authorities, greater than I, have answered the gentleman's question. It has been answered in the Senate, and on the floor of the House, and in the schoolroom, and in the courts.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In other words, what the gentleman construes as a menace, namely, the treaty-making power, I consider as a benefit.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I am rather inclined to believe with Mr. Jefferson that these "backstairs conferences" result as often in bringing about wars as in bringing about peace. [Applause.] Mr. Jefferson, in discussing this matter, stated that if the nations of the world would just deal honestly with each other and not endeavor to gain commercial and political advantages over each other—if they only would deal honestly and frankly—all occasions for war would cease. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to go into this matter further now, although I believe it is demonstrable that all wars have been unnecessary and have been brought about mainly to gratify the selfishness of a few men.

LAND MONOPOLY.

Mr. Speaker, the treaty-making power, if abused, can do infinitely more harm at the present time than it could have done in former times. International business has assumed enormous proportions. Men of great wealth, and especially the great corporate enterprises, having practically exhausted most of the safe fields of investment for their great surplus earnings, are turning their attention to land investments. All of the more progressive and more advanced States have, either in their constitutions or in their statutes, prohibited corporations from owning land for agricultural purposes. Some of the States prohibit corporations acquiring lands for speculative purposes. These statutes are intended to prevent land monopoly.

If the treaty-making power can overturn the constitution and statutes of a State, then a treaty could be made with a foreign nation permitting not only its citizens but land companies and land corporations to purchase and own land in the United States notwithstanding the constitution and laws of the State should forbid such ownership. It is therefore easy to understand why not only the great corporate interests of this country but why the great corporate and business interests of other countries should be desirous of establishing the right in the treaty-making power of the Federal Government to override these State constitutions and State laws. It is easy to understand why these great business institutions would endeavor, through the press, which they control, to destroy whatever good effect a speech of this character would have upon the country.

Many of these large employers of labor would be delighted to have the Federal Government, through its treaty-making power, pull down the bars and let the alien come in.

What would become of the American farmer if the great corporations of this country should enter the land market and buy all of the best lands of the country and then cultivate them with Mongolian, Chinese, Hindu, and other cheap alien labor? How long would the American farmer be able to compete with these great land monopolists in producing what our lands are adapted to? The great land corporation would establish its commissary and compel its horde of aliens to purchase everything which they consumed from the commissary, and would be able to make enormous profits out of the land and drive the independent farmer out of existence.

In my own State foreign and domestic corporations have been purchasing large tracts of magnificent land, and in every instance they so organize their business that they require every tenant on the place to make all of his purchases from the commissary. In the great State of California individuals and corporations owning great tracts of land are cultivating them with Hindu, Chinese, and Mexican labor. It is this class of landowners and land monopolists who are opposed to all restrictions upon labor importation into this country. These are the men who desire to lease their land for high prices to this class of labor. It is the land speculator who has large tracts of land who desires to import Asiatics and other aliens and sell them, at high prices, the land which they own and control.

Any man who opposes the importation into this country of aliens of every kind will find arrayed against him all of the corporate influences of this country of this character, and they will exercise every means of misrepresentation to destroy him politically, so as to teach all men in public life in the future not to oppose them in their demands. It is bad enough to have our copper, coal, iron, timber, oil, manufacturing, food, banks, and other enterprises of this character monopolized by a few and controlled by them. God knows they extract enough from the people and their toil; but who can picture the conditions that will exist when these same monopolists shall reach out and control the land of this Republic? The wickedness of monopoly has been recognized in every age of the common law, and has been instrumental in destroying all of the great governments of the past.

Mr. Speaker, this question is therefore intimately associated in my mind with the question of the alien ownership of land. The private corporation, as we understand at present, is of modern origin. The real good that results to a people from a private corporation is that a number of individuals may subscribe a certain amount of money for the purpose of developing an enterprise, new and hazardous in its nature, which could not, in the nature of things, be so well developed by private individuals. If the corporation could not perform this function, then it has no right in morals to exist. No corporation should ever be chartered which interferes with or hampers the rights of an individual citizen. The citizen in every free government, in his individual capacity, has certain inalienable rights. The corporation has and can have only such rights as are conferred upon it by the State. A citizen entering a corporation enjoys a certain special privilege which the private citizen can not enjoy. His liability is limited to the amount of his subscription to the stock, and he does not, upon the failure of the corporate enterprise, jeopardize his entire fortune. The death of an owner of stock does not necessarily affect the right of the corporation to continue to do business. The individual can not convert his liabilities into assets and his assets into liabilities. The stockholders of a corporation may do this. The private individual can not add water or fictitious values to his property; the corporation can. The stockholders of a corporation can, have in the past, and are now issuing stock far beyond the value of the property owned. The stockholders of a corporation may convert stock into first-mortgage bonds and then issue and put upon the market more common stock than the entire value of the property owned, and thus convert an asset into a liability and a liability into an asset. Most of the great fortunes have been made by deceiving the public in this way. Stock jugglery is a common practice of the modern millionaire.

Through this stock juggling and stock manipulation a few men in the United States have appropriated to themselves practically all of the railroad properties, all of the mining properties, all of the oil properties, and all of the market places where the necessities of life are sold, such as meat, corn, cotton, wheat, and so on. These men who have thus enriched themselves through this channel by appropriating to themselves all of the above properties now control almost every safe investment for money except the lands of the country. They are appropriating to themselves all of the dividends of the above properties, and there is practically but one new avenue of investment now open to them, and that is to invest their surplus earnings in the farm lands of the country.

If they are permitted to organize great land companies and absorb all of the lands of the United States they will be able to reduce to serfdom not only those who work in the mines, in the factories, in the countinghouses, and on the railroads, but they will reduce to a condition of serfdom all of those who till the soil. It is idle to say that a private landowner can or will own land in competition with the corporate interests of the country. Next to the alien ownership of all the land in the United States the most dangerous condition would be the corporate ownership of our lands. [Applause.]

If the corporation were a domestic one it could be controlled by the powers in the United States. But if it is true that aliens have rights under the treaties, as some lawyers contend, then we would have to deal with a foreign nation, and for that reason it is the more dangerous.

If I can become a simple watchman upon the tower to call the attention of the people of the United States to the present danger of land monopolies, I will have done the people of the country a great service. Every State in the Union should at once pass the most drastic laws against the corporate ownership of farm lands and against the corporate ownership of all lands in our towns and cities, as well as in the country, for speculative purposes.

There are three things absolutely essential for the existence of the human race on this earth. The first is air, the second is water, and the third is land. A human being can only live a few moments without air, and if some monster could invent some device whereby he could gather into many receptacles all of the air and dole it out to human beings at so much per breath the human family would be justified in not only destroying his infernal machine, but in destroying him, because if he were permitted to own such a device he would make the balance of the human family his slaves.

If, on the other hand, some monster could devise a machine whereby he could catch all of the rain which falls from the heavens and store it up in receptacles and dole his water out to quench the thirst of the human family, he also should be considered a monster and should be instantly destroyed.

But the land of the earth is just as essential to human existence as either of the above two elements. The bounds of the land are fixed by the oceans—man can not add to its extent or reduce its area much. It was fixed by the Creator when He made the world. Man must live on it. It is the common inheritance of all.

Every title to land is an agreement, and when a man by any corporate device or any system of legal jugglery should seek to appropriate to himself by government grant, by purchase, or otherwise the earth's surface he is equally as dangerous to human existence as either of the above mentioned if they secured the control of air and water, except that the human race would not be instantly destroyed by such acquisition of land. But if the people of the country would tamely submit to the land monopoly it would as successfully reduce them to a condition of serfdom as would a monopoly of the other two elements.

The land of a nation is the basis of all of its prosperity. From it comes our food, clothing, building material, and fuel, and the man or group of men who control the land of the country necessarily control the people of that country. No people can be a free people where land monopoly prevails. If I am permitted to control the land of a country I will necessarily be able to control the people of the country.

The United States Government within the last few years has done the posterity of the people an irreparable injury. The records of the Land Office show that about 200,000,000 acres of the most marvelously fertile land in the country has been given away to railroad corporations and other favorites of the particular administration in power at the time of the grant. There is but little now of this sort of property outside of Alaska for the United States Government to donate to her favorites, but the menace still is just as great as it formerly was, unless all of the States in the Union shall pass some drastic laws to prevent the corporate ownership of land for farming or speculative purposes. No corporation should be permitted to own a foot of land except for the purpose for which the corporation was chartered, and then only so much as may be necessary to conduct its business. Not a foot of land in any State should ever be permitted to be owned by a corporation for farming or speculative purposes.

The land should be preserved for the honest settler and those of us who now own lands should not be permitted to dispose of them except to individuals who expect to farm the lands themselves or have it done under their specific direction. The individual ownership of land can never result in a monopoly, because when the individual dies the land is divided up among those who inherit from him. His children will marry the children of other families; his land will be divided up and thus remain in the hands of the people. But if he is permitted to consolidate his lands with other people into a corporation when he dies his land will still remain in the corporation, and the stock in the corporation will be dealt with as personal property, but the ownership of the land will not in the least be disturbed.

The American people should erect a monument to the man who first conceived the idea of not permitting a citizen to enter more than 160 acres of land. The homestead entry has been the bulwark of our national strength [applause], and if in the very beginning the laws of our States should have limited not only the corporate ownership of land but the private ownership of land to a few hundred acres we would have been stronger nationally than we are to-day.

The traveler in France is not impressed by the beauties of Paris as he is by the strength of the French Nation when he travels among the peasant farmers. Napoleon Bonaparte is loved in France not so much because he was a great general and great Emperor of France, but he is loved because he broke up the Crown lands of France and divided them among the French peasants in accordance with the number in the peasant's family. Europe to-day does not fear the armies of France nor the navies of France, but the nations of Europe are afraid of the people of France, because every peasant farmer when he fights for France realizes that he is fighting for his own home, for his children, and for his fireside, and he is willing to die if need be for that Government which protects him in the ownership of his home.

It has been the small farmer of the United States that has made it possible for our people to outstrip all the other people of the Western Hemisphere. If Texas had remained a part of Mexico, her condition would have been no better than are the conditions now in Mexico. If the States of Oregon, Washington, California, Nevada, New Mexico, and Arizona had remained a part of Old Mexico, they would have been in no better condition to-day than the people of Mexico. In that Republic there are a few grandees who own farms two-thirds as large as the State of Mississippi, and every human being that tills the soil on these farms is a peon and a slave. The trouble with Ireland to-day is that her lands have been monopolized by the English landlords, and the Irish have been driven by the thousands from that rich, happy island to the shores of America and other countries to escape that horrible condition of suffering. It is the history of every country that where there is a land monopoly there is woe and want and misery. It is equally the history of every country where the land is divided up into small farms and the man that tills the soil owns it that that country is happy and prosperous.

Let me repeat, man must live and live on the land. If the land is monopolized by the few they will successfully control the business of the entire country. They will be able to dictate the terms under which man shall live. They can fix the land rental, the house rental, and the entire wage schedule throughout the laboring world; and the men who produce the wealth with their labor will only be given just such amounts as the selfish monopolist is willing that they shall have. This problem overshadows all other problems. It matters not the kind and character of Government if this condition prevails. We may stagger along under burdens of protective tariff, but that law can be repealed at any time by the majority; but if the corporate interests of the country and our millionaires shall acquire a vested interest in all of the best lands of the United States nothing but a revolution would ever divest them of this ownership.

This condition, as I have pictured it, would be bad enough if none but American citizens were employed by these industrial and land monopolists, but what would become of the American manhood and womanhood if these land monopolists and industrial monopolists can be permitted to bring into competition with the American wage earner and the American farmer, through the treaty-making power, the cheapest aliens from all over the world and further reduce the share which they will give labor of that which it has earned?

It is this condition which I fear that causes me to be so much interested in this great principle which I have discussed and for which I have been so severely criticized by certain portions of the American press; but I think the great majority of the people of the United States do not hold to this position of the corporate-owned press. I have received letters from all over the country, from men in every station of life, highly indorsing me in the position which I have taken, and if I can have with me in this fight for Americans and their rights the great laboring masses on the farms, in the factories, and in the mines, whose patriotic hearts beat for humanity, I am more than satisfied to be denounced and criticized for the position which I take. [Applause.] I am willing, if it must be so, to be driven from public life; but I am not willing, nor shall I ever surrender so long as I live the right to speak for the great inarticulate mass of American citizens—the great toilers who make possible every necessity, comfort, and luxury of life.

The rich and the powerful who purchase labor will have their fortunes vastly increased by having all barriers to cheap labor broken down. They know that the quickest and surest route is through the treaty-making power, because they only deal first with one man, the President, and then one body, two-thirds of the Senate present. They know that their children will never have to compete for a livelihood with alien cheap labor. They will not have to work side by side with these laborers, but they will employ this labor instead of the honest American labor because they can get it cheaper. They will weigh the palpitating human heart in the same scale that they weigh a pound of bacon. They will discharge the honest American-born son, who will be called upon to defend the American flag against all enemies of the world, and will employ an alien who owes no duty to America, who owes no duty to protect these multimillionaires' property rights, solely because they can employ the alien cheaper than they can employ the American. It must follow, then, as the night the day that the cheaper the labor that they employ the more rapidly they can monopolize and absorb all the property of the United States.

I invite the attention of Congress and the attention of the people of the country to a magnificent paper prepared by Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, which is found in the North American Review of June 20, 1906. I agree in the main with this distinguished statesmen in all that he says in his "Appeal to our Millionaires."

I do not know whether the men who toil and produce the wealth of the world will ever be able to get their share or not. It is the same old battle that has gone on for all time. It is the same condition as pictured in the fifth chapter of St. James, who says:

> Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

[Applause.]

I might say, in parentheses, that if I had made in substance that statement as coming from me, certain portions of the press would be criticizing me as being a flannel-mouthed demagogue. [Applause.] Let them direct their criticisms to the sacred word of God.

The supreme tyranny of wealth in the United States is as heartless as the tyranny in the ages past. This great wealth and these employers of labor may win in the contest, as they have won for the time being in the past, but they will reap the wrath pictured in this chapter of St. James.

Let us as a Nation avoid this day of wrath by the passage of salient and safe laws that will enable labor to enjoy what it has earned.

The next great step that must be taken is to be able to control and direct by law the intellectual cunning and acquisitiveness of those who are peculiarly endowed with a strength of intellect to absorb what others have earned. In former times there was no law against robbery but the man with the greatest physical strength would take by brute force from others what they had earned. But in the slow march of civilization it was found that it was detrimental to the best interests of society to permit the exercise of this God-given physical strength in the acquisition of property, and laws were passed denouncing physical acquisition of property by stealth, either in the day or night, as burglary. If we shall preserve the equal opportunities of men on this earth it is absolutely essential that our lawmakers should turn their attention to the control of the manner and the extent to which man can acquire property by intellectual strength and intellectual cunning. I agree absolutely with that great Englishman, Judge Coleridge, a chief justice of England, in the principle which he lays down. He says:

> In the present day there is nothing perhaps as to which confusion of thought is greater and more mischievous than as to property itself—the idea, the principle of property, and as to the laws of property, the rules by which the practical enjoyment of property is to be regulated. Now, what is the right of property? The end of property is subsistence, by which end nature has bounded our pretensions to it; hence, in a state of nature, we can not take more than we can use nor hold it longer than we live and are capable of using it. The manner of acquiring property in a state of nature is by occupancy—all other modes of transmitting and acquiring property are acts of positive and civil law, which laws prevent the property of the dead from reverting, as it otherwise would do in a state of nature, to the common stock.
> All the complicated and conflicting systems by which in various civilized countries the powers of the possessors of property, even in various ways, are now narrowed and now enlarged, are systems of positive law, and the right of property has never existed, even in its most absolute form, without some restriction. The right of inheritance, a purely artificial right, has been at different times and in different countries very variously dealt with.
> The same power which prescribes rules for the possession and descent of property can, of course, alter them, for plain absurdities would follow if this were not so; and the consent of nations and the practice of ages have long since established this simple truth. It has been shown from reason and upon authority that the great and beneficent institution of private property rests only upon the general advantage. The particular rules by which the enjoyment of property is regulated differ in every country in the world and must rest at last upon one and the same foundation, the general advantage; and the defense of any such law of property must ultimately rest on this, that it inures to the general advantage; and in free countries, indeed, I can not conceive any law standing on any other basis. The object of the restrictions placed in England for many centuries upon powers of settlement and devise is invariably stated to have been to prevent mischievous accumulations of property in a few hands. It seems, indeed, an elementary proposition that a free people can deal as it thinks fit with its common stock of property, and can prescribe to its citizens such rules as it sees fit for its enjoyment, alienation, and transmission.
> A very large coal owner some years ago interfered with a high hand in one of the coal strikes. He sent for the workmen. He declined to argue, but he said, stamping his foot upon the ground, "All the coal within so many square miles is mine, and if you do not instantly come to terms not a hundredweight of it shall be brought to the surface, and it shall remain unworked." This utterance of his was much discussed at the time. By some it was held up as a subject of panegyric and a model for imitation; the manly utterance of one who would stand no nonsense and who was determined to assert his rights of property and to tolerate no interference with them. By others he was denounced as insolent and brutal, and it was suggested that if a few more men said such things and a few men acted on them it would very probably result in the coal owners having not much right of property left to be interfered with. I should myself deny that the mineral treasures placed by Providence under the soil of a country belong to a handful of surface proprietors in the sense in which this gentleman appeared to think that they did. That a few persons would have the right to agree to shut the coal mines of Great Britain seems to me, I must frankly say, unspeakably absurd.
> The general advantage was in former days absolutely and avowedly regarded, and when rights of private property interfered with them such rights were summarily set aside; and while property itself was acknowledged, the laws of its enjoyment were regulated according to what was thought to be the general advantage. All laws of property must stand upon the foot of general advantage, for a country belongs to its inhabitants; and in what proportions and by what rules its inhabitants are to own its property must be settled by the law, and the moment a fragment of the people set up rights as inherent in them and not founded upon the public good plain absurdities follow, for laws of property are like all other laws, to be changed when the public good requires it. It would be well, indeed, that the owners of property in land and money, from the largest to the smallest, should recognize that their title to the enjoyment of it must rest upon the same foundation, and that the mode and measure of their enjoyment of the common stock of the State, if it injures the State, can no more be defended and will no more be endured by a free people than any other public mischief or nuisance.

I quote what Judge Coleridge says, because I fear that the corporate-controlled press would take issue with me in this statement and would endeavor to convince the people that it was a new and radical doctrine.

WEBSTER.

Let me quote again and from a great American who is known and honored throughout the world as one of America's greatest statesmen and constitutional lawyers. Daniel Webster, with great sagacity, looking into the future, said:

> The freest government, if it could exist, would not be long acceptable if the tendency of the laws was to create a rapid accumulation of property in a few hands. In the nature of things, those who have not property and see their neighbors possessed of much more than they think them to need can not be favorable to laws made for the protection of such property. When this class becomes numerous, it grows clamorous. It looks on property as its prey and plunder, and is naturally ready at all times for violence and revolution. It would seem, then, to be the part of political wisdom to found government on property, but to establish such distribution of property, by the laws which regulate its transmission and alienation, as to interest the great majority of society in the support of the government.

The public press seemed to be amused at the position taken by Vice President MARSHALL in some of his late addresses in reference to property rights, but the announcement which he makes is neither new, novel, nor revolutionary. In a state of nature the only right that a man has to property is the right of possession, and the moment he left a piece of property his neighbor could occupy it, and he had as much right to it as the former occupant. This condition was well suited to nomadic life when the population of the earth was small and the land more than abundant; but for the good of man under civilized conditions it was agreed that man could be invested with a title to a certain portion of the earth's surface, and that his title by this agreement should be a permanent title, and that his children should inherit the land, and it should be his even though he temporarily abandoned it or should actually change his domicile to some other place. This agreement was for the good of society.

After personal property became more abundant it became necessary to make laws restricting the acquisition of personal property, but these laws were nothing more nor less than agreements made for the good of society. And just as these people had the right to make these agreements which were best for them at that time, just so the people now have the right to change that agreement if it is not to the interest of mankind that these particular property rights shall be maintained. It is not for the good of society that one man shall be permitted to acquire too much of the other's services, nor is it for the best interest of mankind for one man to be permitted to own and control too much of our personal property. This is sound, because no man should be permitted to own a piece of real or personal property unless he has given mankind or society a quid pro quo for such property.

If an individual should be limited in his right to acquire more than a certain amount of property for the good of society, it is equally as important that the artificial person called a corporation shall be limited in its encroachments and in what it may or may not do, because in modern times men have associated themselves together and formed what is called a body corporate, given themselves a corporate name and the right to do business under a corporate name, and have gone out into the field of industrial and all kinds of business activities. The original purpose of the corporation was to enable men to accomplish through organization those things which would benefit humanity and which could not be accomplished by one individual in his individual capacity. But that reason was soon lost sight of and the greed and selfishness of men has been able to secure through legislative enactment corporate existence for the purpose of securing a vast advantage in the business of mankind by having this special privilege granted to them. And so great has grown this corporate power that to-day practically all of the transportation, mining, and industrial properties of the United States are controlled through and by the corporations. These corporations, nothing but artificial persons, through their agents employ labor and the stockholders enjoy the fruits of their labor. Now, if these great corporate institutions can have influence enough, not through the people of the United States, not through the House of Representatives, not through Congress as a whole, but through the Executive and a portion of the legislative branch—to-wit, two-thirds of the Senate—shall be permitted under the guise of a treaty with some foreign nation to make them secure, not only in their corporate existence, but make them secure not only against the people of the States but against the people of the United States, then their influence is such that it is dangerous to the very existence of our Government. Because if the State laws shall make an effort to restrain them and to control them, if labor organizations for the protection of American labor shall organize for the purpose of compelling these artificial giants to give them a just wage, then it is only necessary for the corporate interests of this country to secure one President and two-thirds of the Senate to enter into a treaty or treaties with foreign nations permitting aliens to come into this country and to enter into competition with American labor that can destroy the right and privilege which labor has in America to protect itself, and at the same time, through the treaty, give to the corporation, which is an organization of capitalists, rights superior to the rights of labor to organize, because if the Government permits the artificial person to so control the Government that they can have treaties passed for their benefit, then the Government has passed from the control of the people of the United States into the hands of the President and two-thirds of the Senate, and in the enforcement of these international agreements they will have the effrontery in the corporate-owned press to traduce patriotic Americans by telling them that they must submit to this treaty or else such and such a powerful nation will make war upon us and destroy our Government, and this very thing these corporations will attempt when the American people shall make efforts to control them. They would infinitely prefer to pass into the hands of an alien Government that would be favorable to them than to live in a Government that made an effort to control them for the benefit of mankind and the benefit of humanity. Thus all republics and governments by the people have been destroyed, and unless checked, in this manner ours will be destroyed.

The principle for which I am contending and for which I contended on the floor of the House of Representatives when I made the constitutional argument in reference to the treaty-making power in the California situation is involved, as I consider, the very existence of this Government as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. I do not want this Government to be destroyed through the treaty-making power. In the very early history of our Government certain aristocratic gentlemen who had a contempt for the people undertook to maintain that the treaty-making power was supreme, but all these aristocratic gentlemen were driven from public life, and the great Republican Party, with Mr. Jefferson at its head, became supreme, and the aristocratic Federalist Party died that the Government of the people might live. And there has not been a single political party from the death of the old Federalist Party down to the present time that as a party has ever maintained that the treaty-making power, which is vested in the President and two-thirds of the Senate, was the supreme law of the land over and above the Constitution of the United States and to the complete destruction of the reserved powers of the States. So, gentlemen of the House, I have taken this position not because the Japanese are involved in this controversy, but I would take it if England, Germany, France, or any other nation on earth was involved, and for the purity of my motives and the sincerity of my purpose and the wisdom of my position I appeal to the country and to posterity. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I have concluded my remarks, but I will be glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. DIES. How does the gentleman from Mississippi regard the menace of 8,000 Japanese in California with the total immigration from southern Italy of 250,000 of those who receive less wages in their own country than are received by the laborers of our country? How do they compare with the 8,000 permanent inhabitants of California?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go into a discussion of that question, because I think it has been perfectly clear that I am opposed to alien immigration into this country that will reduce the rate of wages in the United States. But the gentleman from Texas is mistaken in saying that there are 8,000 Japanese in California; there are about 56,000 Japanese in California, according to a census that has lately been taken.

Mr. DIES. May I ask the gentleman this question: If these few Japanese determined to attend to their own business and migrate to California are a menace, how much more is the million who come from the south and east of Europe every 12 months to become a part of this Republic and settle in the great cities of this country? If the gentleman is so belligerent in regard to this small immigration from Japan, how does he feel toward the greater and stupendous immigration from the east and south of Italy?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Texas uses the word "belligerent." I am not any more belligerent than the distinguished gentleman has been in his anti-immigration speeches on the floor of the House. I will say that I was endeavoring to discuss two questions: First, the treaty-making power of the United States, in so far as it could affect the rights of States; and, second, discussing another question which is closely related to that, the corporate ownership of land in this country, which our States have endeavored by local laws to prevent. If you can overturn the laws with reference to alien land laws you can overturn them in reference to the corporate laws.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman answer me——

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman from Texas wants to make a speech on foreign immigration I am perfectly willing that he should do so, and he has the right to do so if he gets the consent of the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. MANN. It is quite supposable that in sending abroad from this country Christian missionaries to different parts of the world the question might arise, as it has arisen in the past, whether these missionaries should receive the right of protection in possibly a Province or State of some great nation. It might readily happen that the particular Province had a law against Christian missionaries, and that in order to protect their rights this Nation and the foreign country should have a war. Does the gentleman think that at the end of the war we would have a right to make a treaty with the foreign government, or that the foreign government would have a right to make a treaty with us which would protect the rights of the American Christian missionaries in this Province which had a law against them, and having a status which gave them the right to have such a law?

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that if we were successful in that war we could enforce our demands upon the foreign government. If we were unsuccessful in the war, they would have the right to enforce it on us whether it was in accordance with existing law or not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman fairly and correctly answers that question. Suppose, then, we should have a war with a foreign power over the right of that country to let its citizens acquire property in the United States and that we were not successful. Suppose that that foreign power were in possession of our Capital with its army, or in possession of our seacoast with its navy. Would we then be powerless; would we be able to make no treaty, being unsuccessful in war, which would secure us peace or the possession of our country?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the supreme court of all courts is the arbitrament of war. Your Government is absolutely destroyed when it is taken possession of by a foreign power.

Mr. MANN. But treaties end wars.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. All wars are ended by treaties. As I understand the gentleman's position, it is that the Government of the United States can not, under the Constitution, make a treaty at all which would end a war, possibly, and which might be necessary to end a war.

Mr. SISSON. If it is not within the grant of power in the Federal Constitution, it can not do it.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am trying to get at. The foreign government could not make a treaty with a State. It is prohibited.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Let us assume for the purpose of argument, though I hope it will never become a fact, that a foreign power be in possession of the Capital.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman should also state that a State may make a treaty with the consent of the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. That is another proposition. A State can not make a treaty of its own volition.

Mr. SISSON. It can not, because that is forbidden.

Mr. MANN. The State might not be willing to make a treaty, in any event. The gentleman contends that in those conditions there is no power by which we can make a treaty which will turn a foreign army out of our country.

Mr. SISSON. I contend that there is no such power in the Federal Government, if the Federal Government is able to maintain itself; but if we are overcome by war, then our Government has been destroyed, anyway.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the Government is not destroyed, although its armies may have been defeated. The Government does not end; it continues.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman, frankly, that in that condition the only remedy would be to submit an amendment to the Constitution to the States for their ratification.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting two speeches, one by Mr. SHERLEY and the other by Judge Miller, to be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for its courtesy to me and for the attention it has paid to my remarks. [Applause.]

The speech of Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, of Kentucky, heretofore referred to in my remarks, is as follows:

"Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there have recently been made in the House and in the Senate several interesting speeches on the extent of the treaty-making power conferred in the Constitution of the United States upon the President and the Senate. In this discussion, however, there has been omitted one rather striking fact that I desire to call to the attention of the committee before proceeding to the larger discussion of the extent of the treaty-making power. There is to-day no law upon the Federal statute books that enables the National Government to punish violations of treaty rights of aliens. I hold it to be a position not to be controverted that to the extent that there is responsibility there ought to be power; and inasmuch as the National Government can and does confer rights upon aliens, it follows that it should have the power to enforce recognition of those rights and to punish any efforts to disregard them. If at any time some citizen of a foreign country resident in America should be injured or his rights violated, the foreign country would look not to the particular State where the injury occurred, but to the National Government for a redress of the wrong. That has been the history in the past and it will be so in the future. When this country was confronted by a claim by Italy, growing out of the disturbances in the State of Louisiana, Italy declined to receive the suggestion of the National Government that that was a matter that should be taken up with the State of Louisiana, and while the National Government did disclaim responsibility it nevertheless made payment in satisfaction of that claim. During the term of President Harrison in a message to Congress attention was called to this absence of Federal law.

"He said:

"It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene, either for the protection of the foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers.

"President Roosevelt has also called attention to the need for this legislation, saying that—

"One of the great embarrassments attending the performance of our international obligations is the fact that the statutes of the United States are entirely inadequate. They fail to give to the National Government sufficiently ample power, through the United States courts and by the use of the Army and Navy, to protect aliens in the rights secured to them under solemn treaties which are the law of the land.

"So far as his message seems to call attention to the need of giving jurisdiction to the Federal courts I am entirely in accord with him. So far as he suggests the need of giving powers to the Army and Navy in the matter I disagree with him, believing that there can be given ample power to the Federal courts to control the situation, and I accordingly introduced in the early part of this session the following bill:

"A bill (H. R. 20540) punishing conspiracy to injure or intimidate any person in the exercise of a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

"Be it enacted, etc., That if two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, they shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"That is an exact copy of section 5508 of the Revised Statutes, except that it changes the word 'citizen' to the word 'person.' It was held by the Supreme Court, in the case of Baldwin against Frank, reported in One hundred and twentieth United States, 678, that the word 'citizen' in that section did not embrace an alien and that an indictment brought under that section which charged certain men with a conspiracy to deprive Chinese aliens, resident in California, of the right of residence there could not be sustained, because the word 'citizen' was used in the narrow sense of citizen of the United States or of the States and not in the broad sense of 'person'; but the court said that, while there was no law covering such an offense, Congress had ample power to provide for the punishment of an offense against rights given by treaty to aliens. Now, it is manifest that this may become at any time a very serious matter. I do not believe that we need to apprehend at present any difficulties, but the fact that there has been much discussion relative to the rights under existing treaties of aliens residing in America and that there have been, in certain parts of the country, pronounced views relative to the matter, make it evident that there may arise at any time a situation where irresponsible men, disregarding the law and the obligations imposed upon us toward aliens residing in America, might commit some act of violence, might do something that would involve this Nation in a very serious controversy with some foreign power. For this Nation, then, to be put in the humiliating position of being held responsible by another power for a wrong done upon an alien residing in America and yet be unable to punish the perpetrators of that wrong would be a matter of grave concern to us all and place America in a pitiful position in the eyes of the world. I am not one of those who believe that the treaty-making power is unlimited, and I shall take occasion later on to state my views relative to that power, but I plant myself upon this firm proposition, that to the extent that we can confer a right upon an alien to that extent the National Government that confers it ought to have the machinery by which it can punish any violation of that right, and I hope that very shortly this Congress will consider the advisability of passing this or similar legislation. The bill is purposely drawn in general terms, so as to leave to the proper department the power to determine what rights can be conferred by treaty. Under it any man indicted would have the right to raise the constitutional question of whether the right that he is alleged to have conspired against is such a right as could be conferred by treaty, and it would thus enable the Supreme Court in any given case to determine how far the treaty power goes and what rights are conferred under any particular treaty, because I do not believe that there is anyone now who will seriously contend that the Federal courts have not the power to declare a treaty unconstitutional, the same as they might declare any law of Congress unconstitutional.

"It is true that one of the most recent writers on the treaty-making powers, a gentleman who has gathered together much useful information and data concerning it, does doubt that power and bases the doubt upon the fact that Judge Chase, in rendering the decision in the case of Ware against Hylton, said that if the court had the power it would not exercise it except in a clear case; and upon that flimsy ground he contends that the court itself has disposed of the idea that it would have such power, forgetful of the fact that that decision was rendered at a time when the Supreme Court had not determined its right to declare any law unconstitutional. And of course it is manifest that in regard to a treaty, as in regard to a law, even more so perhaps, the courts would be very slow to declare unconstitutional such a solemn compact. But that it has the unquestioned power no thinking man, acquainted with the theory of our Government, can long doubt.

"And this brings me properly to a discussion of what rights can be conferred, because while I do not believe that the opinion gentlemen may have as to the extent of the power ought to in any wise influence their judgment relative to the proposition to give the National Government the power to enforce treaty rights, still it is probable that some, dreading the extreme power that is claimed under the treaty-making clause, would hesitate to give to the National Government the power to enforce offenses against such rights, because they think that even though the right may exist it ought not to be exercised.

"In the House but a few days ago a very elaborate speech was made by my friend from Vermont, Mr. Foster, dealing with this whole question I did not have the pleasure of hearing it, but I have read it with great care. It is full of learning, but it proceeds upon a theory of government to which I must give my most emphatic dissent. The gentleman in his remarks stated that he considered that the question of whether the treaty-making power rests in sovereignty or rests in grant is an immaterial question, or, as he puts it, an academic question. To my mind it is a fundamental question. Once admit that the treaty-making power exists not by virtue of the grant in the Constitution, but as an inherent part of the nationality of the United States Government, and you then admit that there is no limitation that can be put upon that power. If it is true the treaty-making power arises from the sovereignty of the nation, and if it be true that this Nation has all powers that any nation can possess, then it must follow absolutely that the treaty-making power extends to every subject without regard to our division of powers among the States and the Nation and among the different departments of the Nation. It follows for this reason, because while the Constitution declares the power, the power is not born of the Constitution, but is born of a right inherent in national sovereignty.

"Now, the fundamental mistake in that argument, as it is in many that proceed upon a similar theory relative to power in the Federal Government not declared in the Constitution, is that the sovereignty of the American people rests in the National Government. The sovereignty of the American people rests neither in the national nor State governments nor in all together. It rests in the people, and only to the extent that they have given to the State and to the National Government a part of that sovereignty do those governments possess it. I can not state the case better than to quote a statement made by Justice Brewer in an address before the Virginia Bar Association, in which he says:

"I fully believe that this Nation as a Nation has all the powers which any nation possesses, but I as fully believe that those powers are vested in the people and that only such as they have enumerated in the Constitution have they granted to the Government

"And again, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the recent case of Hodges against United States, reported in Two hundred and third United States Reports, he says:

"The National Government still remains one of enumerated powers, and the tenth amendment, which reads, 'The powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people,' is not shorn of its vitality.

"In very truth it may be said that upon these two statements hang all the law and the prophets. They represent to my mind the right theory of this Government. The National Government has only the powers delegated to it. Now, it is true that the treaty-making power is delegated in general terms; but it is not the only power delegated in general terms. It says 'that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur,' and it also declares that 'this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.' In regard to treaties the phrase is used 'under authority of the United States,' and some have claimed that the words 'under authority' give greater power than if the Constitution had said, as it does in regard to the laws, 'in pursuance thereof.' But the reason for using the phrase 'under authority' is easy to be ascertained.

"At the time of the adoption of the Constitution there were many treaties in effect. It was desired to validate all of these treaties and give them binding effect so far as they were in accord with the theory of the Government as set forth in the Constitution. If it had simply said 'made under the Constitution' or 'made in pursuance of the Constitution,' it would have excluded treaties already in existence, and therefore there was used the phrase 'under authority.' It was not used in the sense of meaning that once you determine that the President and Senate had acted in making a compact with a foreign nation the question of its validity could not be raised. To assume that was to assume that the great fight in the Constitutional Convention had been waged in vain. They undertook to counterbalance the great States with the little ones. All the States were given equal representation in the Senate. They were given this as a safeguard against the fear that the great States would soon swallow them up. But as counteracting that there was given to the House of Representatives, which has its representation based not upon the State but upon population, the exclusive right to originate revenue bills, and it was further declared that no appropriation of money shall be made except by authority of Congress. Now, if the treaty-making power was given supreme power, it, in its power, could assert both of these prerogatives, and then we would have the Executive and simply two-thirds of the Senate (who might represent a minority of the people, because even to-day there can be found two-thirds which represent much less than a majority of the people) able to enter into treaties with other nations, by which this vital right given to the House of Representatives to hold the purse strings of the Nation would be abrogated and done away with.

"Most students of the Constitution now agree that the treaty-making power is limited by this right in the House of Representatives, though some insist that when a treaty requires an appropriation of money Congress is morally bound to make the appropriation, but this House has ever maintained the right to freely decide for itself whether the appropriation should be made, and one has but to read the elaborate reports of the House Judiciary Committee, written by that great constitutional lawyer, Randolph Tucker (H. Repts. Nos 2680-2721) to have all doubts removed. And it is also generally conceded that what is especially prohibited by the Constitution can not be done under the treaty-making power. It is manifest that no title of nobility could thus be conferred. It may also be considered as settled that where the right to do a given thing is given to Congress—as to coin money, regulate the militia, establish bankrupt laws—Congress alone can act, and the treaty-making power can not touch such subjects. But while these limitations are admitted by all save a few extremists, it is now being urged that the tenth amendment is in no sense a limitation upon the treaty-making power. The basis for this position I am unable to find. As said by Mr. Tucker, 'The instant it is admitted that the power has limitations, even as to what is rightfully subject to it, the question at issue is narrowed to determining all these limits on principles of justice and of fair interpretation of the Constitution.'

"There is no reason that is good in logic that I know of that justifies you in taking part of the Constitution as superior and above the rest of the Constitution.

"The very fact that the tenth amendment was adopted after the treaty-making power was conferred would indicate that it was intended that that power, along with all national powers, was to be exercised subject to the reservation stated in the tenth amendment. When this amendment was proposed the friends of the Constitution declared that it stated nothing that was not already the law, but those who were fearful of the power that was being given to the National Government said: 'If that is true, it could do no harm, and we insist on an affirmative declaration; and inasmuch as you have got in the Constitution as already drawn many affirmative declarations of the rights of the people, we insist on this additional one; we insist that except to the extent power is expressly given it is reserved to the States and people, respectively.'

"Now, the treaty-making power is unquestionably a very extensive one. It is unquestionably true that the very most pronounced evil in connection with the Confederacy as it existed, aside from its inability to tax, so necessary an attribute of a virile government, was its inability to enforce the treaties then made and existing with foreign nations. It is true that there was constant complaint on the part of the Federal Government that the States disregarded these treaty obligations, and it is true that some of the States claimed that, while the treaties might be morally binding upon them, they were not legally binding, and claimed the privilege to regard or disregard them, as they saw fit. That proposition was effectually denied when it was put into the Constitution that not only the laws but the treaties should be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitutions or the laws of the States to the contrary notwithstanding. That clause determined that question, and only that question. It determined that a legal treaty—that is, a treaty which is not ultra vires; a treaty made within the power—is the supreme law of the land. Nobody can dispute that. Nobody now claims that it is not. But it is the supreme law of the land in no other sense than any law made by Congress that is within its constitutional limitations the supreme law of the land. And the best proof of that fact is the fact that Congress can, by enactment, repeal a treaty. If a treaty possessed a power peculiar to itself, if the treaty rose superior to a law and was supreme in any other sense, then it would follow inevitably that, being superior to the lawmaking body, it could not be repealed by the lawmaking body, and only the power warranted in making the treaty would be warranted in annulling it. And yet the Supreme Court decided, in the Chinese-exclusion cases, that the acts passed by Congress, in so far as they were in conflict with the treaty then in existence with China, abrogated that treaty, the rule being that a treaty of later date abrogates a law in conflict with it and a law of later date abrogates the treaty.

"Now, if the treaty has only the power and none other than the law, it becomes important to determine, as we have determined many questions relating to the power of legislation in Congress, what are the limitations upon it? This is not an easy task. It is easy in general terms to recite limitations, but it is exceedingly difficult to determine the exact line and say, 'Thus far shalt thou go and no further.' It is true that there has never been a treaty declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, although there have been very many reviewed by that court, and it is true that some of the decisions of the Supreme Court as to one subject matter would seem in their logic to carry the conclusion that the clause relative to the reserved rights of the States did not apply; because they have held that it is within the power of the treaty-making power to remove by treaty the alienage of a foreigner, so as to enable him to inhert and transmit real estate. I should have said, as an original proposition, that that was a matter that remained within the States. I should have said, as Mr. Bayard when Secretary of State said, that if the question was to arise anew, he doubted very much whether the Supreme Court would hold as it has held; but I am faced with the fact, I recognize that they have decided; and in Chirac against Chirac, and in many other decisions by that court, they have held that a treaty which conferred upon an alien the right to inherit and dispose of real estate overrode any State law or constitution. I realize that in the first great case of Ware against Hylton, the Supreme Court held that where the State of Virginia had passed acts escheating the property of aliens who were British subjects, and had also undertaken to put impediments in the way of their right to recover debts, that the treaty overrode those acts of the legislature and the constitution of the State of Virginia; but I am unwilling to concede any more in that line than needs to be conceded. The proposition that is involved in the present case, growing out of the controversy between Japan and California, is that the treaty-making power is not only able to remove alienage so far as it relates to residence, and so far as it relates to inheritance and transmission of property, but that it can go to the extent of conferring upon an alien every right enjoyed by a citizen of the United States or of any particular State. That I deny. It is manifest that no treaty could undertake to confer upon an alien the right to hold office within a State. It is manifest that no treaty could confer upon an alien the right to the suffrage within a State; because, gentlemen, the treaty-making clause must always be held subject to the general purpose and scope of our Government, State and National. It is unthinkable that the makers of the Constitution, who were so careful to guard the powers of every particular department, to offer check against check and counterbalance against counterbalance, were yet so impressed with the necessity of having facility of contract with foreign nations that they were willing to give to one man and two-thirds of the Senate present—not even two-thirds of all elected—the power to make a law that could override all State enactments and rule. The National Government could, if it saw fit, as it did see fit in the Chinese treaty, give to the citizens of a foreign country the right to education in the public schools of the National Government, because that is a matter that rests with the Nation.

"The burden is upon the Nation in maintaining these schools, and it might be proper that the Nation should impose the additional burden of education of aliens. But how can it be said, where the obligation is one that belongs to the State primarily, that is subject to the State's will, so subject that the State could to-morrow, if it saw fit, do away with its public-school system, make what appropriation it saw fit, or none at all, that the National Government could confer upon an alien such right? Once you concede that right, I see no reason in a logical way why you should not concede any other particular right that may be desired in regard to the internal affairs of a State.

"Now, I desire to draw the attention of the committee to another argument, and I do it with a great deal of hesitancy and some reluctance. What I am about to say may seem foolish, and I confess it is novel. I am not satisfied in my own mind, but I am unable to detect the flaw in the logic if it be there. The Constitution provides that the President, with the consent of the Senate, may make treaties and also provides that 'no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation.' Now, if this was all, it would be manifest that whatever agreement might be had with other nations would have to be had by virtue of a treaty made by the National Government. But this is not all. The prohibition upon the States to make treaties is contained in the beginning of section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, and in the last division of that section it is declared that 'no State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * * enter into an agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power.' Of course it is clear that the negative form of this declaration admits the affirmative, and a State can with the consent of Congress enter into an agreement with another State or with a foreign power. But yesterday this House passed a bill giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between two of the States. Now, if an agreement can be made between a State and a foreign power, it follows that such an agreement must be one not included within the scope of a treaty, because a State is, as we have seen, prohibited from making any treaty.

"That of itself is a further indication that the treaty-making power does not embrace all contracts of every kind which can be thought of between the people of one country and the people of another. What seems to my mind to have been the view of the makers of the Constitution was that the treaty power should relate to those subjects naturally belonging to treaties; should relate to those subjects that pertain to the country as a whole. It was proper—aye, it was necessary—that one voice should speak as to its contracts with other nations when it spoke on behalf of all the people, and it was further manifest that when that voice spoke within its domain the voice of every State must be silent, that no discordant note might be heard to limit or deny the solemn compact of the General Government. But it is evident that there are many things that may pertain peculiarly to one locality, to one section of the country, and to its relationship to foreign nations that do not pertain to the balance of the country and should not be embraced within a treaty. We have States adjoining Canada, we have States adjoining Mexico, and it might be proper—and I do not know but what it has been done; I was unable to find any case—for one of those States, by consent of Congress, to enter into an agreement with a foreign nation relative to such matter local to it. I even consider that this very subject matter that has given rise to this discussion is a case that would more properly fall into an agreement between a State and a foreign power than it would under the treaty-making power. It might well be that one State would be willing to concede to the citizens of a foreign country the right of education within the schools of that State in consideration of the same right, for instance, being given to the citizens of that State in the country with which the agreement is made, but that the National Government should have the power to confer upon a foreigner a right which imposes an obligation not upon the Nation but upon an individual State, seems to me utterly illogical. There is to my mind a distinction in an agreement removing a disability from one creating an affirmative right. The Supreme Court has said, and therefore I accept it, that the treaty-making power can confer the right, or, to put it more accurately, that it can remove the disability of alienage so that the foreigner may inherit what he would inherit if it were not for his alien birth. That is simply the removal of a disability and confers no burden upon the State; it simply declares an equity, does away with the old harsh view that the outsider, the barbarian, as the Greeks called all that lived outside of their borders, should have no right of property within a state. Modern international law does not recognize such treatment. It says foreigners should be treated in their rights of property as if they did not have the disability of alienage. To hold, however, that our treaty-making power goes to the extent of giving an affirmative right that imposes an obligation not upon the United States, but upon a particular State—that requires the taxation not of all the people—seems, to my mind, to carry it very much too far. This I do know, that if that be the extent of the treaty-making power, the sooner the people of the United States demand of their representatives in the other branch of Congress a strict and careful limitation of the contracts that are entered into with foreign nations the better. I hold very much to the theory that the less of contact between nations and the more of contact between people the better. I believe that a treaty does not always help, but is very apt to hamper, the friendly relations between nations. Certainly if the construction that is being put by the administration upon this particular treaty be the true one, and I shall not discuss that question, though it seems to me to be open to much question, then it follows that a right that was not considered by the parties at the time it was given, at least not considered to the extent of having an express declaration about it, is liable to be made the cause of disturbing relations that have existed harmoniously for more than half a century between the two countries. Such a result flowing from ill-considered treaties is to be greatly deplored, and the people of America should demand of the treaty-making power the most careful scrutiny of any treaty entered into.

"Mr. Chairman, an examination of the decisions and the text writers on this subject will, I believe, confirm these views of mine. It so happens that the debates at the time of the adoption of the Constitution are singularly silent in regard to the matter, but when the Constitution came before the various State conventions for adoption there occurred considerable debate, particularly in Virginia. Patrick Henry, opposed to the Constitution, believing sincerely that it was robbing the States of all their rights and depriving the people of liberty, seized upon every possible thing as an argument against ratifying the Constitution. Among other things, he took hold of the treaty-making power. He made then the very claim that is made by the advocates of an unlimited power now. He declared that the treaty-making power was sufficient to swallow up all the rights of the States and of the National Government; that all they needed to do was to enter into some agreement with a foreign country, and what they could not do by ordinary act of legislation they then became empowered to do. He was answered by Madison, Randolph, Nicholas, and several others of the members of the convention, and in answering him they declared that such reasoning was not warranted; that the treaty-making power was limited, must be considered as being subject to the express limitations in the Constitution, and further limited by the nature and character of our dual form of government. The gentleman from Vermont, Mr. Foster, quoted Calhoun as authority for his position. Some seem to think that because Calhoun enumerates certain limitations, therefore all other limitations not enumerated do not apply. This does not follow; because he does, in the enumeration of specific cases, also put as a limitation the nature and the character of our Government, and the Supreme Court, when quoting Calhoun in the case of Goeffroy v. Riggs (133 U. S., 258), a case growing out of the treaty made with France, where the court again confirmed the power of a treaty to give an alien the right to inherit and transmit property, said that the treaty-making power was not only limited by these express provisions, but limited 'by the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States.' If it be limited by the character of the government of the States, what conclusion can you draw other than that the reserved powers of the States are a limitation upon the treaty-making power? For if it does not mean that, it means nothing.

"I might continue to cite cases and writers, and I had originally intended so to do, but within a few days a gentleman of my city, a distinguished lawyer, the judge of our chancery court, and a professor in our law school, has delivered an elaborate lecture upon this subject. He has summarized so well all of the opinions of the writers, from the adoption of the Constitution down, that for me to undertake it would be either to repeat what he has said or to poorly do what has been superbly done. So I shall content myself with filing as a part of my remarks, with the permission of the committee, this elaborate lecture upon that question, and I trust the House will read it most carefully. I have spoken without manuscript, save a few notes, and of necessity have not therefore been always accurate or concise, but there will be found the exact quotations from the men who made the Constitution and from the great writers and judges who have construed it ever since. In conclusion, may I be pardoned for saying that it seems to me that in this day, when we are told that if the exigencies of the case demand it we must either give to the National Government more power or the National Government must in some way take it to itself, the House should view with particular care the claim that is being made that this power extends over all others. I utterly abhor the man who is so narrow, whose love of his State is so petty, that he can not rise to a realization of the obligations and duties imposed upon all of us as members of the Nation, but I abhor in even greater degree the man who, out of pressure of the immediate moment, out of the exigencies of the case, is willing to twist and pervert the fundamental law of the land in order to have his way and in order to give the National Government unwarranted power. [Applause.] I believe more and more each day that the salvation of America and of America's people lies in getting back to the old doctrine of self-dependence and independence [applause], of teaching the people that not by statute can they be made upright, but out of themselves must come the grace that is to reform and redeem. I believe we must have the people check the constant tendency to put off somewhere else the doing of an obligation that rests at home. It has been my fortune in this House to frequently oppose the power of the National Government. Sometimes it may have seemed that in doing so I would wish to take away from it all of its real strength, but this is in no sense true. If I had been a member of a State legislature I should most likely have been just as pronounced in my opposition to much of the legislation there. I believe that the States should only do those things that the individual can not do, and that the Nation should only do those things that the State and the individual can not do, and I always approach every proposition of legislation with a feeling of hostility. The burden is also on the man proposing legislation when he asks me to support it.

"I think we are a law-ridden Government. We have so much law that we have ceased to obey any law. Why, it has gotten to the point where our very notices give an indication of our disregard of the law. We publish not only that a thing is prohibited, but in order to make somebody really believe that we mean it we say that such and such a thing is positively prohibited, as if there could be degrees of prohibition in a law-abiding community. And it all grows out of the fact that we pass laws that result in bringing about a condition that, being obeyed, would not be livable under. It is one of the great eternal truths of life that the remote results of legislation are always greater, more far-reaching in their effect upon people, than the immediate results. We pass some act for a particular purpose, and after we have passed it for that purpose we awake to find that the effect of it is being felt in a hundred other directions that were never contemplated, and we are forced either to disregard the law or to repeal it, and then the inertia of government in regard to the repealing of laws makes us disregard them, and we become a nation of lawbreakers.

"Therefore I believe that one performs no higher duty than when he insists on the strict construction of powers; not with the idea of detracting from the vigor of the Nation, but because he believes, as said by Justice Brewer, that this Nation as a Nation has all the powers that any people have, but that those powers rest with the people, and only to the extent that they have delegated them do they rest in the National Government, and that we have made provision for the extension of those powers; and because it would be better to wait until that extension was legally given and suffer the particular evil that exists than to disregard the highest law of the land.

"Gentlemen, if you permit the disregard of your Constitution, how, in the name of common sense, can you expect the people to regard the law supposedly made under the Constitution?" [Loud applause.]

APPENDIX.

In accordance with the permission granted me by the committee, I append the lecture delivered by Judge Shackleford Miller, of Louisville, Ky., before the Jefferson School of Law:

The recent disturbance in California, brought about by the action of the school authorities of San Francisco in closing the doors of the public schools of that city against Japanese students residing there, naturally provokes a discussion of the treaty-making power under the Constitution of the United States. The Japanese claim the right to attend the San Francisco public schools under the treaty of 1894 between Japan and the United States, which provides as follows:

"The citizens or subjects of either of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons or property. In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel, to the possession of goods and effects of any kind, to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise and the disposal of property of any kind and in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in territories of the other the same privileges, liberties and rights, and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation."

It will no doubt readily be conceded that the right of the Japanese students to attend the public schools must be founded upon this treaty right of residence or it does not exist. There is no other right or privilege mentioned in the treaty which could even be remotely claimed to embrace the right of attending the public schools. It would seem, however, that a fair construction of the treaty would scarcely extend the privilege of the public schools of a State to unnaturalized foreigners. If the Federal Government had so intended, it is but reasonable to assume that the treaty would have so provided in express terms. It was careful to cover the rights of entry, travel, residence, the succession of personality, and the disposition of property of all kinds, but it nowhere appears that school privileges were ever considered.

Under the present treaty, therefore, it would seem reasonably clear that the Japanese residents of California have no right to have themselves and their children educated at the public schools and at the public expense.

But the larger question arises: Can the President and Senate constitutionally make a treaty with Japan that would confer this right upon the Japanese residents of California?

The answer to this question turns upon the extent of the treaty-making power granted to the Federal Government under the Federal Constitution.

This power is found in the following provision:

"He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senate present concur." (Const., Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2.)

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all the treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." (Ib., Art. VI, cl. 2.)

It may be interesting to consider briefly the origin of the clause and how it has been viewed in the light of American history.

NOT DISCUSSED IN CONVENTION.

Strange though it may now appear, the question of the extent of the treaty-making power was not discussed at all in the Federal Convention of 1787. The right to enter into "treaties and alliances," under some slight restrictions upon treaties relating to commerce, was given to the Congress under the Articles of Confederation (art. 9). The clause relating to the subject of treaties originated in the "committee of detail" and in the later stages of the convention. Prior to that time the subject had not come up for action, but had only been referred to incidentally in the consideration and discussion of other subjects. It first formally appeared as the first clause of article 9 in the committee's report of August 6, 1787, wherein "the power to make treaties" was lodged in the Senate alone. (5 Elliott's Debates, 379.) After a short consideration on August 23 the clause was referred back to the "committee of detail"; but as that committee made no further report, the clause went to the "committee on unfinished portions," which reported it on September 4 substantially as we now have it, by transferring the power to the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

At no time, however, did the convention discuss the scope or extent of the power; it merely considered the question as to where the power should be lodged—who should exercise it. The same is true as to the "Federalist," written in support of the proposed constitution while it was before the State convention for ratification. The authors of that able work confined their discussion of the subject of the treaty-making power not to its extent, but to an effort tending to show that it had been properly lodged in the President and Senate. (Nos. 64 and 75.)

But when the Constitution came on for ratification by the State conventions it was to be expected that its opponents would carefully scan it with the view of determining, if possible, precisely what powers the several provisions carried and what limitations they imposed.

The scope and extent of the provisions of the Constitution were more elaborately discussed in the Virginia ratifying convention of 1788 than in any of the other similar conventions.

In the Virginia ratification of 1788 it was strongly contended by Patrick Henry, William Grayson, George Mason, and the other leading opponents of the Constitution that the treaty-making power was unlimited and therefore unwise and inconsistent with the proclaimed theory of its friends that the proposed Federal Government was one of delegated powers, specifically defined or necessarily implied. In the course of the debate Mr. Henry said:

"We are so used to speak of enormity of powers that we are familiar with it. To me this power appears still destructive, for they can make any treaty.

"If Congress forbears to exercise it, you may thank them, but they may exercise it if they please and as they please. They have a right from the paramount power given them to do so."

It fell to the lot of Madison, Gov. Randolph, and George Nicholas to meet this argument, and in doing so Nicholas said:

NOT REPUGNANT TO CONSTITUTION.

"The worthy Member says that they can make a treaty relinquishing any rights and inflicting punishments, because all the treaties are declared paramount to the constitutions and laws of the States. An attentive consideration of this will show the committee that they can do no such thing. The provision of the sixth article is that this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land. They can by this make no treaty which shall be repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution or inconsistent with the delegated powers. The treaties they make must be made under the authority of the United States to be within their province. It is sufficiently secured because it only declares that in pursuance of the power given they shall be the supreme law of the land, notwithstanding anything in the constitution or laws of the particular States." (3 Elliott's Debates, 507.)

In closing the debate Mr. Madison said:

"I am persuaded that when this power comes to be thoroughly and candidly viewed it will be found right and proper. As to its extent, perhaps it will be satisfactory to the committee that the power is precisely in the new Constitution as it is in the Confederation. In the existing confederacy Congress is authorized indefinitely to make treaties. Many of the States have recognized the treaties of Congress to be the supreme law of the land. Acts have passed within a year declaring this to be the case. I have seen many of them. Does it follow because the power is given to Congress that it is absolute and unlimited? I do not conceive that power is given to the President and Senate to dismember the empire or to alienate any great essential right. I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation. One objection against the amendment proposed is this: That by implication it would give power to the legislative authority to dismember the empire—a power that ought not to be given but by the necessity that would force assent from every man. I think it rests on the safest foundations as it is. The object of treaties is the regulation of intercourse with foreign nations and is external. I do not think it possible to enumerate all the cases in which such external regulations would be necessary. Would it be right to define all the cases in which Congress could exercise this authority? The definition might and probably would be defective. They might be restrained by such a definition from exercising the authority where it could be essential to the interest and safety of the community. It is most safe therefore to leave it to be exercised as contingencies may arise." (3 Elliott's Debates, 514.)

The views of Madison prevailed in the Virginia convention, as they have generally prevailed upon constitutional questions in the country at large. (Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, sec. 34.)

FIRST IMPORTANT DISCUSSION.

The Constitution went into operation in 1789. The first important discussion of the treaty-making power arose in connection with Jay's treaty concluded with Great Britain on November 19, 1794. It was approved by the Senate on August 18, 1795; proclaimed by the President on February 29, 1796, and this proclamation was communicated to both Houses of Congress on March 1, 1796. Money was necessary to carry its provisions into effect, and as money could be only appropriated by both Houses of Congress, differences of opinion at once arose as to the extent of the treaty-making power and the obligation it imposed upon the House of Representatives:

"On the one side it was maintained that the power of the President and Senate as to treaties was absolute, and that the House of Representatives was bound, under the Constitution, to make the appropriations necessary to carry the treaty into effect. On the other side it was contended that, under the Constitution, the consent of the House was requisite to pass appropriations to carry the treaty into effect, and that this was as much known to the other contracting party as was the consent of the Senate to the preliminary adoption of the treaty." (Wharton's Int. Law Dig., 17.)

On March 21, 1796, Jefferson wrote to Monroe, then in France, as follows:

"The British treaty has been formally at length laid before Congress. All America is a tiptoe to see what the House of Representatives will decide on it.

"We conceive the constitutional doctrine to be that, though the President and Senate have the general power of making treaties, yet wherever they include in a treaty matters confided by the Constitution to the three branches of legislature, an act of legislation will be requisite to confirm these articles, and that the House of Representatives, as one branch of the Legislature, are perfectly free to pass the act or to refuse it, governing themselves by their own judgment whether it is for the good of their constituents to let the treaty go into effect or not. On the precedent now to be set will depend the future construction of our Constitution, and whether the powers of legislation shall be transferred from the President, Senate, and House of Representatives to the President, Senate, and Plaminigo, or any other Indian, Algerine, or other chief." (4 Jefferson's Works, 134.)

Henry Adams, a grandson of that stout old Federalist, John Quincy Adams, has written a life of Albert Gallatin, who was then a Member of Congress from Pennsylvania. In describing the debate in the House of Representatives, Henry Adams says:

CHECK ON TREATY-MAKING POWER.

"The debate began on March 7, 1796, and on the 10th Mr. Gallatin spoke attacking the constitutional doctrine of the Federalists and laying down his own. He claimed for the House, not a power to make treaties, but a check upon the treaty-making power when clashing with the special powers expressly vested in Congress by the Constitution; he showed the existence of this check in the British constitution, and he showed its necessity in our own, for if the treaty-making power is not limited by existing laws, or if it repeals the laws that clash with, or if the Legislature is obliged to repeal the laws so clashing, then the legislative power in fact resides in the President and Senate, and they can, by employing an Indian tribe, pass any law under the color of treaty.

"The argument was irresistible; it was never answered; and, indeed, the mere statement is enough to leave only a sense of surprise that the Federalists should have hazarded themselves on such preposterous ground. Some years later, when the purchase of Alaska brought this subject again before the House on the question of appropriating the purchase money stipulated by the treaty, the administration abandoned the old Federalist position; the right of the House to call for papers, to deliberate on the merits of the treaty, even to refuse appropriations if the treaty was inconsistent with the Constitution or with the established policy of the country, was fully conceded. The administration only made the reasonable claim that if, upon just consideration, a treaty was found to be clearly within the constitutional powers of the Government, and consistent with the national policy, then it was the duty of each coordinate branch of the Government to shape its action accordingly. (See the speech of N. P. Banks of June 30, 1868, Cong. Globe, vol. 75, appendix, p. 385; Life of Albert Gallatin, p. 161.)

Gallatin's views prevailed in the House by a vote of 57 against 35.

While Jefferson was Vice President he prepared his now famous Manual of Parliamentary Practice. It has ever since remained the highest authority in this country upon that subject. The work was published in 1800, and contains this note under the head of treaties:

"By the Constitution of the United States this department of legislation is confined to two branches only of the ordinary legislature; the President originating and the Senate having a negative. To what subject this power extends has not been defined in detail by the Constitution, nor are we entirely agreed among ourselves. (1) It is admitted that it must concern the foreign nation, party to the contract, or it would be a mere nullity, res inter allos acta. (2) By the general power to make treaties, the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated. (3) It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way. (4) And also to except those subjects of legislation in which it gave a participation to the House of Representatives. This last exception is denied by some on the ground that it would leave very little matter for the treaty power to work on. The less the better, say others."

REASON FOR RESTRAINT.

"The Constitution thought it wise to restrain the Executive and Senate from entangling and embroiling our affairs with those of Europe. Besides, as the negotiations are carried on by the Executive alone, the subjecting to the ratification of the Representatives such articles as are within their participation is no more inconvenient than to the Senate But the ground of this exemption is denied as unfounded. For example, e. g., the treaty of commerce with France, and it will be found that out of 31 articles there are not more than small portions of two or three of them which would not still remain as subjects of treaties untouched by these exceptions." (Jefferson's Works, IX, 80.)

The first formal treatise upon the Constitution of the United States was published by Judge St George Tucker in 1803 as an appendix to his edition of Blackstone. In that work Judge Tucker says:

"Treaties, as defined by Puffendorf, are certain agreements made by sovereigns between one another, of great use both in war and peace. Of these there are two kinds: The one such as reenforce the observance of what by the law of nature we were before obliged to, as the mutual exercise of civility and humanity, or the prevention of injuries on either side; the second, such as add some new engagement to the duties of natural law, or at least determine what was before too general and indefinite in the same, to something particular and precise. Of those which add some new engagements to those duties which natural law imposes upon all nations, the most usual relate to, or in their operation may affect, the sovereignty of the state, the unity of its parts, its territory or other property, its commerce with foreign nations, and vice versa; the mutual privileges and immunities of the citizens or subjects of the contracting powers, or the mutual aid of the contracting nations, in the case of an attack or hostility from any other quarter. To all these objects, if there be nothing in the fundamental laws of the state which contradicts it, the power of making treaties extends and is vested in the conductors of states, according to the opinion of Vattel.

"In our Constitution there is no restriction as to the subjects of treaties, unless perhaps the guaranty of a republican form of government and protection from invasion, contained in the fourth article, may be construed to impose such a restriction in behalf of the several States against the dismemberment of the Federal Republic. But whether this restriction may extend to prevent the alienation, by cession, of the western territory, not being a part of any State, may be somewhat more doubtful." (1 Tucker's Blackstone; appendix, 332.)

During the years 1790 and 1791 Mr. Justice Wilson, of the United States Supreme Court, delivered a course of lectures on law before the College of Philadelphia. These lectures were published in 1804, after his death, by his son. Part II of that work relates to the constitutions of the United States and of Pennsylvania, and chapter 2 thereof treats of the executive department. Justice Wilson dismisses the treaty-making power with the following scant consideration:

MUST BE KEPT DISTINCT.

"The President has power to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint ambassadors, judges of the Supreme Court, and, in general, all the other officers of the United States. On this subject there is a very striking and important difference between the Constitution of the United States and that of Pennsylvania. By the latter the first executive magistrate possesses, uncontrolled by either branch of the legislature, the power of appointing all officers whose appointments are not, in the constitution itself, otherwise provided for. On a former occasion I noticed a maxim which is of much consequence in the science of government—that the legislative and executive powers be preserved distinct and unmingled in their exercise. This maxim I then considered in a variety of views, and in each found it to be both true and useful. I am very free to confess that with regard to this point the proper principle of government is, in my opinion, observed by the constitution of Pennsylvania much more correctly than it is by the Constitution of the United States. In justice, however, to the latter, it might be remarked that, though the appointment of officers is to be the concurrent act of the President and Senate, yet an indispensable prerequisite—the nomination of them—is vested exclusively in the President.

"The observations which I have delivered concerning the appointment of officers apply likewise to treaties, the making of which is another power that the President has with the advice and consent of the Senate." (2 Wilson's Works, 191.)

It seems strange that this total failure to discuss either the nature or extent of the treaty-making power in a formal set of lectures which covered the whole field of the Constitution, could be the omission of one who was a distinguished member of the Federal Convention of 1787, and a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1796, when that court decided the important case of Ware v. Hylton, reported in Third Dallas. In fact, Justice Wilson delivered a short concurring opinion in that case. Nevertheless, he ignores a great constitutional question that had been ably debated in Congress when Jay's treaty was under fire, and in the Supreme Court by John Marshall, and before Justice Wilson himself.

In 1821 Mr. Wert, Attorney General, gave an official opinion, in which he said:

"The people seem to have contemplated the National Government as the sole organ of intercourse with foreign nations. It ought to be armed with power to satisfy the fulfillment of all moral obligations, perfect and imperfect, which the law of nations devolves upon us as a nation. In this respect our system seems to be crippled and imperfect." (1 Opins. Attys. Genl., 392.)

In 1825 William Rawle, a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, published A View of the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Rawle had been United States district attorney for Pennsylvania under Washington, and had been offered by him the Attorney Generalship of the United States. He was a firm supporter of the administration of John Adams. In discussing the treaty-making power, Mr. Rawle says:

MUST BE SOUGHT FOR IN PRINCIPLE.

"The most general terms are used in the Constitution. The powers of Congress in respect to making laws, we shall find, are laid under several restrictions. There are none in respect to treaties. * * * To define them in the Constitution would have been impossible, and therefore a general term could alone be made use of, which is, however, to be scrupulously confined to its legitimate interpretation. Whatever is wanting in an authority expressed must be sought for in principle, and to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported we must carefully apply to it the principles of the Constitution, from which alone the power proceeds. * * *

"There is a variance in the words descriptive of laws and those of treaties. In the former it is said those which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution, but treaties are described as having been made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States.

"The explanation is that at the time of adopting the Constitution certain treaties existed, which had been made by Congress under the Confederation, the continuing obligations of which it was proper to declare. The words 'under the authority of the United States' were considered as extending equally to those previously made and to those which should subsequently be effected. But although the former could not be considered as made pursuant to a constitution which was not then in existence, the latter would not be 'under the authority of the United States' unless they are conformable to its Constitution" (p. 66).

In 1833 Judge Story published his "Commentaries upon the Constitution of the United States," in which he says:

"The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general, and it, of course, embraces all sorts of treaties, for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for alliances or success, for indemnity for injuries or payment of debts, for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purposes which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may dictate in their intercourse with each other. But though the power is thus general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination of it and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constitutional powers would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill—the will of the people. Whether there are any other restrictions necessarily growing out of the structure of the Government will remain to be considered whenever the exigency shall arise." (Sec. 1508.)

Judge William Alexander Duer, of New York, delivered a course of lectures on the constitutional jurisprudence of the United States at Columbia College for many years. In 1833 he published the substance of his lectures under the title of "Outlines of Lectures," etc.; and in 1843 he published a revised and enlarged work on the same subject entitled "Lectures on the Constitutional Jurisprudence of the United States." In this last and most complete statement of his views Judge Duer said:

CAN NOT DESTROY OTHER POWERS.

"More general and extensive terms, also, are used in vesting the power with respect to treaties than in conferring that relative to laws; and while the latter is laid under several restrictions, there are none imposed on the exercise of the former, notwithstanding it is committed to the President and Senate, in exclusion of the House of Representatives, and is executed through the instrumentality of agents delegated for that purpose. And although the President and Senate are thus invested with this high and exclusive control over all those subjects of negotiation with foreign powers which in their consequences may affect important domestic interests, yet it would have been impossible to have defined a power of this nature, and, therefore, general terms only were used. These general expressions, however, ought strictly to be confined to their legitimate signification; and in order to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported in any given case, those principles of the Constitution from which the power proceeds should carefully be applied to it. The power must, indeed, be construed in subordination to the Constitution; and, however in its operation it may qualify, it can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions, nor can it ever be so interpreted as to destroy other powers granted by that instrument." (2d ed., 228.)

Probably the best attempt at formulating a general rule for the exercise of the treaty-making power is that framed by Mr. Calhoun, in 1851, in his "Discourse on the Constitution and Government of the United States." It reads as follows:

"Although the treaty-making power is exclusively vested, and without enumeration or specification, in the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless subject to several important limitations. It is, in the first place, strictly limited to questions inter alios; that is, to questions between us and foreign powers which require negotiation to adjust them. All such clearly appertain to it. But to extend it beyond these, be the pretext what it may, would be to extend it beyond its allotted sphere, and thus a palpable violation of the Constitution. It is, in the next place, limited by all the provisions of the Constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the Government or any of its departments, of which description there are many. It is also limited by such provisions of the Constitution as direct certain acts to be done in a particular way, and which prohibit the contrary, of which a striking example is to be found in that which declares that 'no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations to be made by law.' This not only imposes an important restriction on the power, but gives to Congress as the lawmaking power, and to the House of Representatives as a portion of Congress, the right to withhold appropriations; and thereby, one important control over the treaty-making power, whenever money is required to carry a treaty into effect, which is usually the case, especially in reference to those of much importance.

MORE IMPORTANT LIMITATION.

There still remains another and more important limitation, but of a more general and indefinite character. It can enter into no stipulation calculated to change the character of the Government, or to do that which can only be done by the Constitution-making power, or which is inconsistent with the nature and structure of the Government or the objects for which it was formed. Among which it seems to be settled that it can not change or alter the boundary of a State or cede any portion of its territory without its consent. Within these limits all questions which may arise between us and other powers, be the subject matter what it may, fall within the limits of the treaty-making power and may be adjusted by it. (Calhoun's Works, I, 203.)

This definition was used in Hauenstein v. Lynham (100 U. S., 483) and in People v. Gerke (5 Cal., 381).

Perhaps the ablest and most accurate law writer of the past 50 years was Judge Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan. He always undertook to state the law as it had been settled by the decisions of the courts. Writing in 1880, he reached this conclusion:

"The President has power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators concur. The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power, but it is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authority." (Constitutional Law, 3d ed., p. 117.)

A more extended discussion of this subject is found in the late work of John Randolph Tucker on "The Constitution of the United States," published in 1899. After stating the question to be "Whether the exclusive power of treaty making, vested in the President and Senate, is unlimited in its operation upon all the objects for which a treaty may provide," he gives the respective contentions with respect to the power; quotes Vattel's saying that "it is from the fundamental laws of each State that we must learn where resides the authority that is capable of contracting with validity in the name of a State," and concludes as follows:

"A treaty, therefore, can not take away essential liberties secured by the Constitution to the people. A treaty can not by the United States do what their Constitution forbids them to do. We suggest a further limitation: A treaty can not compel any department of the Government to do what the Constitution submits to its exclusive and absolute will. On these questions the true canon of construction, that the treaty-making power in its seeming absoluteness and unconditional extent, is confronted with equally absolute and unconditional authority vested in the judiciary." (Vol. 2, p. 725.)

That a treaty can not invade the constitutional prerogatives of the legislature is well illustrated by Dr. Ernest Meier, a German author, who, according to Mr. Wharton, has given to the subject a degree of elaborate and extended exposition which it has received from no writer in our own tongue.

Dr. Meier was a professor of jurisprudence in the University of Halle, and gave his conclusions as follows:

POWER NOT ABSOLUTE.

"Congress has, under the Constitution, the right to lay taxes and imposts as well as to regulate foreign trade; but the President and the Senate, if the treaty-making power be regarded as absolute, would be able to evade this limitation by adopting treaties which would compel Congress to destroy its whole tariff system. According to the Constitution Congress has the right to determine questions of naturalization, of patents, and of copyright. But, according to the view here contested, the President and Senate, by a treaty could on these important questions utterly destroy the legislative capacity of the House of Representatives. The Constitution gives Congress the right of declaring war. This right would be illusory if the President and Senate could by a treaty launch the country into a foreign war. The power of borrowing money on the credit of the United States resides in Congress; this power would cease to exist if the President and Senate could by treaty bind the country to the borrowing of foreign funds. By the Constitution 'no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by the law'; but this limitation would cease to exist if by a treaty the United States could be bound to pay money to a foreign power. * * * Congress would cease to be the lawmaking power as is prescribed by the Constitution. The lawmaking power would be the President and the Senate. Such a condition would become the more dangerous from the fact that treaties so adopted, being on this particular hypothesis superior to legislation, would continue in force until superseded by other treaties. Not only, therefore, would a Congress consisting of two Houses be made to give way to an oligarchy of President and Senate, but the decrees of this oligarchy when once made could only be changed by concurrence of President and of senatorial majority of two-thirds." (Ueber den Abschluss von Staats vertragen.)

As a conclusion to this résumé of the views of authors and publicists upon this subject the following review by Prof. von Holst, the well-known German-American historian, is both pertinent and instructive:

CAN NOT BE UNLIMITED.

"As to the extent of the treaty power the Constitution says nothing, but it evidently can not be unlimited. The power exists only under the Constitution, and every treaty stipulation inconsistent with a provision of the constitutional law is ipsi facto null and void. Simple and self-evident as this principle is in theory, yet it may be very difficult under certain circumstances to decide whether or not it has been transgressed in fact. Indeed, the chief difficulty arises from the question of the relation of the treaty power of the President with the concurrence power of the Senate bears to the legislative power of Congress. The question is answered by saying that these powers must be coordinate, for treaties, like laws, are 'sovereign acts,' which differ from laws only in form and in the organs by which the sovereign will expresses itself. It follows from this principle that a law can be repealed by a treaty (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 253) as well as a treaty by a law (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wallace, 616). If a treaty and a law are in opposition, their respective dates must decide whether the one or the other is to be regarded as repealed (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 253, 314; Doe v. Braden, 16 Howard, 635). * * * Neither the principle nor the correctness of these conclusions from it can well be disputed, and they are, at any rate, valid constitutional law. But in spite of this, it must be admitted that the doctrine has its doubtful side both in theory and practice. It must be called at least an anomaly that, by the ex parte action of the President and two-thirds of the Senators present (who may be only a minority of the whole Senate), a law can be repealed the passage of which required the concurrence of the House of Representatives with the Senate and President, or a two-thirds majority of each House of Congress. The repeal of a treaty by the enactment of a law may, however, lead the more easily to serious consequences, because the incompatibility of the law and of the treaty may not be so clearly manifest that the foreign power concerned will immediately take notice of the law. It is in nowise inconceivable that Congress itself might know nothing of what it had done, so that only after a long time would the fact be established by judicial decision that in this direct manner a treaty was overthrown, the repeal of which had not been contemplated by either of the two contracting parties.

"On still another side of this question of the direct relation between the treaty power and the legislative power makes it difficult to fix the limits of the treaty power. It is certain that no authority granted by the Constitution to any of the factors of government can be drawn from it by treaty, for that would be a change of the Constitution, and as such unconstitutional. But Congress may be bound by a treaty not to exercise in a certain way a power belonging to it, although it might exercise it in that way if not bound by the treaty. The freedom of action of the House of Representatives can thus easily be restricted by a treaty to such a degree that the restriction must be admitted to be a violation of the Constitution, even if not strictly of its letter, yet still of its spirit. Thus, for instance, the framers of the Constitution certainly did not wish that duties should be fixed in a way repugnant to the views of the House of Representatives, and yet this might be brought about at any moment by a commercial treaty. Of course, it must not be inferred that, in general, there should be no commercial treaties. But Daniel Webster was certainly right in advising his countrymen to consider carefully before beginning to handle questions of duties in connection with treaties." (Constitutional law of the United States, 202.)

CONFINED BY DECISIONS OF COURTS.

The text of a sound treatise on any subject of law is based upon and confined by the decisions of the courts upon that subject. I have followed this historical treatment of the treaty-making power from the Constitutional Convention of 1787 to the present time, purposely quoting any direct mention of the decisions in order that we might see what effect those decisions had from time to time upon the definitions and descriptions of the power as given by subsequent writers. The result is interesting and peculiar. In 1802 Tucker, the first author, cited no authority except the text of the Constitution; 30 years later Story cited Tucker, Rawle, and Jefferson; while in 1880 Cooley cites Tucker and Story, as herein quoted, in support of his text. The reason for this is plain, since the judicial decisions have been only so many applications of general rule to specific statements of fact. For it is readily seen that while many of the decisions contain broad general statements to the effect that treaties are the supreme law of the land, there is always the accompanying qualification that it must be a constitutional treaty in order to be so considered.

It is clear that there may be an unconstitutional treaty, just as there may be an unconstitutional act of Congress. This point is well illustrated by the treaty negotiated in 1854 at Caracas by the United States minister and the Venezuelan Government, which provided, in its twenty-fifth article, that in case a citizen of either country should accept a commission in the service of an enemy at war with the other country he should be deemed a pirate and so punished. Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, promptly repudiated the treaty, which was satisfactory in other respects, upon the ground that the Constitution provided that Congress should define the crime of piracy and its punishment, and that it could not be made the subject of a treaty. If the treaty had been ratified, there can be do doubt that the courts would have sustained Mr. Marcy's view.

Cooley recognizes the right of the House of Representatives to annul such a treaty in the following express terms:

"An unconstitutional or manifestly unwise treaty, the House of Representatives may possibly refuse to aid; and this, when legislation is needful, would be equivalent to a refusal of the Government, through one of its branches, to carry the treaty into effect. This would be an extreme measure, but it is conceivable that a case might arise in which a resort to it would be justifiable." (Constitutional Law, 3d ed., 175.)

Some of the opinions go further and expressly declare that treaties, like laws, are bound by the provisions of the Constitution. Thus, in 1847, in the License Cases (5 How., 613), Mr. Justice Daniel said:

"By the sixth article and second clause of the Constitution it is thus declared: 'That this Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof and treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land.'

"This provision of the Constitution, it is to be feared, is sometimes applied or expounded without those qualifications which the character of the parties to that instrument and its adaptation to the purpose for which it was created necessarily imply.

IS COINCIDENT WITH RIGHTS OF STATES.

"Every power delegated to the Federal Government must be expounded in coincidence with a perfect right in the States to all they have not delegated; in coincidence, too, with the possession of every power and right necessary for their existence and preservation, for it is impossible to believe that these ever were, in intention or in fact, ceded to the General Government. Laws of the United States, in order to be binding, must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution. Treaties to be valid must be made within the scope of the same powers, for there can be no authority of the United States save what is derived mediately or immediately and regularly and legitimately from the Constitution. A treaty, no more than an ordinary statute, can arbitrarily cede away any one right of a State or of any citizen of a State."

It therefore makes little difference whether the power is restricted "in subordination to the Constitution and can not supersede or interfere with any of its fundamental provisions," is Judge Story puts it; or to "the principles of the Constitution from which alone the power proceeds," as Mr. Rawle says; or we agree with Judge Duer that "those principles of the Constitution from which the power proceeds should carefully be applied to it;" or with Justice Field that the power is limited "by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and that of the States;" for they, in substance, are all equivalent to Cooley's statement of the rule that the power "is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authority."

Since all the authorities agree that the power must, under our form of government, be limited in some way, it necessarily follows that it can and must be limited only by the Constitution which created the power.

So we find the usual limitation in the late case of De Geofroy v. Riggs (133 U. S., 258), decided in 1890. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Field, used this language:

"The treaty power as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself, and that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter, without its consent. But with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country."

TREATY-MAKING POWER.

In the actual exercise of the treaty-making power it has been construed to extend to the acquisition of property belonging to the citizens of each in the territory of the other (U. S. v. Forty-three Gallons of Whisky, 93 U. S., 197); provisions for inheritance by aliens (Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S., 489; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S., 266; Bohaud v. Bize, 105 Fed., 485; People v. Gerke, 5 Cal., 381); the establishment of consular tribunals (In re Ross, 140 U. S., 463); to enable aliens to purchase and hold lands (Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259); to create a judicial system (Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal., 242); the acquisition of territory by the United States (Am. Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet., 511; Philippine cases, 182 U. S., 197; 183 U. S., 181); the settlement of boundaries between States (U. S. v. Texas, 162 U. S., 38; R. I. v. Mass., 12 Pet., 725); the granting and accepting of awards for injuries (Frevall v. Bache, 14 Pet., 97; Bachman v. Lawson, 109 U. S., 660); and the conferring of citizenship on Indians (Cross v. Harrison, 16 How., 164; U. S. v. Rhodes, Fed Cas. 16, 151).

I have not attempted to cite all the decisions in point, but only some of the leading cases that support the statement. It will be noticed that all of these instances are properly within the fair exercise of the power, and neither interferes with a department of the Federal Government nor robs a State—to use Judge Cooley's phrase—of its constitutional authority.

It is hardly necessary to cite authority to show that the Federal Government is one of enumerated powers, and that the States retain control of their domestic and local affairs. But if it be thought necessary, the following language of Mr. Justice Brewer, in the current number of the advance sheets of the United States Supreme Court Reports, may suffice. In referring to the effect of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, Judge Brewer said:

"Notwithstanding the adoption of these three amendments the National Government still remains one of enumerated powers, and the tenth amendment, which reads 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people,' is not shorn of its vitality." (Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S.)

To what extent, then, may a State control its public schools in the admission or exclusion or separation of different races of pupils?

In People v. Gerke (5 Cal., 381), and that class of cases which permit aliens to inherit contrary to the provisions of State laws, it was contended that the treaty, in effect, nullified the State laws upon that subject. But in the Gerke case this objection was answered as follows:

"One of the arguments at the bar against the extent of this power of treaty is that it permits the Federal Government to control the internal policy of the States, and, in the present case, to alter materially the statutes of distribution. * * * I think, however, that no such consequence follows as is insisted. The statutes of distribution are not altered or affected. Alienage is the subject of the treaty. Its disability results from political reasons which arose at an early period of the history of civilization and which the enlightened advancement of modern times and changes in the political and social condition of nations have rendered without force or consequence. The disability to succeed to property is alone removed, the character of the person is made politically to undergo a change, and then the statute of distribution is left to its full effect, unaltered and unimpaired in word or sense."

FOREIGNERS MERELY TAKE THEIR OWN.

Treaties of this kind do not confer any thing or right upon the foreigner; they merely permit foreigners to take that which is their own. But the granting to unnaturalized foreigners the right to attend the public schools of a State, either with or without charge, is something more. Does it, in Judge Cooley's language, "rob the State of its constitutional authority," and is it, in the language of Justice Field, within those restrictions "arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the State"? Are the local public schools of a city, maintained exclusively by local taxation and presumably for the exclusive use of citizens, "properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country"? (Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S., 258.) The answers to these questions all turn upon the nature of our Government and the relation of the State governments to the United States Government under the Constitution.

It may be considered as fairly well settled that the establishment of separate schools for white and for colored children does not violate the constitutional right of either class to the equal privileges and immunities guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, provided equal advantages are provided for each class. (People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y., 438; 45 Am. Rep., 232; Cory v. Carter, 48 Ind., 327; 17 Am. Rep., 738; McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C., 609; 10 L. R. A., 823; State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St., 198; Martin v. Board of Education, 42 W. Va., 514; Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo., 546; 11 L. R. Equality, and not identity, of privileges and rights is what is guaranteed to the citizens. If the right claimed be not guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, but is reserved to the States, it is difficult to see how the Federal Government can constitutionally control it either by treaty or otherwise.

Likewise it has been repeatedly decided that State laws requiring separate coaches for white and for colored passengers on railroad trains within the State violate no privilege or immunity of either class and places no badge of slavery upon the colored passenger.

Cases of the class of Parrott's Chinese case (6 Sawyer, 349)—and there are many of them—are not in point and do not come up to the question. The laws of California prohibited the employment of Chinese by any corporation, and Parrott, the president of a mining company, was indicted for violating the law. Upon habeas corpus he was properly discharged, because he had a perfect right to hire a Chinaman or any other kind of a man. Moreover, the court held that the Chinaman's right to work was a property right protected by the fourteenth amendment, which extends not only to citizens, but to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States. In Parrott's case California attempted to act under an unconstitutional law; in the school cases she is quite within her constitutional rights.

If the control of local schools can not be taken from the States and cities by a law passed by both Houses and approved by the President, because the power to do so is not granted, it would seem that the discussion is at an end, for if the power is wanting it clearly can not be done in any way, much less by the President and the Senate only.

And of this limitation of power all nations must take notice. (Taylor's International Public Law, secs. 158, 361, 364.)

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] may address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to answer extemporaneously a learned speech such as has been delivered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. Much of it requires no answer. With much of it I agree, as, for instance, when he lays down the broad proposition, well recognized by international law, that no Government has a right to interfere with the domestic affairs of another Government. In all of these things we agree, but I wholly disagree with the tenor and spirit of his remarks which are to emphasize the selfishness of nations. Selfishness does not look any more beautiful to me—and I am sure it does not to you—when practiced by a nation than it does when practiced by an individual. The position I take has nothing at all to do with the fact that I am a naturalized citizen, as the gentleman from Mississippi has tried to insinuate by constantly throwing the Constitution of the United States in my face and by calling attention to the fact that I had taken an oath of allegiance to that Constitution.

We are here to discuss constitutional questions from time to time, and the views I hold are shared by an increasing number of the best and noblest of American citizens.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to the gentleman he entirely misconceives my purpose if he thinks when I spoke of the Constitution it was in any way reflecting upon the gentleman, either as a man or a citizen, or upon any man who comes to this country and becomes naturalized and who has all the rights and privileges of anybody else, and who has the same respect for the Constitution and laws that my good friend from Missouri has.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desired to say in that connection, when during the gentleman's speech he impetuously cut me off, that the Constitution of the United States, as we all know, was a compromise, and that that compromise was very vividly illustrated by the defect to which I have called attention, namely, the defect that the National Government has no power to control State legislation affecting the rights of noncitizens or aliens residing in the United States. According to the trend of his remarks, the gentleman from Mississippi seems to have left out of consideration the important fact that in this time and day no nation can afford to be absolutely isolated. The time of isolation has passed, and consequently we must circumscribe our selfishness by considerations for other nations. When we pass a currency bill we always have in mind what the other nations will say and think about it. We do not go ahead independently and without consideration of what the effect of such legislation will be upon the financial markets of the world. We always consider the effect it might have in London, in Paris, or in Berlin. In other words we are no longer absolutely isolated or independent in that respect. We are moved by international considerations, and your revision of the tariff, too, takes account of international industrial conditions. You pay regard to what wages are paid in other countries, what the cost of production is. You do not go ahead according to your own wish and whim in these matters, but you consider the average conditions in the world when you legislate on these great questions. Consequently there is no such thing as absolute isolation or independence. Now, that being the case it seems to me that a nation has the same moral obligation as an individual has. When an individual enters civilized society he has to surrender certain natural and inherent rights. One of those rights was to take his neighbor's property, but he surrendered that in order that his neighbor may enjoy the same rights and privileges which he himself enjoys.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would ask a few minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And as individuals in entering civilized society surrender these natural rights, nations living in a family of nations must surrender certain sovereign rights. In the case of the arbitration treaties proposed by President Taft we asked ourselves the question, Will England and France—one of them a monarchy, strenuously insisting on its prerogatives and on its rights of sovereignty—consent to a sacrifice of sovereignty as will be involved in the sanction of these treaties? They did it for the purpose of a higher unity, for the purpose of preserving international peace; and, Mr. Speaker, when monarchies are willing to make such a sacrifice for peace, it seemed to me and many thinking people that this Republic, too, should have made the concession for a noble cause. But the Senate balked. Our own Senate proved a stumbling block in the way of the ratification of those great treaties, but I predict here and now, my friends, that there will be no Senate in the future that will interpose an objection to treaties of that kind, not if the people have a word to say——

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I only have a limited time.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman think the inconsequential increase of our population from Japan is comparable with the 250,000 who come from southeastern Europe——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the immigration question at this time——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri declines to discuss the question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). Nor do I propose to discuss the Japanese question, because my remarks are made in a general way, irrespective of any controversy we may have with any other nation at the present time. I called attention to the fact that the National Government, as a result of the compromise made when the Constitution was adopted, was impotent with regard to legislation by the several States affecting our international relations, and in order to cover that I have to-day introduced a joint resolution, to which I called the attention of the House, providing for a constitutional amendment, which reads in a few simple words, as follows:

That the Congress shall have exclusive power to legislate on questions affecting the rights and privileges of citizens of other countries residing in the United States and the relations of the United States with other countries.

And in explanation of this resolution I should like to read to the House what I have jotted down here. It is very brief.

Long before the California trouble was even thought of the impotence of our National Government with regard to legislation by independent States affecting the rights and privileges of noncitizens or citizens of other countries or treaty rights of other countries was felt to be a serious defect in our scheme of government.

The controversy with Japan has simply made this defect—a result of the compromise which made the adoption of the Constitution possible—an acute question. If we are really a Nation with a big "N" and not merely a federation of States, the power to legislate on such matters should be reserved to Congress exclusively, and the constitutional amendment which I propose provides for just that and nothing else. One of the most important functions of every Government is to preserve the peace; in fact this is one of the cardinal reasons why Governments are instituted among men. How can our own National Government succeed in this great mission when any State by its own independent action can cause trouble with foreign nations whenever its legislature sees fit to do so? There ought not to be any objection to the proposed amendment on the part of any State. The National Government is obliged to make the cause of any State its own, so that the action of an individual State can involve the whole Nation in war; and in return for this protection it is but fair, it seems, that the National Government should have exclusive power of legislation in matters affecting our international relations. These are the reasons in a nutshell why I have introduced my joint resolution, which, I hope, will become a subject of serious discussion by the press and the people. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order agreed upon, until Tuesday, May 27, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

By Mr. GARDNER: Petition of Samuel C. Barnes and 27 other citizens of Massachusetts, protesting against the creation of a committee on public health; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAYES: Petitions of the J. Pfister Knitting Co., of West Berkeley, Cal., and the Van Arsdale-Harris Lumber Co., favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta, Cal., favoring a fair currency bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of the San Monte Fruit Co., of Watsonville, Cal., and 12 others of the State of California, against the reduction of the duty on sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Thomas R. Weaver and 35 others, of California, against mutual life insurance funds in the income-tax bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOWELL: Petition of J. R. Edghill and others, of Salt Lake City, Utah, against mutual life insurance funds in the income-tax bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of the Tacoma Association of Credit Men, Tacoma, Wash., favoring an immediate reform in the present banking system of the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of the State of Washington, at Colfax, Wash., favoring an appropriation by Congress for the development of the Palouse irrigation and power project; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND: Petition of the Pacific Association of Railway Surgeons, of San Francisco, Cal., favoring a department of public health; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange, Chicago, Ill., favoring the placing of live stock on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 26, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolution, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4234. An act providing certain legislation for the Panama California Exposition to be held in San Diego, Cal., during the year 1915;

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution extending the leave of absence of Mrs. A. E. Grant.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA presented petitions of sundry citizens of Dogden, Fargo, Bottineau, Grafton, Doyon, Rugby, Forest River, and Taylor, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Forschen Club, of Perth, N. Dak., remonstrating against the transfer of the control of the national forests to the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Columbia Lodge, No. 174, International Association of Machinists, of Washington, D. C., praying that an investigation be made into the labor conditions in the coal fields of the Paint Creek district, West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of Cascade Local Union, No. 24, International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite, and Paper Mill Workers, of Berlin; of Local Union No. 29, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Berlin; and of the Board of Trade of Berlin, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the removal of the duty on print paper and wood pulp, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of C. H. Feitz, of Aurora, Ill.; Alexander Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa.; Hannah R. Holden, of Penacook, N. H.; and G. F. Wooley and C. G. Blakely, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 137, Flint Glass Workers' Union, of Cumberland, Md., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on glassware, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Arizona. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF ARIZONA, THIRD SPECIAL SESSION.

House joint resolution 8.

Whereas the Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Representative from the State of Arizona, has introduced into the House of Representatives of the Sixty-third Congress of the United States of America, first session, House resolution No. 4825, entitled "A bill opening the surplus and unallotted land in the Colorado River Indian Reservation to settlement and entry under the provisions of the Carey Land Acts, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the enactment of said bill into law will enable the State of Arizona to enter into a contract under the provisions of the Carey Act for the purpose of diverting the water of the Colorado River and reclaiming a vast area of land on said reservation; and

Whereas the reclamation of such lands by the diverting of such waters thereon will result in the bringing in of thousands of people who will become bona fide settlers and tend to develop the wonderful agricultural possibilities of such lands and will be one of the greatest factors in the building up of the State of Arizona; and

Whereas such lands in their present condition are practically valueless and are not wholly needed for the maintenance or support of the Indians thereon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That we hereby petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to speedily enact the provisions of said House resolution No. 4825 into law in order that said lands on said Indian reservation shall be open to settlement and entry under the provisions of the Carey Land Act, and for other purposes, and that said House resolution No. 4825 be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress now convened, believing it would be an act of greatest benefit to the State of Arizona at this time; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, for presentation to said House of Representatives, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Representative from this State, and to the Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST and Hon. MARK SMITH, Senators from Arizona.

Passed the senate May 13, 1913, by a vote of 18 ayes; 1 excused.

W. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

Read third time in full and passed the house by following vote: 28 ayes, 4 absent, 3 excused.

H. H. LINNEY,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a resolution adopted by the Federal grand jury at Phoenix, Ariz., at the April, 1913, term, favoring the adoption of an amendment to section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the trial and punishment of persons selling or giving intoxicating liquors to Indians, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Blackwell, Tex., praying for a reduction in the duty on sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JACKSON presented a memorial of the employees of the American Label Manufacturing Co., of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on lithographic products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAPP presented petitions of sundry citizens of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Grove City, Stillwater, White Bear, Duluth, St. Peter, Russell, Winona, Rush City, Hill City, Fergus Falls, Moorhead, Hendricks, Hopkins, Clarissa, Lewiston, Garvin, and Mankato, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Trosky, Germantown, and Bricelyn, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for a reduction in the duty on sugar, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Local Union No. 294, of Duluth; Local Union No. 77, of Minneapolis; Local Union No. 98, of St. Paul; and Local Union No. 448, of Brainerd, of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, and of the Cigar Manufacturers' Association of Duluth, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Minneapolis Association of Credit Men of Minnesota, favoring the enactment of sound banking and currency laws, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Los Angeles, Santa Monica, San Francisco, and Alameda, all in the State of California, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Hartford, New Haven, Vernon, South Glastonbury, and Clinton, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented memorials of the Chamber of Commerce of Rumford, and of sundry citizens of Danforth, Cherryfield, and Calais, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on news print paper and wood pulp, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GOFF presented memorials of H. L. Heintzelman, president, and the employees of the Monongah Glass Co., of Fairmont; of Local Union No. 97, Flint Glass Workers' Union, of Buckhannon; and of Ideal Local Union, National Window Glass Workers, of West Union, all in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against a reduction in the duties on glass, glassware, window glass, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Samuel C. Gist, president of the Tri-State Wool Growers and Sheep Breeders' Association, of Wellsburg, W. Va., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Master House Painters' Association, of Wheeling, W. Va., remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called restriction clause in the sundry civil appropriation bill preventing the use of money to prosecute labor organizations for violation of the Sherman antitrust law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Florida, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House memorial 2.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States praying that a military post be established at Fort Clinch, Fla.

Whereas Cumberland Sound, located at the northeastern extremity of the State of Florida, comprises a vast anchorage of more than 20 square miles, being thoroughly landlocked and having a depth of water of from 40 to 60 feet in depth over a large part of its area; and

Whereas there is now a channel of ample width from said sound to the Atlantic Ocean, with a depth of water accommodating vessels of 30-foot draft, which depth of water could be increased to 36 feet with very small expenditure; and

Whereas the United States owns a frontage of about 1¼ miles on Amelia River, a tributary to said sound, another frontage of about 1¼ miles on said sound, and another frontage of about 2¾ miles on the Atlantic Ocean near said sound; and

Whereas the vicinity in which the Federal Government owns said land is exceptionally healthful, being near the famous Cumberland Island upon which many people of the country have winter homes; and

Whereas the said sound, if properly protected by land forts, would furnish an impregnable anchorage for an entire fleet of battleships: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are urged to do all in their power to secure a military post on said Cumberland Sound and to have the said sound properly fortified.

Resolved, further, That the secretary of State be requested to furnish a certified copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

STATE OF FLORIDA, office of secretary of state, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house memorial No. 2 by the Florida Legislature, session 1913, as filed in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 21st day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1732) providing for the establishment of a hospital ship in connection with the American fisheries, which were referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of La Crosse and Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, and of sundry citizens of Hancock, Mich., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Fox Lake, Wis., praying for the adoption of the clause in the pending tariff bill relating to the importation of aigrettes and feathers, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

SELAH G. BLAKEMAN AND TIMOTHY E. HAWLEY.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations, and I submit a report (No. 51) thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator from Florida. I assume that he asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the District of Connecticut amounts paid by him from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts, 1912, to Selah G. Blakeman, $192; and from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts, 1913, to Selah G. Blakeman, $363, and to Timothy E. Hawley, $513, notwithstanding the fact that the payees also served and received compensation as field deputy United States marshals.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report this day submitted by Mr. FLETCHER is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 51, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

RELIEF OF THE UNITED STATES MARSHAL FOR THE DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany S. 1689:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations, having had the same under consideration, unanimously recommend that the bill do pass without amendment.

From the statements and papers submitted it appears that in 1911 the marshal for the district of Connecticut, with the authorization and approval of the Department of Justice, appointed two bailiffs of the United States district court special deputy marshals to serve process. These officers acted as such special deputies when the court was not in session and they were not in actual service as bailiffs. Their fees, in the amounts stated in the bill, were paid by the marshal and the expenditures allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. Subsequently it was held that the statute (29 Stats., p. 183, sec. 13) in force in 1911 forbade deputy marshals from receiving compensation as bailiffs, and recoupment of the amounts paid to these officers under the facts stated, aggregating $1,068, is now demanded by the Treasury Department from the marshal of the district of Connecticut, whose salary is $2,500 per annum.

As is shown by the appended correspondence, which is made a part of this report, the appointments of these special deputies were authorized by and made with the approval of the Department of Justice, which was fully cognizant of all the facts; and that department, in the letter of May 24, 1913, to Mr. FLETCHER, chairman of the subcommittee appointed to consider this bill, strongly recommends its passage.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, October 23, 1911.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed find oath of office of Timothy E. Hawley, whom I have this day appointed special deputy United States marshal at Hartford for the purpose of serving writs of which it was impracticable for myself or my deputies to make service.

Occasions are coming frequently when the marshal's office has several subpœnas and processes to serve at once. A few hours' delay in summoning witnesses may hinder the case on trial or be of serious injury to the Government or to the parties in interest. I would like to have the appointment of Mr. Timothy E. Hawley approved by you. It is my intention to use Mr. T. E. Hawley only when necessity arises in the service of citations or of summoning witnesses. To-day I felt it my duty to send Mr. Hawley to Waterbury, as Mr. Parmelee, the field deputy, was busy in Fairfield County, Mr. Smith, the office deputy, in the cities of Hartford and New Haven, and the ground could not be covered by either of the regular deputies.

Mr. Hawley is at present bailiff of the court, and hence is always available if wanted.

Respectfully,

SIDNEY E. HAWLEY,
United States Marshal.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 27, 1911.

SIDNEY E. HAWLEY, Esq.,
United States Marshal, Hartford, Conn.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 23d instant, and in view of the statements contained therein, the appointment of Timothy E. Hawley as a field deputy marshal, with headquarters at Hartford, is approved, with the understanding, however, that he is to be employed to serve process only in emergencies and when it is impracticable for you or your regular deputies to make the service.

Respectfully,

J. A. FOWLER,
Assistant to the Attorney General.
(For the Attorney General.)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, May 21, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed find oath of office of Selah G. Blakeman, whom I have this day appointed special deputy United States marshal at New Haven, for the purpose of serving writs of which it was impracticable for myself or my deputies to make service.

My deputy, William L. Parmelee, who has headquarters at Ansonia, is a very sick man and has been confined to his bed for some two weeks suffering from nervous prostration and heart trouble, and it will be some time before he will be able to perform his duties as deputy marshal, hence the appointment of Mr. Blakeman, which will probably last for the May term only. He is at present bailiff of the court, and hence is always available when wanted. His duties as deputy marshal will not interfere in any way with his duties as bailiff of the court.

The May term of the district court will come in here on Tuesday, the 28th, and Special Deputy Hawley is busy with writs to be served in the eastern part of the State.

Respectfully,

SIDNEY E. HAWLEY,
United States Marshal.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, May 27, 1912.

FRIEND SELAH: The Department of Justice wants the date of your birth so as to complete the records of the department.

Please send it to me and oblige,

Yours, truly,

G. BRAINARD SMITH.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT,
New Haven, Conn., May 28, 1912.

G. BRAINARD SMITH.

DEAR SIR: I was born on the 23d day of May, 1841, in the town of Stratford, Fairfield County, State of Connecticut. I lived there, excepting the three years that I was in the Army, until the spring of 1866; since then in the town of Huntington.

Yours, truly,

S. G. BLAKEMAN.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1912.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL,
Hartford, Conn.:

The department is in receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, transmitting the oath of office executed on May 20, 1912, by Selah G. Blakeman, whom you have appointed a temporary field deputy, headquarters at New Haven, during the illness of Deputy Parmelee.

Please forward a copy of the commission issued appointing Mr. Blakeman a deputy. Also have Mr. Blakeman fill out the inclosed card and then return same to the department.

The department should be notified promptly when the appointment of Deputy Blakeman terminates.

KNAEBEL, Assistant Attorney General.
(For the Attorney General.)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, May 31, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with your letter of the 24th instant, I inclose herewith a copy of Mr. Blakeman's commission; also a card filled out as requested.

Yours, respectfully,

SIDNEY E. HAWLEY,
United States Marshal.
By G. BRAINARD SMITH,
Office Deputy.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1913.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your request, there is herewith inclosed a draft of a proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation act for 1914, or to some other act if found expedient. With this proposed legislation the Auditor for the State and Other Departments would be enabled to allow the items mentioned therein, being items disallowed in certain accounts rendered by the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut.

Respectfully,

ERNEST KNAEBEL,
Assistant Attorney General.
(For the Attorney General.)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1913.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Subcommittee to whom S. 1689 was referred,
United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 22d instant, you are informed that the passage of this bill for the relief of the marshal for the district of Connecticut is strongly recommended. It appears from the accounts of the marshal and otherwise that the services for which the per diems were charged were actually rendered and the marshal in good faith paid for the same.

You are also advised if this bill shall become law the United States will have been to no additional expense, by reason of the fact that field deputy marshals acted also as bailiffs and were paid by the marshal therefor. The services rendered as bailiff were, of course, rendered during the sitting of the court, whereas the process was served when the court was not in session.

Respectfully,

JESSE C. ADKINS,
Assistant Attorney General.
(For the Attorney General.)

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 86, submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on the 19th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to subpœna witnesses, send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OLIVER:

A bill (S. 2336) granting an increase of pension to Franklin E. Fisher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 2337) to create the Coast Guard by combining therein the existing Life-Saving Service and Revenue-Cutter Service; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 2338) granting an increase of pension to Sallie E. Masmar; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2339) amending the laws relating to national banking associations, enlarging their powers to issue circulating notes, regulating their reserves, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 2340) granting an increase of pension to Jane L. Starritt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WORKS. I introduce a bill to fix and limit the sessions of Congress, and to provide for the time of electing Senators and Representatives, and for other purposes. The bill is a very short one, and I ask that it be read.

The bill (S. 2341) to fix and limit the sessions of Congress, and to provide for the time of electing Senators and Representatives, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress of the United States shall assemble once each year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in October and continue until the first Monday in June following if the business thereof shall require it.

SEC. 2. That United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives shall be elected at elections to be held on the first Tuesday after the third Monday in August, and their terms of office shall commence on the first Monday in October following their election.

SEC. 3. That the term of office of any Senator or Representative which shall expire after the last preceding election and before the first Monday in October after his successor is elected is hereby extended to the said first Monday in October.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WORKS. I have another bill, which provides for the election of President and Vice President at the same time, and providing that they shall take office on the 4th day of November. I will not ask to have the bill read, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2342) to amend chapters 1 and 2 of Title III of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Title III, chapter 1, be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 131. Except in case of a presidential election prior to the ordinary period, as specified in sections 147 to 149, inclusive, when the offices of President and Vice President both become vacant, the electors of President and Vice President shall be appointed, in each State, on the Tuesday next after the third Monday in August in every fourth year succeeding every election of a President and Vice President."

SEC. 2. That section 135 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 135. The electors for each State shall meet and give their votes upon the first Monday in September in the year in which they are appointed, at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct."

SEC. 3. That section 140 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 140. The electors shall dispose of the certificates thus made by them in the following manner.

"First. They shall, by writing under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to take charge of and deliver to the President of the Senate at the seat of government before the second Wednesday in October then next ensuing one of the certificates.

"Second. They shall forthwith forward by the post office to the President of the Senate at the seat of government one other of the certificates.

"Third. They shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates to be delivered to the judge of that district in which the electors shall assemble."

SEC. 4. That section 141 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 141. Whenever a certificate of votes from any State has not been received at the seat of government on the second Wednesday in October, indicated by the preceding section, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of the votes from that State has been lodged, and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list to the seat of government."

SEC. 5. That section 142 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 142. Congress shall be in session on the last Wednesday in October succeeding every meeting of the electors, and the certificates, or so many of them as have been received, shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons to fill the offices of President and Vice President ascertained and declared agreeable to the Constitution."

SEC. 6. That section 148 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States as follows:

"First. If there shall be the space of 2 months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Monday in September then next ensuing, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within 34 days preceding such first Monday in September.

"Second. If there shall not be the space of 2 months between the date of such notification and such first Monday in September, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will not expire on the 3d day of November next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within 34 days preceding the first Monday in September in the year next ensuing. But if there shall not be the space of 2 months between the date of such notification and the first Monday in September then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will expire on the 3d day of November next ensuing the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen."

SEC. 7. That section 149 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 149. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notifications prescribed by the preceding section shall meet and give their votes upon the first Monday in September specified in the notification."

SEC. 8. That section 152 of said statutes be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 152. The term of four years for which a President and Vice President shall be elected shall in all cases commence on the 4th day of November next succeeding the day on which the votes of the electors have been given: Provided, That if the 4th of November shall fall on Sunday said terms shall commence on the Monday following."

SEC. 9. That the terms of office of the President and Vice President holding their offices at the time of the first election under this act shall be, and are hereby, extended to the 3d day of November following.

By Mr. SMITH of South Carolina:

A bill (S. 2343) to require any individual, firm, or corporation doing an interstate transportation business to provide separate sleeping accommodations for the conveyance of white and colored passengers; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be read, and when read that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) suspending the order of October 15, 1912, placing fourth-class postmasters under the civil service was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the order issued by President Taft, under date of October 15, 1912, placing fourth-class postmasters under civil service be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

SEC. 2. That any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, who may be required by law or regulations to execute a bond to his superior officer, or any other officer of the Government, to secure a faithful performance of official duty, may be appointed by the officer, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, approved January 16, 1883," and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof, and the officer requiring said bond shall have power to revoke the appointment of any subordinate officer or employee and appoint his successor at his discretion without regard to the act, amendments, rules, or regulations aforesaid.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech on this subject. I desire to say, however, that I have been misrepresented, or rather that a statement has been made in the newspapers that this resolution would be introduced by me after conference with the Secretary of the Treasury. I wish to say that I have had no conference on the subject with the Secretary of the Treasury. He has never mentioned it to me nor have I mentioned it to him or to anyone in the Treasury Department. I simply introduce the joint resolution.

I desire to say that I am in favor generally of civil service, but I am utterly opposed to the extent to which it has been carried by Executive order. I shall ask the committee to consider this joint resolution. I expect to appear before them, and I hope that they will treat me better than they have done in reference to the other resolution which I have introduced and which sleeps within the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in seeking light on this subject, I would ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] if he has had a conference, if he chooses to state it, with the Postmaster General, under whom this matter comes more directly than under the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have had no conference with any Cabinet officer, nor have I had any conference with the President on the subject. This is simply introduced on my own initiative.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not pursue my inquiry, but I might ask a further question. I have noticed that the Postmaster General has ordered an examination of fourth-class postmasters, and it seems to me that that ought to be going far enough. Now, we are going to get rid of them with some haste, it seems to me, if this joint resolution passes; but we shall discuss it when it is reported, if it ever is. I think we ought to go slow in disturbing the civil service. I feel very sure that many statements that have been made as to the administration of the civil service have been made upon misinformation. Some facts of which I am in possession will demonstrate that when the debate occurs. The service can doubtless be improved, and it ought to be improved, and if the Senator from North Carolina succeeds in improving it he will deserve the thanks of us all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, carrying out that idea, the Senate passed a resolution requesting the President to send to the Senate the report of the Economy and Efficiency Commission made to the President in March last, and the Senator from New Hampshire will find that they report that the Civil Service Commission has been used as a cloak for the old spoils system.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the Senator from North Carolina takes his seat, I desire to ask him if by Executive order all fourth-class postmasters were not also put under the operation of the civil-service law?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is my understanding, and that is the reason I have introduced the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think there is anyone who is familiar with the discharge of the duties of a fourth-class postmaster who ever contemplated that such an officer would necessarily be kept under civil-service rules in view of the degree of competency that is necessary for the discharge of the duties of such an office. Such action really would bring the civil service into disrepute and encourage the kind of thing which the Senator from North Carolina is attempting to eliminate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURTON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

VALORIZATION OF COFFEE.

On motion of Mr. NORRIS, it was Ordered, That in accordance with the letter of the Attorney General of May 6, 1913, in response to the request of the Senate contained in the resolution adopted April 21, 1913, relating to the valorization of coffee, the papers and documents accompanying said letter be returned to the Department of Justice.

COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 90), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, a copy of the report submitted to him on March 25, 1913, by the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, on the apportionment of appointments made from the registers of the Civil Service Commission of the apportioned service at Washington.

TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 89) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to institute, through the Bureau of the Public Health, an investigation of the practices and methods employed by Drs. Karl and Silvia Von Ruck, of Asheville, N. C., in treating tuberculosis and in rendering persons immune from tuberculosis, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable whether the vaccine used by the said Drs. Von Ruck in attempting to render persons in health immune to tuberculosis is successful in immunizing those thus vaccinated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, because we want all the light we can get on this important subject; but it occurs to me that this tuberculosis-vaccine controversy seems to be running riot. We have Dr. Friedmann making claims for a remedy that has been shown to be practically worthless, and we have now a physician in Chicago, Dr. Dukeh, who assures the country that he has a serum that is a certain cure for tuberculosis. I have very grave doubts myself as to the efficacy of any of these serums; but the Senator from North Carolina thinks that the resolution ought to pass and I will not object, although I doubt the propriety of the Government officially engaging in such investigations.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that with Dr. Von Ruck this is no new matter. He has a hospital in western North Carolina, and numbers of patients have been cured by him. There is a Senator on this floor who could rise and testify that he has been cured by this treatment. If we can investigate a foreigner and his methods, I do not see why we should object to the examination of those of an American who, I think, has really the vaccine matter that will do the work.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I heard the resolution, Mr. President, I understood it to mean that this is a serum that makes persons threatened with tuberculosis immune from the disease. Is that it?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it also claimed to be a cure for the disease when it actually exists?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has really cured many people, and our leader, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I do not mind stating, says that he was cured by it and that he would be willing to give testimony to that effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can readily get testimony that men have been cured of all sorts of diseases by all sorts of remedies, but that really proves very little.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no harm in adopting the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no harm in it, except that it establishes a bad precedent; but I will not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no harm in allowing the Government to investigate the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TARIFF STATEMENT (S. DOC. NO. 45).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have had prepared a comparison of the rates of duty levied by the tariff act of 1909 and House bill 3321 as passed by the House of Representatives, showing also the corresponding rates in the chemical, metal, sugar, cotton, and wool bills of 1912, and the equivalent ad valorems in all these measures based upon the importations of the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, and also a complete index to the different bills in the comparison.

I ask that it be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the printing, and, in fact, I do not think it is necessary to get the consent of the Senate to print the statement. I think the committee has ample authority, and I am sure if the Senator had suggested it the committee would have exhausted its authority to have had it printed.

I wish to say to the Senator that there has been printed already a comparative statement which covers, I think, substantially what he has just presented.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have seen the statement which has been already printed. It does not cover all the items.

Mr. SIMMONS. What item in the Senator's statement is not covered in the comparative statement which has been printed?

Mr. SMOOT. The items in the comparative statement which have been printed do not, I think, give House bill 23182 of 1912. That statement does not show the ad valorem duties of the bills that were introduced in 1912 on chemicals, metals, sugar, and cotton. This statement shows all those.

Mr. SIMMONS. As far as that is concerned, if that is the only difference, and the Senator had suggested it, we would have provided for a column of the comparative statement for that purpose; and when the committee finally acts, if the Senator wants that put in the comparative statement, we will see that it is put in. But I shall make no objection to the printing of the statement, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON ALCOHOLISM (S. DOC. NO. 44).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, a report by the Secretary of State covering the report of the delegates of the United States to the Thirteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, at The Hague, in September, 1911, appointed in pursuance of a provision in the diplomatic and consular appropriation act approved March 3, 1911.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 26, 1913.

ALLEGED COTTON POOL.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I send to the desk a resolution which I ask may be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to inquire fully as to the names of the party or parties or corporations that sold the cotton alleged to have been bought in the year 1910 by a pool of purchasers, who are now under indictment by the Department of Justice, and at what prices these parties sold this cotton to the alleged pool, and whether or not the parties selling this cotton owned the cotton at the time of the sale thereof, and the price of spot cotton in the markets of this country on the date of the making of these contracts or the sale of these contracts for this cotton, and to report the same at the earliest possible moment to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in explanation of the resolution I will say that in 1910 there was alleged to have been a certain conspiracy entered into by certain individuals for the purpose of cornering the cotton market and putting up the price of cotton. In an indictment which was found shortly after that time certain individuals were alleged to have entered into an agreement with certain mill owners in this country who were to take part of this cotton from their hands as they bought it and to distribute it. It seems that when the time came for the delivery of the cotton the parties having sold these contracts claimed that under the Sherman antitrust law those individuals who had bought this cotton were guilty of an infraction of that law. The truth of the matter is that under the operations of the New York Cotton Exchange those who had sold this cotton had hoped to deliver the old stock that they had accumulated in New York that no one would have. As everyone familiar with the conditions knows, in 1910 we had a comparatively short crop—about 10,500,000 bales of cotton. At that time over in England the International Federation of Spinners and Weavers met. The situation which confronted the mill people was freely discussed, and it was stated that on account of the increased business, on account of the increased demand for cotton on the market, and on account of the unprecedented or comparatively unprecedented short crop the probabilities were that cotton would go up rapidly. They agreed that in order to obviate this disaster to them in their profits, without regard to the grower, they would run on short time. I believe that was the universal agreement, covering every mill both in Europe and in this country. They agreed in their association that they would run on short time in order to curtail the consumption of raw cotton, so as to increase the price of the manufactured product, and to decrease the price of raw cotton, also to preserve the stock to be carried to another year.

During this time certain individuals in New York were selling hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton under the spot price in the spot centers, expecting, by virtue of loading the market with what is called short sales, to break the price to a point where they could buy the spot cotton on a lower basis than that on which they sold and deliver this cotton to the European spinners. Certain men realizing that the crop was short and that the demand of the world was large profited by the experience of one Daniel J. Sully, who believed that the world had never set a proper estimate upon the value of American cotton and who undertook to corner the future market, not the spot market, and succeeded in demonstrating that the value of cotton was far beyond the prices ordinarily offered. But Sully failed because he had not made preparation for receiving and disposing of the actual cotton that might be tendered on his contracts. But he demonstrated one fact, and that was that we had not nearly approached the real intrinsic value of American cotton as expressed in the terms of the world's needs. Under the Sully boom cotton went to 17¼ cents a pound; the mills bought up hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton at that price, converted it into goods, and sold them in the market without any mills, so far as we heard of, going into bankruptcy.

When this present combination of manipulators or speculators got together they took into their confidence, as is alleged, or into their agreement, certain mills throughout the country, saying to them: "These parties are offering this cotton cheaper than you can buy it in your home market. Now, as the season has been open, the grade of this year's cotton good, and it is almost impossible for the exchange to load up its warehouses with undesirable cotton and offer it on contract, if you will agree to take this cotton as it is offered or as we demand it, we will deliver it to you or force them to deliver it to you." Under this arrangement when the April notices came due the parties having sold these contracts gave notice of delivery of the cotton. The buyers absorbed practically all the stock that there was in the warehouses at New York. The price at which they bought this cotton was lower than they could buy spot cotton in the South. Then the sellers stood face to face with one of two situations, either to pay the premium on their contracts demanded by the parties that bought them, or to go into the markets of the South and buy spot cotton as best they might to fulfill their contracts. This meant an inevitable rise in the price of cotton throughout the cotton markets in the South. In place of that, however, they got a certain manufacturer in Alabama—I believe it was—to disclose to them what the agreement was, namely, that the men buying the contracts should demand the cotton and deliver the cotton to the spinners. The result was that in place of the contracts being filled these men who bought the cotton were indicted for criminal practices under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law and haled into court.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What effect does the Senator seek to accomplish by this resolution?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I introduced a similar resolution in 1910 and had it referred to the Department of Justice. The then Attorney General informed me that he could not investigate the matter; that that was outside of his province. Having a new Attorney General in office at this time, I interviewed him this morning, and he said he was inclined to take the same position taken by the previous Attorney General. I then interviewed the Department of Commerce, and they assured me that, if I could secure the passage of this resolution by the Senate, they would investigate to find out all about the sale and those who sold the cotton. Here we are indicting men for putting up the price of an American product, two-thirds of which we sell abroad, and letting go scot-free the men who have attempted to put the price down and to ruin those who produce the raw material.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator did not understand the purport of my inquiry. The inquiry was what practical effect does the Senator hope to accomplish by this resolution?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The practical effect which I hope to accomplish is this: If the Department of Commerce does its duty thoroughly, and can find out who the parties were who sold to this alleged pool, how much they sold, how much they owned at the time of sale, and what was the price at which they sold as compared with the price of the actual product, it would get data enough to indict them in the courts and give the people of this country to understand that those who produce the raw material, the ordinary farmer and laborer of this country, have as fair a show in the courts of this country as the men who manipulate the other end.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not at all familiar with the situation of which the Senator speaks. Are the indictments to which the Senator has referred still pending?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are still pending. The reason I have brought the matter up is because it is alleged that there were some flaws in the previous indictment of the men who were attempting to make foreigners pay a legitimate price for an American product. There are witnesses who have been subpœnaed to go before the grand jury of the district of New York in order that they might perfect the indictment and hale these parties into court under a perfected indictment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, another question. This matter is, then, still under consideration and action by the Department of Justice?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; so far as the alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade by cornering the cotton market is concerned; but that is as absurd as to talk about cornering the wind.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does not the Senator think that the Department of Justice, having one branch of the case in hand, ought to be allowed to pursue its orderly course as to the whole matter?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Department of Justice refused to investigate the other side of the case.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the Senator to say that the present head of the Department of Justice is not in accord with the Senator on this proposition?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; the Senator misunderstands me. The Department of Justice in 1910 said that it would not investigate; that this indictment that is now pending was investigated by other parties; that the charges were laid before the grand jury; and that they are simply proceeding under the law to the prosecution of the case.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there? The Senator has the facts in his own knowledge, or thinks he has, in regard to the operation. Does not the Senator think that, if he had presented those facts to the Department of Justice and those facts should constitute a cause of action against these parties, the Department of Justice would proceed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have not got the facts; I want to get the facts. The Senator from Wyoming knows that no man can buy a thing unless somebody sells it; and I know that that pool bought more cotton than was then on the market, and somebody had to sell more than they had in order to do that. I want to know who sold the cotton.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am inclined to agree with the Senator in that; but it occurs to me that in investigating an offense against the Sherman Antitrust Act the Department of Justice has by far the better machinery and is the better qualified and equipped to investigate and to take advantage of its own investigation. I do not object at all to the Senator's resolution.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I understand from what the Senator from South Carolina has said that he believes that the men who attempted to depress the price, as well as those who attempted to raise it, should be included in the prosecution?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To be sure. The whole question is, Who are the more guilty—the men who attempted to raise the price of this commodity or those who attempted to depress the price below the legitimate value of the cotton as measured by the law of supply and demand; who were selling, contract upon contract, thousands upon thousands of bales, when no such amount of cotton was in sight? I have here a letter to the effect that over 384,000 bales were sold and actually delivered, and that that did not come near exhausting the contracts. In other words, those who were interested in getting cheap raw cotton for European exportation were selling their contracts without limit on the New York Exchange, knowing that they could stand behind a breastwork of undesirable grades and could sell the market far below the real value. But on account of the splendid season and the unusually good quality of the cotton for the year 1910 the alleged "pool" bought these contracts, demanded specific fulfillment, cleaned out the warehouses, left the men that had sold short without any breastwork to stand behind, and were in a fair way to put cotton up to its legitimate price during that season. Then, in order to stop them, these men were indicted as being in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade; whereas those who had been depressing the price of the cotton, who had been decreasing the balance of trade in favor of America, the men who were using their money and their prestige and their power to put down an American product, were allowed to go scot free.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose we all know, as the Senator from South Carolina knows, that there are plenty of people who are engaged day in and day out in the business of selling things they have not got. I am quite with the Senator in hoping that that sort of business will be broken up. My thought was that the department of the Government that is charged with that very thing of breaking up unlawful combinations was the department to be intrusted with this investigation. That was the only reason for which I rose. It appears, however, that it is not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state that while I did not bring it over with me I had before me this morning a transcript of the report of the Attorney General on my previous resolution, stating that all he could do was to give his opinion to the proper authorities or proper department, when asked, on a specific case; that he could not investigate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator has such a statement as that, because he says he has; but if he has such a statement as that, it is entirely without foundation, because the Department of Justice is bound to investigate these allegations of violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act whenever they are brought to its notice.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, why did not the Attorney General direct it to be done?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know why he did not. I am not speaking of the past; I am speaking of the present. I believe the Department of Justice, as now constituted, will be faithful in the performance of its duties, as it has been faithful in the performance of its duties in the past as formerly constituted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am glad to hear the Senator from Wyoming say that he thinks the present Department of Justice will come nearer doing its duty than the previous one, for I assure him that the previous head of that department said that this matter was outside of his jurisdiction, and he absolutely refused to have anything to do with it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator can find any more effective way of preventing the Department of Justice from pursuing its inquiries in this direction than his present resolution, I am unable to see it. He takes the investigation out of the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice and imposes it upon the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator from Wyoming that I interviewed the Attorney General this morning, and he said that, without going into the matter or investigating it further, he was rather inclined to the opinion that the Department of Justice could not make investigations which in turn would become the foundation for an indictment in that department; that they simply had to depend upon facts presented to them. But be that as it may, upon the statement of the Department of Commerce that they would thoroughly investigate this matter——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Attorney General was of the opinion that the Department of Justice could not make an investigation of the conditions and then use the facts which they ascertained as the basis of an indictment? That is, that the department could not initiate an investigation and lay whatever facts it secured before a grand jury?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator from Idaho that that opinion was set forth in detail by the previous Attorney General, Mr. Wickersham. The opinion, as expressed by him, was printed in the report. I inadvertently left it in my office this morning. That was his opinion, however, stated over his signature.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood the Senator to say that the present head of the Department of Justice told him the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This morning, when I went to interview the present Attorney General, he was of opinion, without investigating this specific case, that the previous Attorney General was right.

Mr. BORAH. Did he maintain that the Department of Justice could not make an investigation and use the facts which it had for the purpose of prosecuting?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am simply making a statement of what I understood the former Attorney General's report to mean. I will send and get, and ask the privilege of having incorporated in my remarks, the opinion expressed by Mr. Wickersham on this identical resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why can we not have the opinion of the present Attorney General? Mr. Wickersham has passed out of office.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has not been before him to pass upon. This was simply a private conversation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood that the Senator wanted this investigation made by the Department of Commerce because the present Attorney General was of the opinion that he had no authority to make the investigation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was his tentative opinion. He did not know what was involved in it. I stated to him that the reason I came was that the previous Attorney General had expressed this opinion, which I will have brought in and read before you, in which he cites case after case in which he is sustained by previous Attorneys General, to the effect that the function of that office is not to investigate except under an order from the President. He cites the kind of investigation he can make, but holds that he can not go in and investigate to find out facts for any other department, even at the order of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then I understand the Senator from South Carolina wants this investigation made by the Department of Commerce, in order that the results of that investigation may be given to the Attorney General for the purpose of bringing an indictment against the parties if guilty?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think the Attorney General himself should make the investigation.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I am surprised by the statement of the Senator from South Carolina. It is rather an amazing one, and it seems to me he must be mistaken. I can not believe that the Attorney General has laid down the doctrine that the Department of Justice can not investigate and then use the material it secures for the purpose of prosecution or suit.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Except on the order of the President.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will permit me a moment further, I was connected with the Department of Justice for about a year, and I know that is not the practice. There is a corps of investigators especially organized for the purpose of making investigations, and those investigations are acted upon either by placing the facts before a grand jury or by starting a suit in equity. In the Cotton-Pool case, to which the Senator refers, as I remember, there was a plea of guilty entered by some of the gentlemen who I assume he believes were unjustly prosecuted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I want to correct his statement that I assume that those who are now indicted are not guilty. I am not making any assumption pro or con as to that, but I do claim that if those who bought this cotton were guilty of a restraint of trade those who sold it were guiltier still. That is the allegation I make.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to see them all prosecuted, and I was very glad to see these men prosecuted. The conspiracy was cold-blooded and it levied tribute upon everybody in this country who was compelled to buy cotton goods. As a matter of fact, some of these men themselves plead guilty and paid fines, acknowledging their own guilt.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I suspect that if we could get the Attorney General's opinion we would find that the Attorney General said no more than that the facts that were gathered by the department would have to be laid before a grand jury before an indictment could be found.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I prefer to get the opinion and read it, and that will set at rest all this controversy as to what he did say. Then we will all stand corrected. I will send and have it gotten.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand that the Senator has the opinion of the present Attorney General. The opinion the Senator refers to is the opinion of former Attorney General Wickersham.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have the opinion of the former Attorney General in printed form over at my office.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But what we are interested in is the opinion of the present Attorney General. If the present Attorney General thinks he has not the power to make this investigation, then by all means let us give him the power, or give it to somebody else; but if in his opinion he has the power he can make the investigation, and no other department can make it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should infinitely prefer a department where there would be no doubt as to its authority to get the facts I want than to refer it to one where there is already an adverse opinion, and where the present Attorney General has not had sufficient data to know whether his opinion would be adverse or not. This is a matter that needs to be attended to now. Therefore, if these facts can be gathered by the Department of Commerce as expeditiously as they can be gathered by the Department of Justice, and perhaps more so, when they are ascertained they can be laid before the Attorney General for such action as may be proper in the premises.

I shall ask the privilege of reading the opinion as soon as it comes into the Chamber. In the meantime I ask that this resolution be acted upon.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may we have the resolution read again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to oppose this resolution, but does the Senator think this resolution is necessary in order to enable the Department of Commerce to make an investigation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it is. I talked to the Secretary; we went over those points, and he said he would take them up and gather the facts and see just who the parties were, and all the circumstances surrounding the alleged sale.

Mr. BORAH. If the resolution is necessary, it will be a source of great relief to the manufacturers of this country who are about to be investigated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it ought to go over, at least until we can find out about the difference between the two departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution goes over.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina subsequently said: Mr. President, I now have the opinion of the Attorney General, and I want to incorporate it with the remarks that I made in reference to my resolution this morning. I gave notice while I was speaking that I would have it done.

I will take this occasion to say, as there was some confusion as to what I did say in reference to the opinion of the present Attorney General, that he has given no opinion in reference to it at all. He only suggested that the former Attorney General was right, and he did say to me that on account of the press of business in his office he was afraid he could not give it attention; that later on he might do so.

In view of this opinion of the former Attorney General, which I ask to have printed, I want to state that I took it upon myself to call upon the Department of Commerce to have them investigate and find the data that I am looking for. I think those who will read the opinion as coming from the former Attorney General will find that the position he took in reference thereto was exactly as has been stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the opinion of Attorney General Wickersham will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Letter from the Attorney General, in response to a Senate resolution of April 29, 1910, directing the Attorney General to report to the Senate the names of the party, parties, or corporations that sold cotton alleged to have been bought by a pool, together with the prices.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1910.

SIR: I am in receipt of a resolution adopted by the Senate on April 29, 1910, in the following language:

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inquire fully as to the names of the party or parties or corporations that sold the cotton alleged to have been bought by a pool of purchasers who are now under investigation by the Department of Justice, and at what prices these parties sold this cotton, and whether or not they owned the cotton at the time of the sale thereof, and the price of spot cotton in the South on the date of the making of these contracts or the sale of these contracts, and to report the same at the earliest possible moment to the Senate."

The investigation now being carried on by this department concerning a so-called "pool" in cotton is for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a crime against the laws of the United States has been committed. That investigation is being conducted with the aid of a grand jury, whose proceedings are necessarily secret, and the testimony adduced before it, under well-settled rules of law, is for the use of the grand jury, whose functions are purely judicial and may not be used in aid of legislative inquiry. (Re Summerhayes, 70 Fed. Rep., 769; U. S. v. Kilpatrick, 16 Fed. Rep., 765; Fotheringham v. Adams Express Co., 34 Fed. Rep., 646.) Nor can I lawfully conduct such an inquiry as the resolution describes, for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting facts for the consideration of the Senate.

The powers and duties of the Attorney General are prescribed by law.

He is required to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law whenever required by the President, or by the head of any executive department. (U. S. R. S., secs. 354, 356.) He may conduct and argue any case in any court of the United States in which the United States is interested. (Id., sec. 359.) By no statute is he required or permitted to conduct an investigation in aid of the legislative branch of the Government. While under the Constitution, and independently of statute, the President may call upon the Attorney General or any other head of one of the departments of Government for his opinion "upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices" (Const., Art. II, sec. 2; 23 Opin., 360), yet it has been uniformly held by my predecessors that the laws do not permit the Attorney General "to give advice at the call of either House of Congress, or of Congress itself, but only to the President or the head of an executive department" (18 Op., 87), and that he can not undertake to investigate and report upon questions of fact, even for the head of one of the other departments of the Government (17 Op., 436; 19 Op., 465; 20 Op., 253–384; 23 Op., 231).

As early as 1820 Attorney General Wirt, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives requesting him to report his opinion with respect to a certain petition and documents referred to him by the House, requested to be excused from so doing upon the ground that there was no provision of law imposing upon him the performance of such duty as would be required in order to comply with such resolution. (1 Op., 335.)

In 1854 Attorney General Caleb Cushing advised the Secretary of the Interior that he was not bound to consider a resolution of the House respecting a claim against the Government which, under the law, was within the jurisdiction of his department, as mandatory on him or compelling him to liquidate the claim against his judgment of the right of the case. The Constitution, he said, "has not given to either branch of the Legislature the power, by separate resolution of its own, to construe judicially a general law or to apply it executively to a given case. And its resolutions have obligatory force only so far as regards itself or things dependent on its own separate constitutional power." (6 Op., 680, 684.)

Attorney General Williams, in 1872, declined to examine certain papers referred to him by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, touching the claims of several insurance companies growing out of the loss of a vessel in Chinese waters, and to give the committee his opinion concerning the same, upon the ground that it was not only not his duty but that he had no right to give his official opinion with respect to such matters (14 Op., 17); and the same Attorney General, in advising the Secretary of the Interior with respect to a similar report, said:

"Several of my predecessors have decided, and on three different occasions I have affirmed their views, that the Attorney General was not authorized to give his official opinion upon a call of either House of Congress or any committee thereof as to any matter pending before Congress. * * * I fully recognize the right of the head of any of the departments to call upon me for an official opinion in respect to any question of law pending before the department by whose head the call is made and I consider it my duty promptly to respond to such a call; but I can not recognize the right of any committee of Congress to call for such an opinion for their own use in matters of legislation." * * * (14 Op., 178.)

In 1861 Attorney General Bates acknowledged the receipt of a resolution of the Senate, referring a petition to him and requesting him to inquire into the facts and law of the case and report his opinion to the Senate at its next session, but respectfully declined to comply with such request on the ground that, in the absence of any statutory authority to give official opinions to the legislative department of the Government, the assumption of such a power by the Attorney General would be in violation of his oath of office and of dangerous example; and that, moreover, he was not provided by law with the means of obtaining the information desired.

He said:

"The statutory provision, and the only one which authorizes the Attorney General to give opinions, is contained in the act of September 24, 1789. By that act he is required to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law when required by the President of the United States, or when requested by the heads of any of the departments, touching any matters that may concern their departments. (1 Stat., 93.) Being thus limited to the duty of giving opinions upon questions of law, the Attorney General has not been clothed with the power to investigate matters of fact. He has no authority to compel the attendance of witnesses or to administer oaths to them; and, in short, has none of the machinery by which, through the control of persons and papers, truth may be elicited and falsehood exposed. Thus deficient in the means of ascertaining the facts, his conclusions upon the law would necessarily be valueless, since their accuracy would depend on the fullness and certainty with which the facts were established. It will therefore be seen that however strongly my own feelings may incline me to accept the commission with which the Senate has honored me, the want of power to execute it effectively compels me to decline it; and I trust that the Senate will find, in the reasons which I have taken the liberty to suggest, a sufficient justification for so doing." (10 Op., 164.)

The views expressed in this opinion, so far as I am able to ascertain, have been uniformly acted upon by my predecessors, and I have found no case where an inquiry such as the Senate resolution of April 29, 1910, calls for has been conducted by the Attorney General

For these reasons, with the greatest respect, I am constrained to inform the Senate that it will be impossible for me to comply with the request contained in that resolution.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WORKS. A few days ago I asked for the present consideration of the bill (S. 485) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which was reported from the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] asked for an opportunity to look into it and objected to its consideration at that time. The bill was read. I understand the Senator from Arkansas will not make further objection. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be placed upon its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. WORKS. The bill has already been read. It is simply to add an additional judge for the southern district of California.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Finance Committee, if he will give me his attention.

The Finance Committee has recently published a comparison between the existing tariff law and the proposed tariff law in which the specific duties in the existing law are converted into what are called equivalent ad valorems. I think it would be helpful to those of us who expect to give that subject some thought and study if the chairman of the Finance Committee would tell the Senate the plan that has been adopted under which these specific duties have been so transformed; that is to say, by what method is the equivalent ad valorem duty ascertained.

I do not ask for this information in any captious spirit. It will frequently be referred to in the future, and I think all Senators ought to know how this has been done, in order that we may prepare ourselves for whatever observations we see fit to make upon the work of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know that I am able to give the Senator the exact method by which the specific and compound duties were reduced to ad valorem equivalents. The Senator knows that that has been done in connection with every revision of the tariff in recent years. It was worked out when the present tariff law was considered in 1909. It was worked out when we were attempting to revise the tariff in 1912 by the schedule-bill process.

These calculations are made by Government experts. I am not able to tell the Senator exactly the basis upon which the experts make these conversions. I think, however, I am correct in the general basic statement that they calculate upon the basis of the actual imports of the specific article for the specific year. In the comparative statement that the committee has caused to be prepared and printed I think they selected two years instead of one, the actual importations in 1911 and the actual importations in 1912.

Now, the exact mathematical process by which the expert reaches his conclusion as to what is the ad valorem equivalent of each specific duty I am not able to tell the Senator, but if he desires that information specifically I will have the expert who is doing the work furnish the Senator the information, or if he prefers I will have it furnished to me and I will state it to the Senate.

I will state at this time that an expert assigned by the Treasury Department, an expert in whom I have great confidence, is going over the items. I think that he has assisted nearly all the committees who have prepared statements within the last four years in getting up the data showing the ad valorem equivalents.

I will say in this connection that the print we have had made is simply a tentative print. It is to be revised. There may be errors in it. It was gotten up probably a little hurriedly and probably in advance of some other facts that will necessarily cause it to be revised. I am having this particular expert go over the calculations to be sure that they are accurate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know that there has been a mistake made——

Mr. SIMMONS. None has been called to my attention.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not suggest that there is any error in the computation itself. I know that the information in this comparison is very misleading, just as similar information in a former comparison was very misleading. I know how the attempt was made a few years ago and I did not know whether the committee was pursuing the same plan. We will have occasion as we go through the bill to compare the two bills, I assume, very carefully, and every Senator ought to know how these equivalent ad valorems have been reached.

For instance, take a little industry in my own State, known as the pearl-button industry. This comparison states that under the existing law the equivalent of the specific duty which is now imposed is 46 per cent, I think. I may be wrong, but it is about that. It also states that the proposed duty is 40 per cent, showing a reduction of but 6 per cent. That does not state the facts substantially. These specific duties are, with regard to many of these buttons, 100 per cent; with regard to other qualities or grades possibly not 30 per cent, and when they are all grouped and an average ad valorem is given we are led to a conclusion that is not warranted by the facts.

I would be very glad if the chairman of the committee would have the expert who has the matter in charge furnish, so that it will be accessible to all of us, the plan that he has adopted through which he has worked out these equivalent ad valorems. We all want the exact truth; nothing but the truth; and I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Finance wants that quite as much as anybody. It will not be a great labor, and I hope the chairman will see that it is done.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Iowa is correct in his statement. It is very important that these statements as to ad valorem equivalents should be as accurate as possible. I think, however, the Senator will recognize the fact that there is very great difficulty in securing an entirely accurate statement as to the ad valorem equivalent in respect to some of the paragraphs of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree with that.

Mr. SIMMONS. For instance, where there is a paragraph grouping a great many different items, imposing upon some a specific duty, upon others a compound duty, upon others an ad valorem duty, it is difficult to ascertain exactly what is the ad valorem equivalent of the duty imposed upon each one of the separate items. In view of the fact that frequently in our reports they are grouped together and an average price of the imports is given instead of the price of the importation of the items in the paragraph, there is some confusion, and the sum becomes an exceedingly complicated one. I will state to the Senator that the expert in charge of that work has said to me that in some instances it was impossible for him to ascertain and calculate accurately the ad valorem equivalent.

But I will be glad, Mr. President, to furnish the Senator with a statement of the method by which our expert has reached this conclusion, and if the Senator has some other method that he thinks will be more accurate I shall be glad to take it into consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina will understand that I am not asking for this personally. I want it for the benefit of all Senators and for the enlightenment of the debate that is sure to follow.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. I not only agree with the Senator from North Carolina and his expert that it is very difficult, but I go further and say that it is absolutely impossible.

Mr. SIMMONS. In some cases I think it is.

Mr. CUMMINS. In very many cases; and when it is remarked here that the reduction in this bill, as compared with the present law, is 25 per cent or 33 per cent or something of that sort it means nothing whatsoever from the standpoint of one who believes in the doctrine of protection. I do not want either the country or the Senate to be misled in the very beginning of the debate by a comparison that is necessarily misleading and wrong, because I do not believe that there is any person connected with the Treasury Department who can, from the records in the office, state the equivalent ad valorem of many of the specific duties in the present law.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, if I recall correctly, four years ago when we had the Payne-Aldrich bill under consideration the Finance Committee submitted to the Senate an elaborate comparative table embracing all the schedules in which specific and composite duties, together with the ad valorem duties, were put down in columns, showing a comparison between the ad valorem duties of the Dingley law, the then existing law, and the proposed law. Am I not correct? The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was on the committee then.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have had prepared and there has already been printed, subject to revision hereafter, almost an identical——

Mr. BACON. I am simply predicating what I was going to say by what I have said so far. I was not in any manner criticizing what was done or what is proposed to be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand.

Mr. BACON. But what I want to ask is this: The Senator now states as absolutely unreliable, not in any manner to be depended upon, what was presented to the Senate four years ago as a statement which could be depended upon.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a moment. The Senator from Georgia may remember, or may not, that I stated then precisely what I am stating now with regard to the attempt to convert the specific duties into ad valorem equivalents. I do not want to begin the debate upon the bill before us without a thorough understanding upon that point.

Mr. BACON. After the Senator from North Carolina has disclosed the method so far as he can do so under which they are now proceeding to ascertain the ad valorem duties, I was proceeding to ask in what does that method differ from the method which was adopted then.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, the same gentleman who made those tables before is making them now.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say so, but the objection having come from the other side, which had previously presented similar statements, I wanted to know in what way what they then represented to us to be authentic differed from the course which is now being pursued.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the statement to go out that it is impossible to find the equivalent ad valorem on goods imported into this country. I will admit that ad valorem rates are on their face misleading, but they are not incorrect. Let me give an instance, and then I will explain to the Senator what I mean, and I think he will admit it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know what the Senator means, and he is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain by referring to the very item that was spoken of by the Senator from Iowa—pearl buttons. The rate provided in the present law begins with the very cheapest button and ends with the most costly button; or, in other words, from the smallest sort of a pearl button to the very largest that is imported.

Under the present law, under the rates provided, the cheap button sometimes carries a rate of 200 per cent—more than the goods cost to make in this country. There are no importations of this class of goods to speak of to this country. But take the expensive button, the large pearl button, the most expensive button used in the most costly dresses for ladies, and the duty does not amount to more than 25 per cent.

But it is a mistake to say that we can not find the equivalent ad valorem of all the goods that are imported into this country; but when we take the high equivalent ad valorem on items having slight importations, such as the cheaper line of pearl buttons, and average it with the low equivalent ad valorem on high-priced pearl buttons, of which there are large importations, it shows a very low equivalent ad valorem rate on cheap buttons and raises the actual rate on high-priced buttons.

Therefore in pearl buttons we find that the equivalent ad valorem of all the buttons that are imported into this country under the present law is 46 per cent, whereas the Underwood bill provides a duty of 40 per cent on all classes of pearl buttons, making no difference between the class of buttons, whether they be cheap or whether they be high priced. The result is an increase from the present duty upon the high-priced button, but an immense decrease on the cheaper grade of button.

That is all there is in this question. The expert of the department is absolutely correct in his figures, as he takes into consideration only the importation to this country. In our comparisons we do not take into consideration the amount of goods made in this country; but to get the information the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] wants and what we ought to have, we should take into consideration in fixing a rate the amount produced in this country, the amount imported, and then we could fairly judge what rate should be imposed, and not base the rate upon an equivalent ad valorem arrived at by comparing importations of goods of different values and some with slight importations and others with large importations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the very situation and condition to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] referred, in making these calculations these schedules are broken up into fragments, and where there are large importations the ad valorem equivalent is given upon each item in each schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not on each bracket within the paragraph.

Mr. SIMMONS. So far as it can be done. I say where there are importations and the duties are different upon the different items or the different brackets, if the Senator will get the handbook, which is a comparative statement and which follows the same general plan, he will find that the paragraph is broken up as to a number of items, and the calculation of each item is based upon the actual importation of that item. Of course, if there are no importations of any item, then how you are to arrive at the ad valorem equivalent is a very difficult problem.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, as the Senator says, while these statements can not be considered as absolutely accurate in each case, I think, Mr. President, under the method of calculation that they are substantially accurate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has not covered the whole difficulty. Where there are no importations, of course the alleged ad valorem, said to be the equivalent of the specific duty, is of no value whatsoever; but it is not a guide in another instance. I put an imaginary case, of course. Suppose that there were a specific duty of 50 cents a yard on woolen cloth, and during the year there were imported woolen cloths of the value of from 50 cents a yard to $5 a yard. The Treasury Department keeps no such record as will enable them to ascertain how much was imported at 50 cents a yard, how much at a dollar a yard, how much at a dollar and a half a yard, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. The Treasury Department does keep that.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, I have a specific statement, or had a few years ago, which I think was put into the RECORD, that the Treasury Department could not give me that information when articles were classified in one class and imported in the way I have described. I do not say that there are not in the Treasury somewhere invoices and matters of that kind from which the Secretary of the Treasury could eventually, by long labor, reclassify and ascertain what he wanted; but there is no such information there now ready for our use. It is perfectly evident that when imports under a paragraph of that kind are aggregated and the amount of duty collected, being specific, is applied to those importations it affords no valuable or material information with regard to the duties at all—I mean as to how much you are actually reducing or how much you are actually increasing such duties when you attach an ad valorem duty alone.

I do not myself believe that the Finance Committee is at fault. All that I ask is that we may all know precisely how this result is reached, so that when we come to discuss the bill we can do it intelligently and do it without that constant contradiction which will arise if we misunderstand each other with regard to the way in which specific duties are converted into equivalent ad valorems.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there was no account kept of the number of yards of cloth that were imported into this country and the price per yard, it would be impossible for us to find out what was the amount of the importations, but an account is kept at the Treasury Department. On each shipment into the United States an account is kept of the number of yards, not only of woolen goods but on all other textiles, and the price per yard at which the goods are invoiced and at which they enter the country. It is true that in each bracket—that is, the bracket within the paragraph—the yards and price are kept and reported by the Treasury Department as falling under that particular paragraph. We take the importations and value of unit of each of the brackets of the paragraph to arrive at the equivalent ad valorem. All my calculations and all the experience I have had in the past prove this is the only way that we can arrive at the different equivalent ad valorem rates in the tariff bills.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 88) submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 19th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that H. R. 3321 be referred to the Committee on Finance be printed for the use of the Senate; together with the two questions suggested as appropriate to be asked of manufacturers by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] at to-day's session, May 19, 1913.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I ask that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

PAINT CREEK COAL FIELDS, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present the report of the Committee on Education and Labor on the West Virginia investigation resolution.

Mr. KERN. I should like to have the report read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report (No. 52), as follows:

The Committee on Education and Labor, having considered the resolution (S. Res. 37) authorizing the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district, West Virginia, reports it back to the Senate favorably and recommends its passage with amendments so as to read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Education and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the conditions existing in the Paint Creek coal fields of West Virginia, for the purpose of ascertaining—

"First. Whether or not any system of peonage has been or is maintained in said coal fields.

"Second. Whether or not postal services and facilities have been or are interfered with or obstructed in said coal fields; and if so, by whom.

"Third. Whether or not the immigration laws of this country have been or are being violated in said coal fields; and if so, by whom; and whether or not there have been discriminations against said coal fields in the administration of the immigration laws at ports of entry.

"Fourth. Investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

"Fifth. Investigate and report to what extent the conditions existing in said coal fields in West Virginia have been caused by agreements and combinations entered into contrary to the laws of the United States, for the purpose of controlling the production, sale, and transportation of the coal of these fields.

"Sixth. Investigate and report whether or not firearms, ammunition, and explosives have been shipped into the said coal fields with the purpose to exclude the products of said coal fields from competitive markets in interstate trade; and if so, by whom, and by whom paid for.

"Seventh. If any or all of these conditions exist, the causes leading up to such conditions."

Said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress or of either House thereof at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed, and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation herein authorized shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report and resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report and resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is, Shall the report and the resolution as amended be adopted? Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is adopted.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the resolution, but I desire to make this statement: At the time this matter was first suggested I was, and even now I am, under the impression that it was a matter which the Senate should not undertake to investigate. My reasons I have already given to the Senate. I see, though, from the report of the committee, which is a unanimous report, that there is a disposition that this investigation shall be made.

I desire simply to repeat what I said in the beginning, so as to emphasize it now, that there never has been any objection either on my part or on the part of the governor of West Virginia or any of the officials, civil or military, of that State as to the proposed investigation, except that it was a matter pertaining to the State alone, and that as yet the State has not exhibited to the country the fact that it can not manage its own affairs. Gov. Hatfield invites this investigation.

I am still under the impression that the Senate is undertaking to do something that it ought not to do. I venture the assertion that before long, if this is to be used as a precedent, no one can tell when the end will be; and I say that such a proceeding never yet has been resorted to by the Senate of the United States. No one on this floor can put his finger on a single instance where such an investigation has been undertaken in one of the States of this Nation. Great industries have been investigated, questions that are involved in matters that pertain to all the States and to the Nation have been investigated by committees of Congress, but not a question of this kind. In this case local matters are involved; local matters can be attended to by the courts, and have been attended to by the courts or by the executive, and they have been attended to by the executives of all the States. I simply want to enter my protest against this being considered, then, a precedent of that kind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I have not refreshed my recollection as to the precise form of the resolution or just the nature of the investigation undertaken, but I do recall that the Coeur d'Alene matter to which the Senator referred the other day was investigated by Congress.

Mr. GOFF. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I remember the fact that at the time the trials were proceeding we were honored by a visit from a committee of Congress, and I know that a very extensive investigation was made here after the trials were over. I have not looked into the form of the resolution to see precisely what its wording was, but I know that there was an investigation had of the domestic affairs of the State, based largely, I apprehend, upon the same allegations which have been made in this case.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will make an investigation, he will find that it was not along the same lines. The Senator will look in vain, I say, for that which duplicates the proceeding that is now to be undertaken.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator, as he has evidently looked into it, upon what theory did they proceed to investigate the conditions in Idaho at that time?

Mr. GOFF. The theory was not that the State of Idaho was depriving anyone of his constitutional rights, not that the State of Idaho was by its military power or authority doing anything to deprive a citizen of the United States of his privileges under the law, but whether or not the conditions then existing in the mining regions of Idaho were of that character that suggested to the Senate of the United States the importance of an investigation relative to the labor difficulties then existing in that section. The State of Idaho was not arraigned; the governor of the State of Idaho was not arraigned; the authorities of the State of Idaho were not arraigned. That is the position I am taking, and that is what I meant by the reference.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the governor of Idaho was arraigned most severely.

Mr. GOFF. Well, I mean in the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. All his acts were made the subject of inquiry at the investigation. He himself came here and went upon the witness stand; the attorneys representing the State came here and went upon the witness stand; and all the matters such as we are going into now were gone into at that time. Whether the resolution in the first instance seemed to cover the subjects that it is proposed to cover in the pending resolution, the result was that we finally entered into a consideration of the same class of facts that we are proposing to consider now.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I have no further objection to submit to the Senate relative to the proposed investigation. I hope the resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee will be adopted. I pledge that the authorities of the State of West Virginia will give due consideration and every attention to the committee that the Senate will send there.

By the way, it may not be inappropriate for me to refer, as has been so often done in this discussion, to the morning journals. I see in those journals that another committee has preceded the committee to be sent by the Senate into the mining region of West Virginia. At the head of that committee I find one who was lately a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and with him a distinguished Member of the other House in the last Congress, and still a third member. I see the journals report that after they had visited the region and had advised with the governor they stated that they had been misinformed by the false reports sent out from that section and, based upon that misinformation, that they had severely criticized the governor. I mean, of course, Mr. Debs, Mr. Berger, and another gentleman whose name I do not recall.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from West Virginia yield to the senior Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. CHILTON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to that interview. I have it and should like to send it to the desk and have it read as part of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. GOFF. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Parkersburg Sentinel of May 24, 1913.]

SOCIALISTS GUSH OVER HATFIELD—BERGER SAYS HE HAS A DIFFERENT OPINION NOW OF GOVERNOR—DEBS TELLS HATFIELD THAT HE WILL PRINT SOME GOOD THINGS.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., May 24, 1913.

Eugene V. Debs, Socialistic candidate at the last national election for the Presidency of the United States; Victor Berger, of Milwaukee, former Congressman and member of the Socialist Party; and Adolph Germer, a Socialist leader of Illinois, all representing the national Socialist Party, accompanied by John Moore, a labor leader representing Gov. Hatfield, and Paul J. Paulson, member of the International Board of United Mine Workers, left this city this morning for the Paint and Cabin Creek coal fields. It is expected that they will return to-night, and to-morrow they will visit the New River fields.

Berger in a statement to-day said: "I have an entirely different impression to the one I previously had of the West Virginia executive and his attitude toward the workingman;" while Debs told the governor: "You have been placed in a false light. I have said some harsh things of you in print, but now I will correct them." Much data and information was laid before the Socialist leaders by the governor.

Mr. GOFF. That, in substance, was the publication to which I alluded, although not exactly the one that I first observed.

I am not going to detain the Senate longer. I only hope that the fears I expressed at the beginning of this discussion, that the passage of this resolution would establish a precedent that before many days will open up a very Pandora's box in the Senate may be groundless.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will not consent that the resolution may go over? I do not know whether or not unanimous consent has been granted for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was granted, and the Chair announced that the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KERN. The report and the resolution were adopted, as I understand.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; not by any means.

SEVERAL SENATORS. No.

Mr. SMOOT. The Chair announced that the resolution had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Chair so announced.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The matter is one of immediate concern, in view of the announcement the Vice President made that the resolution had been adopted. It is true that the Vice President made that announcement; but while he was making it, and after he had asked if there was objection, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] was upon his feet and addressing the Chair.

Mr. KERN. And stating that he would not object.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That Senator afterwards stated that he would have no further objection, and hoped the resolution would be adopted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understood that what the Chair submitted to the Senate was a request for present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KERN. The request was submitted very distinctly, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BACON. I do not think the Senate so understood; I am sure I did not.

Mr. KERN. The RECORD will show the fact to be as I have stated.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say that this is a most important matter. As I gathered from the reading, the report enlarges the scope of the investigation. I think we ought to have an opportunity, at least, to see what it is. We can not very well judge of a matter of this great importance by simply having the resolution read at the desk. I should like very much to have an opportunity to see the resolution as reported from the committee. Of course, there would be no special reason for that if the resolution had been reported back as it was referred to the committee, because it has been pretty elaborately discussed; but I understand that additional subjects of inquiry are incorporated in the resolution as now reported. If so, I certainly think that we should have an opportunity to consider them. I hope there will be no further objection to that. There is plenty of time for consideration of the matter and for action upon it; and I presume, after the elaborate discussion which has been had, even if it goes over, it will not be delayed by any great amount of discussion. It has already been discussed quite elaborately.

I confess I do not now understand the full scope of the resolution. It is impossible, having so many subjects of inquiry embodied in the resolution at one time, to consider and weigh them all properly on the moment. I hope the Senator will consent to the resolution being printed, so that we may look at it. It will be printed in the RECORD, of course.

SEVERAL SENATORS. It has been printed.

Mr. BACON. I understand it has been printed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No, Mr. President; the resolution as reported to-day never has been printed. There are two or three additional provisions entirely distinct from those contained in the printed resolution. So far as I am concerned, I should also be glad to see the resolution printed and go over, so that every Senator might have an opportunity to study it carefully.

I regard the passage of the resolution as a very serious proposition, and one of somewhat doubtful propriety. I was myself necessarily detained at the meetings of the Finance Committee and of subcommittees, but have reported the resolution as perfected. It seems to me that if any Senator wishes to see the resolution and carefully study it, it should go over and be printed, and he should have the opportunity to examine it.

Mr. GOFF. I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia that upon an examination of the resolution as it now appears, in addition to the many separate and absolutely distinct propositions that are embodied in it relating to the affairs of the State of West Virginia, he will find that in the conclusion there is a broad field for investigating any question, from alpha to omega; so it is certainly broad enough for all purposes. But I have no further objection to present to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the senior Senator from Georgia whether that Senator was in the Chamber when the resolution was brought up?

Mr. BACON. I certainly was; I was in my seat; and I will state to the Chair that I was paying attention to every word, and that if the Chair submitted the question as to the passage of the resolution I certainly was not able to hear him. I understood the Chair to be submitting simply the question of unanimous consent for present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquired as to whether there was any objection, and, hearing none, announced that the resolution was agreed to. It was not a matter that interested the Chair in the least.

Mr. BACON. I will state, with the permission of the Chair, that I think whenever a resolution is adopted in that way, which is not the usual way, and a Senator in his place says he did not understand it, he is entitled to have the question submitted to a vote. It is only sub silentio that it is permissible to pass a resolution or a bill by saying simply that it is not objected to. That is not the way the rules provide. It is only by unanimous consent that it is ever done in that way, and when a Senator says in his place that he did not understand the matter to be submitted he has a right to have it submitted in the way the rules provide.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I distinctly heard what the Vice President said. The question was put, in the first place, as to unanimous consent, and afterwards the resolution was submitted, and the Chair announced the result. The difficulty arises out of the fact that during the morning hour here we can not ascertain what is going on or know what the Chair rules unless we have telegraphic communication with the Chair. There is so much noise and confusion in the Chamber that the Chair would be without power to transact business at all if he did not transact business as he transacted this particular piece of business. Unless we are willing to have order among ourselves in the Chamber we will often find ourselves in just the predicament that we now find ourselves. There is no doubt but that the Chair submitted the two propositions to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I presume he will also agree that the usual way of submitting the question of the passage of a resolution is to submit it to a vote, and that it is only by unanimous consent that the Chair can declare a matter passed as having had no objection to it. When a Senator rises in his place and says that he did not consent to such a submission, that he did not understand such a submission to be made, he has a right to have the submission made in the way the rules provide, which is by a vote of the Senate. That alone is the way in which anything can be passed, unless everybody agrees to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, do I understand that the resolution has been adopted by a vote of the Senate?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to say that the matter had been put to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah understands that this resolution has been adopted as at least one hundred have been adopted since the present occupant of the chair has been here; it was adopted by an inquiry as to whether anyone objected to the resolution. No one objecting, it was announced by the Chair that the resolution was adopted. If we are to have the rule from now forward that everything is to be voted on, it will afford the Chair great pleasure to put the question in each case.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me for just a moment, I will add that Senators around me, like myself, did not understand the Chair to have ever submitted the question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was in my seat, and I did not hear the Chair's statement. I think that is the case with very many Senators sitting about me. I do not know what the resolution is. If it has been read, I have not heard it. I had intended to vote for the original resolution that was introduced and that was discussed for some time. I am personally in favor of this investigation, for reasons which I intend to give, if I have an opportunity, when it is up for discussion. Whether I am in favor of the resolution precisely as it has been reported from the committee I do not know, because I do not know what it is.

I submit that when that is the case, and when there are Senators here upon the floor who say they are not aware of what has been going on, and that they are not familiar with the resolution, the Senator in charge of the resolution ought to submit the matter to the Senate and have the resolution printed, and let the subject go over until we can see what it is. I hope the Senator from Indiana will consent to that course.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, there is one thing about which there is no sort of disagreement, and that is that unanimous consent was given for the immediate consideration of the resolution. All agree to that. That was distinctly heard and distinctly understood. The only point of difference comes up in respect to those Senators who did not hear the Chair put the question on the adoption of the resolution, or ask if there was objection to the resolution, and declare it carried.

I am entirely willing that the latter part of the action may be recalled; but after these weeks of delay I am unwilling that the unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into shall be set aside. I am willing that the matter shall be open for further debate, but I am not willing that the unanimous-consent agreement shall be set aside, because that was distinctly understood.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is no proposition to set aside the unanimous-consent agreement. Unanimous consent undoubtedly was given for the present consideration of this matter, but that does not in any manner conflict with the request to have it go over. When it is before the Senate, there being no unanimous consent to vote upon it to-day, it is subject to disposition just as any other matter would be when it is the regular order. So there is no conflict in that regard. The proposition to have it go over is not at all in conflict with the unanimous consent which was given; and the Senator would do me an injustice if he understood that I meant anything of that kind, because I did not.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I only understood that the Senator wanted further delay. The Senator's attitude during the discussion was that of hostility, and I assume that he desires delay. I insist that any Senator here can, by listening to the reading of this short resolution now, understand it. It is plain. There is no occasion for further delay.

Mr. BACON. I am not sure that I know upon what the Senator bases his statement that in the discussion my attitude was one of hostility. I did not take part in the discussion. I think possibly I asked some question as to a matter of law, or something of that kind; but I certainly did not discuss the resolution in any particular; I took no part in the debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no pride in his ruling; and as there seems to have been some doubt that Senators heard what the Chair did rule, the Chair now announces that unanimous consent has been given for the present consideration of the resolution, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to congratulate the Chair upon his fairness. I remember distinctly that at the last session of Congress, when a question was before the Senate in which I was very much interested and which I had been discussing, a Senator came and distracted my attention for a moment; and while the Senator was engaging me in conversation the Senator who was then temporarily in the chair announced the passage of the resolution in the same way the present occupant of the chair did, and refused to reconsider it upon my protest. Upon a vote of the Senate he was sustained by a majority of 1, and the Senator who has made the greatest objection in this instance then voted to sustain the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the Senator referred to me or not. I do not recall the incident. I was certainly not in the chair.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator was not in the chair, but it was a case that attracted a good deal of attention, and we insisted on a roll call as to whether the matter would be reconsidered for the purpose of discussing it further and offering some amendment. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact. I think the Chair has done exactly the right thing.

Mr. BACON. The then occupant of the chair, I presume, must have been my distinguished friend the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition whatever to discuss that matter. It is ancient history. As the temporary occupant of the chair I endeavored honestly to administer the rules of the Senate, and I am quite content to leave the matter as it appears in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I think we ought to keep in mind the fact that that was not a parallel case. That was a request for the entry of a unanimous-consent order. This is simply the question of the adoption of a resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are quite different.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, upon the question pending I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that when the vote is taken it be taken by yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona demands the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I do not have the opportunity to know exactly what is in the resolutions. I did not anticipate that so grave a matter would be presented for our decision without the opportunity to read them. I have heard them read and I have some general idea about them.

There has been no question submitted to the Senate since I have had the honor to be a Member of it which is quite as far-reaching in its influences in some directions as these resolutions. It may be that upon an examination of them, if I had the opportunity, I would find some things specified in them that I would be willing to have an investigation about. As I could catch the reading of them, there are some things that there may be properly an investigation of. There may be a question of investigation as to whether or not there was peonage in a State, with a view, I presume, not of correcting the evil by any decision which might be reached by the Senate, because it would have no power in that direction, but for the purpose of seeing whether or not any legislation was required to prevent that which has been agreed upon in this country as a violation of law and a violation of public policy.

There may be other things, as to labor conditions. I do not mean to say that there are none. On the contrary, I think there are some things in the resolutions which can properly be investigated. But as I catch the reading of them there are some other things that I do not think those of us who have as high a consideration as I hope I have for my State would be willing to see pass.

Mr. President, we have reached a very unfortunate stage in our political history if we have come to a point where it is to be a conceded fact that the States have no functions to perform that are not under the supervision of the General Government. The old fable of my ox and your bull is one which has a very great and solemn truth in it. It may seem to be a very simple matter for us to pass a resolution to investigate another State, but it is a very serious proposition when we take it to ourselves whether or not our State is to be investigated.

I am not speaking, Mr. President, as to whether or not conditions should be investigated in a State. I realize the fact that labor has a great battle, and I very largely sympathize with it in that battle, and I have testified to it on this floor not only by my speech but by measures which I have endeavored to have enacted. But for that reason, Mr. President, I am not willing that the great fundamental principles which underlie our great dual system of government should be utterly disregarded and trampled under foot.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What principle does the Senator allude to in reference to these resolutions?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a few moments, although I confess I am unprepared for this discussion, as I did not anticipate it, I will endeavor to state the principle, if the Senator will give me the opportunity.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but the reason I asked was that I assumed from the Senator's statement he thinks we are investigating the State as a State.

Mr. BACON. Yes; that is what I am going to try to call attention to, if I can.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think we are.

Mr. BACON. When you investigate the official acts of a coordinate branch of a State, you are investigating that State. When you investigate the decisions of a court of a State, especially when those decisions are, as has been represented here, bound up and included with executive acts, you are investigating a State. What constitutes the State in that sense in which I am speaking of it? There are three coordinate branches of every State—the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. If you investigated the official acts of them all, you certainly would be investigating the State. If you investigate the official acts of one of them, you are investigating the State.

It may be, Mr. President, and may very well be, that a State may be investigated if it relates to a matter in which it has impinged upon or violated something in which the Federal Government is the superior, in which it has ultimate power and control. If it is a violation of a law of Congress enacted in the exercise of its constitutional functions, such for instance as the peonage law, that may be a subject matter of investigation. But when you come to investigate, under a Senate resolution, the question whether a State court has decided right or wrong in the enforcement of a State statute it is another matter altogether.

Mr. President, if there were no other remedy for this alleged wrong there might be some strong defense, if not justification, for any interference on the part of the Federal Government through its legislative branch. But come right down to the point, what is the investigation proposed here with reference to the decision of this court?

Before I go on with that, I want to say that I utterly disagree with the decision of the West Virginia court. I want to go further and say I utterly condemn it. I want to say that only my great respect for the distinguished former jurist and present Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] causes me to withhold even stronger terms. I do not think it can be justified at all, either in the forum of reason or of precedent, that when there has been domestic insurrection, and when order has been restored and the authority of the State reestablished, that either through executive order or otherwise, although there is martial law, that the laws of a State can be set aside, that the civil authorities of a State can be subordinated, that the civil courts can be for the time abolished, and men can be put upon trial before a military commission and sent to penal servitude for a violation of civil law. I have no patience with that proposition, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I note that in this report the fourth paragraph reads as follows:

> To investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

Does that not present a Federal question under the Federal Constitution of which the Senate can take jurisdiction beyond peradventure?

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, the resolution may be so phrased as to make it technically within the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, but we know the fact from the discussion which has been had here that the violation of law which is to be investigated is a violation of the laws of West Virginia; not that there is any doubt about that, but the charge is that the court which tried them had no right to try them for the infraction of the laws of West Virginia; that the court which tried them was a military court; that the authority of the State had been asserted and was being maintained; and that the civil courts should have tried them. That, as I understand, is the issue.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. It occurs to me that, while it may be true that one of the questions is as to whether the State laws had been complied with, immediately connected with it is the question as to whether or not a citizen of the United States has been deprived of his rights and privileges in violation of the Federal Constitution. As it seems to me, if it be conceded that we have a right to inquire into the latter question, the mere fact that the inquiry may be so broad as to include within it these other matters incidentally should not in the least interfere with the examination.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I will try to answer him before I get through, but I wanted to go on with some degree of continuity in the line of thought which I was trying to present to the Senate.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. GOFF. Did I understand the Senator from Georgia to mean that it is improper at all times for a military commission to try a civil cause?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I will endeavor to state what my attitude is in regard to that matter. I understand the question propounded by him, and I think I will reply to it.

Mr. GOFF. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me just to call his attention, then, to one fact, and he can discuss that as he elucidates his position? I will state the position I have taken. Bear in mind the distinction between a court-martial and a military commission. The court-martial tries only those people in the military service. The military commission tries those not in the military service, but within the zone or strip of territory where the insurrection exists. The theory of the martial law is that the civil law in that place is temporarily suspended; otherwise there would be no martial law. Now, then, in that place where martial law prevails our contention has been that the court-martial should try any offenses of a party in the military service, but the military commission or court would try those not in the military service.

Mr. BACON. I will put it on the broadest ground the Senator may desire it. So far as that is concerned, I draw no distinction between a military court-martial and a military commission. They are all of them at last under martial law and operating as under military authority. That is not what I object to. Whether it is a military commission or a court-martial makes no difference to me.

Now, my proposition is this: There is a reason why under certain circumstances civil offenses are taken cognizance of by military authorities, but in every such instance it is because of the fact that conditions are such that the civil power can not be brought into play. For instance, when an army invades a foreign country and takes possession of a certain area of that country and is in control of it, there must be some authority; there must be some way in which controversies can be adjusted, as well as in which order may be preserved. If an army of one country is in possession of the country of another, it can not set up civil authority unless it is going to annex that country. It can not set up civil authority in the foreign country, because the civil authority can only derive its power from the country in which it is situated. The invading people are foreigners to them, and yet they have the responsibility of maintaining order in that country where there can be no civil authority.

Therefore it is that under such circumstances, well recognized in the books and by the universal practice in cases of war, the military authorities exercise control not only for the purpose of punishing offenses, but for the purpose of keeping order in that country; for the purpose, if you please, of adjusting controversies between parties in that country; for the purpose of doing justice between parties in that country so long as military control continues. It is because of the absolute necessity of the case that there can be no civil power there. The only authority which could establish civil power has been overthrown, and when the military power asserts its authority and secures power it can only accomplish all these necessary ends through the means of military authority.

But, Mr. President, in the case of a domestic insurrection the matter is altogether different; the reasoning does not apply. Martial law is declared in a case of domestic insurrection because the civil power is unable to cope with it; but when martial law has been declared and martial power has restored order there is then present the very authority to protect the courts in the administration of the law. That is the distinction. The same military power which would sustain the authority of a military court is present to sustain the authority of the civil court, which can then resume its functions.

What can be justified in the case of martial law in a foreign country and a military commission and military courts in a foreign country when it has taken possession of a certain part of the territory of that foreign country can not be justified in a case where there has been domestic insurrection and where by means of military power and military authority order has been restored and where the civil court can be protected in the exercise of its functions. This is because the very power which restores order can protect the courts in the exercise of their functions. Therefore there is no excuse whatever; and the position which I take in opposing some of these resolutions has no possible reference to any justification for what I understand to have occurred in that regard in the State of West Virginia, for personally I utterly condemn what occurred in that State.

When the domestic violence was such in West Virginia that the governor, in the exercise of his proper authority, declared martial law and when, in response to that declaration, martial power was interposed and put down the domestic insurrection, and when it not only put down the domestic insurrection but had supreme power over it, the same power, Mr. President, which enabled it to call for a military commission enabled it to call to its courts to resume their function; and that alone, in my opinion, was that which could have been properly and legally done in the State of West Virginia.

So that I come now to the point of condemning as fully as does the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] what occurred in the State of West Virginia. I say "condemning"—I mean personally; I do not think it called upon the Senate officially to do it—condemning what the governor did in authorizing this commission; condemning what was done under and by that commission. Believing, as I do, it to be utterly illegal, believing it to be utterly inconsistent with the genius of our institutions, believing it to be indefensible under any reasoning or under any precedent, the only question is what ought we to do about it?

Mr. President, if the time has come when the official acts of a State through its courts can not be depended upon to establish and do justice and maintain order, if the time has come when that particular function which the Supreme Court of the United States times without number has said to be the function of the State can no longer be left to the States, if the time has come when the States can no longer be relied upon to accomplish and perform that duty, then, Mr. President, we have reached the sad period when our dual system of government is a failure.

Do not let me be misunderstood, Mr. President. I recognize the fact that there are things which can be adjudicated by State courts in which the act of a State court is not and should not be considered as final; I realize the fact that a State court may violate a right which is guaranteed by the United States; I realize the fact that it can and has frequently happened that a State court may decide a question arising under the Constitution of the United States in a manner which I should consider wrong and which the Supreme Court of the United States finally decides to be wrong; but that does not call for or justify an investigation by the United States Congress. Why? Because the law has not left the man remediless who has that injustice done to him, whether it be one man or a thousand men. The law has not left him to a State court if the State court violates a right under the Constitution of the United States or under a law passed in pursuance thereof, but it has provided a means by which the great tribunal which sits in this building can review the action of that State court and set it aside and annul it if wrong has been done.

Mr. President, when the Supreme Court of the United States reviews such an action and determines that that action of a State court or that judgment of a State court is an illegal judgment, what they say about it amounts to something; what they say about it corrects the evil; what they say about it remedies the wrong. But, Mr. President, when we investigate the action of a State court and pass our judgment upon it, what does it amount to?

Sir, it is alleged—and I have no doubt it is true—that certain parties were arrested in West Virginia; that they were tried by a military court or a military commission; that they were sentenced to the penitentiary for violation of the laws of West Virginia; and that they are now in confinement in the penitentiary under that sentence. I believe that judgment absolutely illegal. I have not a doubt to-day that they are illegally detained under that judgment.

If we shall pass this resolution and the committee shall come to the conclusion that I have already reached, that it is illegal, and they come back to the Senate, and the Senate passes a resolution affirming and agreeing with what that committee says, and announces that their confinement is illegal; that the court which assumed to try them had no jurisdiction; that the court violated every principle of our Government; and that those men should be released; does our finding in that matter help those men? Does it release them? Does it unlock the prison doors? Certainly not.

But, Mr. President, if the course is pursued which the Constitution of the United States intends and prescribes shall be pursued; if from the judgment of the Supreme Court of West Virginia an appeal on writ of error is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States says that that State court had no jurisdiction; that that court violated every principle of Federal or State Government known to the United States, and particularly the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, and not only so, but violated the traditions and the principles which have come down to us from an ancestry of hundreds of years—which I think they have done—when the Supreme Court of the United States says that, the prison doors are unlocked and the men go free.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand the Senator from Georgia to take the position that the action of the governor in providing for this military commission and the action of the military commission in undertaking to try people for offenses under the civil law is wholly unwarranted, and, if I understand him, constitute a violation of the due process of law clause of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. BACON. Yes; I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with the Senator as to that. The Senator says, however, conceding that to be so, Congress has no function to perform in the matter at all, as I understand him. The Senator says that these men have a remedy; that they can go to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is quite true. He says that Congress can do nothing so far as those individual men are concerned; and I think that is true. We could enter no order here, we could enter no judgment, that would liberate those individuals. But may not Congress, after it has gathered the information upon this subject, have some other function to perform in connection with it?

Mr. BACON. I grant you that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I invite the Senator's attention to the language of the first section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, which is:

> Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

And the concluding clause of the fourteenth amendment is:

> SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

May it not be that circumstances may develop in this case or in some other case where the provisions of the fourteenth amendment are being violated, that Congress may have some legislative duty to perform; and in that view may it not be valuable to Congress to procure accurate information with reference to these transactions in West Virginia?

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; Mr. President, there is no doubt about it that under the particular provisions of that amendment there is scarcely anything affecting human personal rights that would not possibly give opportunity for some legislation by Congress; but there is a greater question than that in this. As I have had occasion to say about other things, even if we have the power, it is not always expedient to exercise it. But, Mr. President, the Senator does not deceive himself; that is not at all the purpose of this resolution. There is no thought that the laws of the United States are not now sufficient to protect, under a judgment of the Supreme Court, a man from illegal imprisonment following a trial by a military court in a State. Does the Senator think there is?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt that the particular individuals who have been convicted by this military tribunal have a perfect remedy. They may by writ of error carry their case from the State court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and if the Supreme Court finds that the action of the military tribunal was in violation of the due process of law clause of the Constitution, it may order them released.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Now, I hope the Senator will simply answer that question and not undertake to make a speech in the middle of my remarks, because it is very difficult to make a speech unless one can proceed with some continuity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator did not want me to make a short speech in answer to the question, he ought not to have asked me the question.

Mr. BACON. I asked the Senator the question if he thought there was any doubt about the fact that there are now upon the statute books laws which would give a remedy and permit the Supreme Court of the United States to release any man from imprisonment in any State where he had been condemned to that imprisonment under circumstances such as those under which these men in West Virginia were convicted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. And the Senator said "yes." I wanted him to answer that question; and when he answered it I thought that I ought to go on.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The difficulty is that the Senator undertakes to say when I am through answering, instead of permitting me to say so.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say that there was a remedy for these men.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. That is the only question I asked him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The answer might have been sufficient for the Senator's purposes; but I had not completed it. If the Senator objects, however, I shall not proceed.

Mr. BACON. I will not object to the Senator at the proper time elaborating that just as much as he wishes, but in the course of my argument I wanted to know whether there is any issue on that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So far as these individuals are concerned, I answer the Senator that they have a perfect remedy; but whether or not the laws are sufficient to deal with this whole subject matter, I do not know. It may be that we could enact laws that would deal with similar situations in the future, that would deal in some way with these illegal tribunals that are attempted to be set up.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have no possible sympathy with what has occurred in West Virginia. So far as I have heard the discussion and so far as I have heard the statements made by the Senator from Indiana as to what has occurred, I condemn it without the slightest qualification. I think these men have been treated with great injustice—and when I say "these men" I am speaking of the general mass. The particular men who have been arrested and tried by the military courts I think have been tried in violation of law and in violation of every principle which underlies free government, and particularly our free Government. I can not be misunderstood about that. I want to see every remedy applied that is a proper remedy; but, Mr. President, we have no higher duty than to maintain the relative authority and the powers of the Federal Government and of the States. As I heard a Senator remark this morning, such a proposition as this a few years ago would have absolutely set the whole country in a ferment; but step by step we are proceeding to the utter overthrow of every power which it was sought to retain for the States. They had these powers originally; it was sought to retain them in the States, and the Constitution expressly provided that they should retain them; yet, Mr. President, we are confronted with a situation here where as grave a matter as this was to be passed upon sub silentio, without a word.

Sir, I feel the embarrassment which every Senator must feel when he knows the powerful sentiment there is behind these resolutions. Every Senator must feel an embarrassment when he stands up in antagonism to them.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. KERN. Has the Senator stopped to consider the powerful influences that are opposed to this resolution?

Mr. BACON. I will consider them, too.

Mr. KERN. I will ask the Senator if he would weigh the power of capital, the power of great organized wealth, on one side against the power of the workingman on the other as to which way the scales would preponderate?

Mr. BACON. No; not at all. I will not be misunderstood on that point before I get through; I do not think my record in the Senate will cause me to be misunderstood on it; and I do not think the implication in the inquiry of the honorable Senator will cause me to be misunderstood on it.

I repeat, Mr. President, that I fully realize the embarrassment to which I have referred. I presume that I feel it as much as any Senator here, but there are other things to be considered, not what the Senator from Indiana would seem to imply, not that it is a question of the rights of the laboring man on the one side and of capital on the other, but it is the question of whether or not to accomplish what is a good purpose on the part of the Senator from Indiana—one that does credit to his heart and to every impulse of his nature—we should recklessly or carelessly endanger the great institutions of this country. I repeat, Mr. President, that we are not without a remedy for the existing evils. The laws are sufficient as they stand, and, if not, circumstances are sufficiently known for us to enact other laws to remedy them. When a man has suffered a wrong there ought to be a remedy for it, and when a man has suffered a wrong the right remedy should be applied; and who doubts, Mr. President, what that right remedy is here?

I am not speaking about many of the subdivisions of this resolution. I would vote for the resolution if it were confined within the limits of some of its parts. I should have no objection to voting to find out whether or not peonage existed in West Virginia. I should not object to voting for any part of the resolution which relates to matters properly within Federal jurisdiction and where a proper remedy can be applied as a result of the investigation. It may be that a remedy is necessary in the way of further legislation in order to protect these people against peonage. Therefore I should not object to that and to some other parts of the resolution relating to Federal questions.

There are other branches of the resolution to which I do not object. But the particular part of the resolution to which I do object is the part which undertakes to investigate the official acts of the officials of the State of West Virginia. That is what I object to, and that is all I object to. I object to an investigation by the Senate of the official acts of the officials of a State.

I do not mean to say that they should never be investigated. Occasions may arise when they should be investigated; but they should be very extreme cases to justify it, and they should be occasions where no other remedy could be applied.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho rises. I do not know whether he wishes to interrupt me or not. I shall not object if he does. I hope, however, it will not be for anything more than a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask what more critical situation could arise than that of trying citizens by military tribunal in time of peace and when the courts are open.

Mr. BACON. Any situation where the law does not apply the remedy or does not provide for it.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the law may apply the remedy, provided the man who is in jail has a sufficient amount of money to hire lawyers and to get to the Supreme Court of the United States; but in the meantime he is in jail, and if he happens to be out of money he may remain there indefinitely.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that is an argument that I should not have expected from the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will allow me to develop it for just a moment, perhaps I can win back his respect.

Mr. BACON. The Senator would have to do a great deal to forfeit my respect.

Mr. BORAH. I undertake to say to the Senator that where a State has fixed and established the status of its citizens as the State of West Virginia seems to be doing, it is not the business of the United States Government to stand by and let the individual citizens fight it out. It is the business of the Federal Government as such to take note of it, and fight for the status of the citizens regardless of their individual rights. It becomes a matter of protecting citizenship and not simply of releasing a particular individual.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has my unbounded respect and admiration as a lawyer, but I confess that what he has just said does not contribute toward increasing it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says I had his respect. I hope I still have it.

Mr. BACON. The argument of the Senator is just this, Mr. President, that wherever a man in a State was illegally imprisoned, wherever a court had acted without jurisdiction and a man had been imprisoned as a result of it, the Congress of the United States could investigate the matter for the purpose of releasing him and finding out whether or not he had money to take his case to a higher court.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; the Senator states it a little bit strongly. What I mean to say is that where the provisions of the United States Constitution have been suspended—where men are being tried, as the Senator says, in violation of every principle known to our free institutions—it is not the business of the Federal Government to stand idly by and say to the citizen, "You, in your individual capacity, shall fight out this thing."

There are two citizenships in this country; there is a dual citizenship. There is one citizenship of the State and one of the Federal Government. Wherever the citizenship of the Federal Government is interfered with it is the business of the Congress of the United States to find out what are the facts, and, if legislation is necessary, to legislate upon the subject.

I do not contend that we can go there and release the citizen who is in jail in that individual instance. But there is a future, and we investigate for the purpose of legislating with reference to the future. The court simply deals with the facts as they appear in the past. We investigate with a view of providing against recurring incidents, if legislation can do so.

Mr. BACON. It is simply a question of degree whenever a man is illegally confined. It is simply a question of degree whenever a man is confined under an alleged usurpation of power by any tribunal. The case we have in view is one extreme in degree. The case of a man arrested and tried by a military tribunal is extreme; but that is no more illegal than the case of the incarceration of any other man by any court that did not have jurisdiction. It is simply a question of degree, as I say. One may be a minor matter which does not excite our indignation. Another may be a grave matter, an extreme matter, which does excite our indignation to the highest point; but in each case it is simply a question of illegal imprisonment. In each case, to bring it down more directly to a Federal question, it is a case of a man being deprived of his liberty without due process of law. And the Senator's proposition would justify Federal interference in the minor case as fully as in the extreme case. The principle is the same in each.

The books are full of cases of men who were in imprisonment and who raised the issue that they were deprived of their liberty without due process of law. I have no doubt that every State in this Union has cases now pending where that question can be raised. But while it is a question of degree, the principle does not apply to one of high degree any more than it does to one of low degree.

If it be true, as the learned Senator from Idaho says, that whenever a man is in prison in violation of law it is within the proper province of the Senate of the United States to investigate it, there is just as much right to investigate a case where a man has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law under civil authority as where he has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law under military authority. One excites our indignation more than the other, but the principle applies to the one as strongly as it does to the other.

I repeat, Mr. President, I realize the fact that this is an embarrassing thing to do. I repeat that it embarrasses me, and I am not indifferent to that embarrassment. But I want to say that I consider that the obligation upon me is one which I can not ignore. If any man or any organization in the world has a high obligation, a Senator of the United States above every other is under obligation to see to it that the rights of the State he represents shall not be jeopardized, either by direct invasion or by giving consent to that which may thereafter justify the invasion of his own State. Further than that, not only is he under an obligation to see to it that the rights of his State are not invaded, not only is he under an obligation to see that a precedent is not set which may thereafter cause or justify an invasion of his State, but he is under a high obligation to see to it, even where technically it may be justified, that that right is not exercised unless it is absolutely necessary for the purposes for which the Congress of the United States was organized, or for which the Government of the United States exercises its powers.

I have stood on this floor endeavoring within my limited abilities to speak for the rights of labor. I believe in the right of labor to combine. I think the power of capital is so great and so easily exercised, concentrated as it is in the hands of a few men, that this great army of laborers can properly protect themselves only by organizing and by having their representatives to speak for them, and by so arranging that when they speak for them they will be in a position to command the respect and the acquiescence of those for whom they speak. Not only in the last Congress, but in this Congress, I introduced a bill, and to the extent of my ability I expect to press it to a successful conclusion, which embodies the principle which is contained in the amendment which was put in the appropriation bill which we had under discussion a short time since and puts that principle in a practical and effective shape—that for laborers to meet together and to agree upon measures which shall protect their interests, which shall enable them to have more time for recreation and shorter hours for labor, and shall enable them to secure an adequate return for their labor, shall not render them amenable to any construction which may be put upon the antitrust law commonly known as the Sherman law.

I have faced harsh criticism by some friends at home because I have thus stood for the rights of labor. I have had those, not simply at home, but in the large centers, visit their criticisms upon me because I would not do what the question of the Senator from Indiana would imply that I should do—weigh the rights of these men against the power of capital. I have not hesitated to stand for these men, although capital said "no." I have not been one, either here or elsewhere, to weigh the rights of these men against the power of capital and to give my judgment in favor of capital. I have weighed, Mr. President, and as a result of that weighing I have thought it to be my duty to stand in my place and see to it that these men have the right to combine. I do not think they have the right to combine to the extent of violence, to the extent of saying that another man shall not work if he desires to work. I do not approve of anything of that kind. But I do believe men should have the right peacefully to assemble and to agree upon measures by which they can more effectively cope with the great power of the concentrated capital with which they are engaged in productive enterprise. I do believe that they should have the right to do that which is necessary to contribute to their comfort, to their improvement, and to their having more time for recreation and for reading and for study and for shorter hours of labor.

All that, Mr. President, I approve. I have weighed the contest between capital and labor to the extent that I have come to the conclusion that they are to be justified in all proper and peaceful measures to bring about such ends.

But, Mr. President, is the fear, the apprehension that I feel—I do not say anybody else feels it—that those whom I have thus sought to defend may be offended by what I now do, to cause me to fail to stand for what I believe to be not only the interests of my State but the interests of this whole Government; that the line between Federal and State authority should not only be clearly drawn but observed; and that where one crosses the other we should be careful to do nothing which shall disturb the great fundamental principle that as to all local matters the State is supreme and has the responsibility, and that wherever it is charged that the State has invaded powers which the Constitution of the United States confers upon the Federal Government the test as to whether or not there has been a violation shall be made strictly in accordance with the provisions of law made for the purpose of correcting an evil of that kind?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me the Senator's argument finally reaches this result, and that is the impropriety of the Senate doing it rather than the invasion of the rights of the State. The Senator says there is a tribunal which may do all these things and set aside all these acts of the State officers?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. If it were done through the Supreme Court or the proper judicial tribunal, as I understand the Senator, he would not consider it an invasion of State rights?

Mr. BACON. I certainly would not.

Mr. BORAH. Then does not the argument of the Senator resolve itself into the impropriety of the Senate doing it, rather than the proposition that it is an invasion of State rights?

Mr. BACON. Not at all; it does not follow at all as the Senator suggests.

Mr. BORAH. If the Supreme Court, in a case——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, he has asked me a question, and I will submit to another interruption when I have answered it.

The Senator from Idaho asked me the question whether I would consider the intervention of the Supreme Court, through regular processes, by which the act of a State should be reviewed and overturned, an invasion of State rights. I said no. Then the Senator asked the question, if I understood him correctly, whether it would not be any more an invasion of the rights of a State if done through an investigation by the Senate. Am I correct in my statement of the Senator's position?

Mr. BORAH. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I think I am correct, and therefore I will proceed, Mr. President.

It is not an invasion of State rights for any constitutional power to be exercised by the Federal Government in the way in which the Constitution and the laws provide that they shall be exercised. There are some things which can be done by courts which can not be done by legislatures. There are some things that can be done by courts or legislatures which can not be done by the executive. It would not be an invasion of State rights for the Supreme Court of the United States to declare illegal the judgment of the Supreme Court of West Virginia upholding the judgment of this court-martial or commission and to set these men free. That would not be an invasion of State rights. But for the President of the United States to send an army there to turn them loose would be; and for the Senate of the United States to send its marshal there and turn them loose would be; and for the Senate of the United States to make an investigation which can not even go to the extent of turning anyone loose is none the less an invasion of the rights and dignity and responsibility of the State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will refresh his recollection of the argument which was made by the very able attorneys in the old case of Cohens against Virginia, when the Supreme Court of the United States had before it the question of reviewing the action of the State court, he will find it was contended precisely as the Senator is now contending, that it was an invasion of State rights.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; but, then, it has been settled the other way.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. Then, as I say again, it resolves itself into the proposition rather of the impropriety of the Senate doing it than the fact that the action of the State authorities is set aside.

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President; I do not think the Senator is logical. I do go to the extent of saying that. It is an impropriety for us to do a great many things which we have the power to do, if perchance it is not necessary to be done and if the evil of doing it is great. I put my objection to this particular part of the resolution—and there are some parts I do not object to—upon two grounds; first, that it is not a legal act, that it is not a proper act; and, second, that, even if legal and proper, it is not a necessary act, and no good can come from it, but great harm may come of it. I put it on both grounds, if that will suit the contention of the learned Senator.

Mr. President, we ought not to shut our eyes to the possibilities which may flow from a precedent set here nem con. I do not know, if the yeas and nays had not been called, that I would have said anything. Possibly I might have yielded to my feeling of embarrassment, as uncourageous as that would have been; possibly I might have stood still and said nothing. I certainly would not have voted yes if there had been no yeas and nays ordered; I might have remained silent, as little as I would have been satisfied to do so; but when I am put to the responsibility, being compelled to either say "yes" or "no," I am not going to say something which in some future day may be presented to me when they seek to investigate my State; and I want my reasons known.

Mr. President, I am never going to stand on this floor and either myself consent to an investigation of the authorities of my State nor am I going to consent to any investigation of another State and establish a precedent under which the authorities of my State can hereafter be investigated.

I repeat, I do not say that I would never consent to any investigation in my State. There are conditions which may arise that would justify an investigation there or in any other State. But I am talking about an investigation of the official acts of my State. I am not going to do it. I am not going to let the embarrassment that I feel in casting this vote induce me to do it.

Mr. President, let every Senator stop and think. Do they want to establish a precedent by which congressional committees are going to investigate the action of their courts and of their legislatures and of their governors, especially when it is not necessary and when the law points out the plain way in which the remedy can be applied? And, sir, the more especially as the Senator from Idaho rises in his place and says these men have already been released. You establish such a precedent when men have already been released which will come back to plague us. A time when the poisoned chalice is to be commended to our own lips may come; and, Mr. President, if so, and if I have to drink the bitter dregs, no man shall say that I first pressed it to the lips of another.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have sometimes, Mr. President, thought that I am more of a State-rights man than many Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I have listened with a great deal of interest and profit to the argument the Senator from Georgia has made. I now rise to ask the Senator from Georgia if he will not carefully examine the resolution and move to strike out such portions of it as cover the ground he has traversed?

Mr. BACON. I would be more than delighted to do it if I had time. It was for that reason I asked the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to let it go over. I would not have said a word if there had been an opportunity to examine the objectionable parts of the resolution and if the objectionable parts could have been eliminated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some parts of the resolution we can vote for.

Mr. BACON. Some of them I could vote for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Others we ought not to vote for, as I interpret them, and we ought to have an opportunity to divide them and to have a separate vote on those parts.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that if the resolution goes over I will endeavor to confine my objections to certain features of the resolution and give my support to others, although they may even be of doubtful character; but if those about which I have no doubt and those which I think would be extremely dangerous should be adopted and established as a precedent, I must object. If I am compelled to vote on the resolution as a whole, I must vote against it as a whole, even if I stand alone in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will formally ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until after the morning business on the next day that the Senate meets.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Indiana will agree to that course. There will be no delay about it.

Mr. KERN. That would necessitate a meeting of the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not necessarily. It would be taken up the next day the Senate sits.

Mr. KERN. I can not consent to any further procrastination about the matter. The resolution was objected to. It was amended to suit the Senators from West Virginia, and they have both said that they have no objection to the consideration of the resolution. I have no objection to having it go over until to-morrow, but I must insist that the resolution shall be disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition, the Senator knows, to procrastinate the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KERN. Of course I do not attribute anything of that kind to the Senator. If it is convenient to Senators and to the Senate to meet to-morrow——

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KERN. If the Senator will allow me, I will take the sense of the Senate on the proposition. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until to-morrow at 2 o'clock p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until 2 o'clock p. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I ask unanimous consent—and I appeal to the Senator from Indiana—that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until after the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. KERN. And let there be unanimous consent that it shall be the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and it will be taken up immediately after the morning business.

Mr. KERN. If there is unanimous consent, very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be understood, by unanimous consent, that the resolution is the unfinished business for to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in conformity to the notice I gave on May 22 I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 19, to authorize the allowance of an additional clerk to Senators having less than three.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to considering that resolution, but if the Senator's motion prevails the unfinished business will be displaced.

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily, if we dispose of the resolution to-night.

Mr. BORAH. If we dispose of it; but if the motion prevails and we do not dispose of it, then it becomes the unfinished business and the resolution which we have had up to-day is displaced.

If the Senator will ask unanimous consent that it be taken up and considered, in that way it would not have the effect of displacing the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that, but I have already received notice I would not have a unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he give notice he will move to proceed to the consideration of this resolution after the other matter is disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well. Then, in order not to interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement that the resolution which has been up shall be the unfinished business, I give notice that immediately upon the disposition of the unfinished business to-morrow I will make the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the Senator's notice?

Mr. SMOOT. I simply gave notice that to-morrow at the conclusion of the unfinished business I shall move to take up Senate resolution 19.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will move to take it up?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 27, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 1.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Arizona in session assembled, do hereby memorialize and petition your honorable body that—

Whereas a great hardship has been caused to certain occupants on school land who settled thereon before the survey thereof, and who subsequently discovered that they had settled on school land, and were unable to secure title to the land so occupied as a town site, and that the State is unable to select lands in lieu of the land so settled upon: Therefore

Your memorialists respectfully pray that such legislation be enacted by Congress as to enable the State to select other lands in lieu of school sections settled upon and occupied as towns, to the end that the State may be able to make such lieu selections and leave the lands so occupied open for entry for town-site purposes, and that the occupants may thereby be enabled to obtain title to the lands occupied by them.

The secretary of the senate is hereby directed to forward a copy of this memorial to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and a copy to Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST and Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, United States Senators from Arizona, and to Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Representative in Congress from Arizona, and our Senators and Representative are earnestly requested to do all in their power to bring about the legislation herein prayed.

May 9, 1913. Read third time in full and passed the house by the following vote: 29 ayes, — noes, 4 absent, 2 excused.

H. H. LINNEY,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate May 3, 1913, by a vote of 14 ayes, — noes, 4 absent, 1 excused.

W. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution 4.

THE STATE SENATE, FIRST LEGISLATURE, FOURTH SESSION.

Whereas it has come to our knowledge that Arizona has as yet about 28,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land, or about twice as much as any other State in the Union; and

Whereas the number of filings in the land office have amounted to about 500 a month for the last past several months, and the land office is far behind with its work, and that the number of filings would be greatly increased after the lands were surveyed; and

Whereas the State of New Mexico has 6 land offices, the State of Nevada has 7, Montana 8, Colorado 10; and

Whereas there are none of the Western States that have less than five land offices; and

Whereas Arizona has but one land office, the said land office being far behind with its work and getting further behind: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this legislature that there is an urgent necessity for the establishing of two more land offices in the State of Arizona; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the General Land Office, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each of our Members in Congress.

Passed the senate on the 5th day of May, 1913.

W. G. CUNNIFF.

May 9, 1913. Read the third time in full and passed the house by following vote: 27 ayes, 6 absent, 2 excused.

H. H. LINNEY,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. CATRON. I have received a letter from the New Mexico Wool Growers' Association and also several telegrams in the nature of memorials from citizens of my State, remonstrating against free wool. I ask that the letter and telegrams be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter and telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW MEXICO WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Albuquerque, N. Mex., May 20, 1913.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We wired you to-day as follows: "We most emphatically protest against free wool, as it will positively ruin the sheep industry in New Mexico. We need 35 per cent ad valorem to exist."

I wish to inform you that our cowmen are contracting for steers in old Mexico, and these contracts contain a provision that whatever duty is taken off from the cattle shall be added to the price paid for the cattle in old Mexico. In fact, all cattle and live stock being contracted in old Mexico for importation to the United States at this time contains the above-mentioned provision. Now, how can the reduction in the duties on live stock cheapen the cost of meat to the consumer? I do not believe that a single American citizen will profit by reducing these schedules.

Trusting this information may be of value to you, I am, as ever,

Truly, your friend,

CHARLES CHADWICK, Secretary.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Free wool will ruin us. Should have at least 35 per cent ad valorem duty to continue in business. Woolen manufactures should be entered on a pure-fabric basis and shoddies in every form prohibited from entry. Fight for us.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., May 23, 1913.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There are over 200 woolgrowers in this county alone who are seriously affected by tariff agitation and their business stagnated. Will positively state that 95 per cent of these growers are heavy borrowers, paying 10 per cent interest on money. Again there are hundreds of herders getting $25 per month and their living, whose wages must be reduced fully 25 per cent. The State is now leasing its land, for which growers are paying 5 cents per acre, and if wool and mutton are put on the free list they can not exist, and thousands of others must suffer with them.

W. S. PRAGER.

EAST LAS VEGAS, N. MEX., May 23, 1913.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Proposed tariff legislation regarding wool spells ruin of New Mexico's greatest industry. Will throw thousands out of only possible means of employment. Denude entirely the stock ranges, unless except for sheep and goats. Obligate ten million yearly revenue. State can not raise wool or mutton at profit unless wool is protected.

We most emphatically protest against free wool, as it will positively ruin the sheep industry in New Mexico. We need 35 per cent ad valorem to exist.

NEW MEXICO WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
By CHARLES CHADWICK, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS presented a resolution adopted by the State Board of Trade of Massachusetts, favoring the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the National Association of Woolen and Worsted Overseers, remonstrating against the proposed reductions in the woolen schedule of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of South Bend, Ind., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for protection against floods in the Mississippi Valley, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of South Bend, Ind., favoring the enactment of sound banking and currency laws, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of South Bend, Ind., favoring the reduction of the rate of postage on first-class mail matter to 1 cent, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of South Bend, Ind., favoring an appropriation for the purchase of suitable homes for American representatives in foreign countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution adopted by the local board of directors of the National Business League of America of Illinois, favoring an appropriation for the continuance of the Commerce Court, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the State Board of Trade of Massachusetts, favoring the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the National Association of Woolen and Worsted Overseers, remonstrating against the proposed reductions in the woolen schedule of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

ACTION ON THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. JONES. I have two short articles in the nature of petitions to the Senate. I desire to say that the sentiment expressed in these articles is embodied in a great many letters which I have received. I ask that the articles may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMEN CORNER SENDS APPEAL TO SENATE—WANTS LAWMAKERS TO ADJOURN AND GO HOME.

The "amen corner" of the Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce, composed of Walter J. Thompson, John A. Rea, Tom Fleetwood, H. J. Rowland, Joshua Peirce, L. F. Gault, J. H. Holmes, and several other well-known men who gather almost daily after lunch and thrash over public questions, to-day sent the following telegram to the United States Senate:

"To the United States Senate:

"The undersigned, irrespective of party alignment, respectfully beg your honorable body to pass the pending tariff bill as speedily as possible. Any changes for the better a long struggle might effect will not compensate the country for losses of business incident to the uncertainty of the exact duties that will be written in the final draft. Knowing that there will be a new law, we think it wise to give it to the people with as little delay and friction as practicable. We subscribe to the sentiment: 'Let us have peace.'

"AMEN CORNER, TACOMA COMMERCIAL CLUB."

URGES CONGRESS TO END ITS WORK SOON—TACOMA SENDS APPEAL TO MANUFACTURERS—COMMERCIAL CLUB ASKS THAT POLITICS BE CONSIDERED AFTER NATION'S PROSPERITY.

An appeal that politics be cast aside while commercial affairs of vital importance to a continuance of prosperity in America are considered was sent to the hundreds of manufacturers who are gathered in Detroit by the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce yesterday. The manufacturers are attending the annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers in the City of Straits. The telegram was directed personally to Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, of which the Tacoma Commercial Club is a member. The communication from Tacoma will be brought before the manufacturers by Mr. Wheeler, and, if acted favorably upon, will have a reach of nation-wide scope. It reads as follows:

"The greatest immediate need of the Nation is for the public mind to be turned away from politics and back to business. For six months it has been known that material changes would be made in some of the tariff schedules. Long-delayed action will serve no worthy end. Trade readjustments await definite action and a fixed tariff status. We respectfully urge that a campaign be undertaken by the National Chamber of Commerce to prevent repetition of the calamity of 1894, when seven months of Senate debate on the Wilson tariff bill brought commercial paralysis upon the country. Then, as now, there was small public concern at the outset. But seven months of bitter partisan contention in the Senate stirred the public to a state of frenzy. Hope changed to bitterness, and trade collapsed utterly before adjournment came in August. To-day the people are hopeful. All are willing to accept the action of Congress in good faith and turn again to fields and market places. All of the good and powerful forces of the Nation will become active, and the forward movement will begin again when definite tariff status is established and Congress adjourns. Influence of the 400 chambers of commerce and trade organizations, carrying membership in the national chamber, can, through appeal, prove to Congress the urgent need for prompt action and early adjournment. Every day of delay adds to the danger. Every partisan speech and every partisan editorial tends to shatter public confidence and add to the growing wave of doubt and distrust. Let every good influence urge prompt action and adjournment to the end that the public mind may be turned away from politics and back to business."

TARIFF DUTY ON SUGAR.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have received a telegram from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Denver requesting that the telegram which I present, in the nature of a petition, from various organizations in the State of Colorado, relative to the tariff on sugar, be read to the Senate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., May 26, 1913.

M. Rubey, president Colorado State Bankers' Association, acting in our own behalf and of those commercial organizations and banking institutions solely who have specifically authorized us to represent them, respectfully represent:

That the enactment of the tariff bill pending before Congress, known as the Underwood bill, in so far as it proposes within three years to remove entirely all import duty on sugar, will, if enacted into law, seriously cripple and is likely to entirely destroy one of the principal farming industries of this State and one of its most important manufacturing industries, and we therefore most respectfully and most earnestly protest against such enactment. The sugar-beet growing industry and the sugar-manufacturing industry in Colorado distribute annually among the farmers of this State $10,000,000 and among workmen and for supplies and fuel $5,000,000, and these industries have been expanding. The sugar-beet growing and sugar-manufacturing industries in Colorado have more than doubled the value of farming lands within the State. Extensive irrigation enterprises are under way, which are dependent for their success and for the success of their financing upon this industry. Upon the basis of value given to good farming lands in Colorado by reason of the prosperous industry of beet raising and sugar manufacture here many farmers in this State have secured loans upon their lands for improving them and making them more productive, but will suffer serious loss, and in many instances eventual loss of their entire properties, if the value of the lands is reduced by crippling the sugar-beet raising industry here. Such result would be exceedingly hurtful to workingmen and to every business interest and landowner in the State. The Underwood bill preserves a portion of the old tariff upon most manufactured goods in this country, but in the case of sugar it proposes to wipe out the tariff entirely. We respectfully represent that such action would constitute unjust discrimination against the people of Colorado and would be unfair to them and to the people of the several States where sugar beets are now grown. We urge upon Congress that in the case of sugar it in any event make only such proportionate reduction in the tariff as it may make in the case of other products manufactured in this country, and that it do not destroy by removing the sugar duty a great industry, the continued prosperity of which is of vital importance to all our people. And your petitioners will ever pray.

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By EDWARD J. YETTER, President.
DENVER CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION,
By G. B. BERGER, President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] very properly complied with the request of the Denver Chamber of Commerce by introducing the somewhat unusual document which has just been read to the Senate. I say "unusual" because it reads more like a State bank directory and a directory of chambers of commerce and commercial associations than anything else. But I can not allow the introduction of that document to pass without saying something about it, because, otherwise, it might be accepted by the country as the reflection of the actual public sentiment of the people of my State upon the subject matter to which it is addressed, and which I do not believe to be the case.

A campaign has been carried on for a number of months in Colorado—and I presume in other States—by what I am pleased to call the Beet-Sugar Trust, its purpose being to manufacture an artificial public sentiment in its behalf and to bring the pressure of that sentiment to bear in this particular instance upon the two Senators from the State of Colorado. This document is one, and perhaps the most extensive, instance of its expression, indicating how widespread the propaganda has been.

Mr. President, during the campaign of last year I was opposed, not personally, but opposed by the interests whose activities have resulted in and which have prompted the telegram which has just been laid before the Senate. The question of sugar and the tariff therefore became an active issue in the campaign in my State. The various phases of the question were therefore freely discussed both on the stump and in the public press. The people at the polls expressed themselves upon the subject by their election of my colleague and myself. That ought to have sufficed to outline the popular sentiment of the people of my State. But the fact that tariff changes were intended, the fact that there would be a general revision of the tariff downward, has doubtless aroused the apprehension as well as the self-interest of the beet-sugar people into the making of a stupendous effort to create and afterwards to circulate what purports to be an aroused public opinion which, though not wholly unfounded, has no extensive basis in fact.

This propaganda, Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, has taken this shape: I have received every day during the past two or three months a great many telegrams and letters, coming in bunches, so to speak, first from one place and then from another, signed by personal friends, by banking institutions, by chambers of commerce, by political committees, both Democratic and Republican, and all using the same expressions in substance, and sometimes using identical language, and all urging me to oppose the sugar section of the bill. The next day I would receive a basketful of similar communications from another section of the State or from another city, and so on, each one of them being the evident result of inspired action through communication by the telephone or the telegraph or by the visits of agents and representatives to these different communities. All these letters and telegrams bear a family resemblance. They are plainly prompted by a common interest and designed for a common end—the protection of the Sugar Trust through a manufactured plea from the body of the people seemingly concerned for themselves alone. And these communications, in many instances, have been followed by personal explanations from personal acquaintances and friends sending them to the effect that they had done so at the request of some friend or employee of a sugar company, which had paid all expenses. These letters and telegrams have also been accompanied by newspaper articles, editorials, communications, and so forth, all bearing upon the same general proposition, and all having for their purpose a common object.

On the other hand, Mr. President, I have received almost as many letters from individuals and from some associations not connected with this propaganda, but entirely separated from it, each and all of them bearing the assurance that the great heart of the Democratic masses in the State throbs in unison with the policy of the administration, of the Congress, and of the Democratic Party, and urging the enactment of the Underwood bill.

I have said that this was an inspired crusade. If I had the time, I think I could demonstrate it by the introduction here of a great number of communications. I shall content myself, however, with two or three merely as an antidote to what otherwise would be an erroneous impression created, and intended to be created, by this telegraphic petition, representing so many banks and chambers from so many places. This morning I received a telegram dated Brighton, Colo., addressed to myself and my colleague, as follows:

> The undersigned members of the Democratic Party of Adams County, a farming district where sugar beets is an important crop, earnestly urge our Senators and Representatives to stand firmly with the administration in its effort to remove the tariff on sugar.

Of course, this assumes that to be the purpose of the bill.

> We have no sympathy with the so-called Democrats in this or any other State who permit their selfish interests to interfere with a great national reform.

This is signed by J. F. Jones, chairman of the county central committee. It also contains the names of some prominent individuals, as follows:

> George M. Griffin, clerk district court; E. B. Moore, assessor; R. S. McNatt, ex-assessor; W. O. Stillwell, treasurer; E. E. Sauve, clerk; Wm. A. Maxwell, editor; J. P. Higgins, water commissioner; Herman J. Schloo, sheriff; E. G. Jones, coroner; J C. McCann, county physician; V. H. Wright, attorney; W. C. Hood, jr., county judge.

In many instances commercial bodies have declined to respond to this call of distress, this command, this effort to secure an expression of public sentiment in the interest of a great monopoly. I may refer specifically to the cities of Grand Junction and Fruita, in Mesa County, which is in the heart of one of the sugar-beet districts in my State I might refer to a number of farming associations where resolutions to the same effect have been introduced, but voted down.

I have received a good many letters from employees in some of the sugar mills in my State urgently beseeching a departure from the policy of my party and from its purpose to the end that a local industry may not suffer because they fear that they must bear the consequence of any injury to it. I knew that these letters were all inspired, for they were all alike, and in proof of it I received a day or two ago the following letter:

> 408 BAKER STREET,
> Longmont, Colo., May 19, 1913.
> Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
> United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SIR: Inclosed with this letter you will find one of the statements of the Great Western Sugar Co., which were recently distributed to its employees at the factory here in Longmont.
>
> You will no doubt receive a few letters from employees of this company here, as they are compelled in an underhanded way to either write them or take chances of losing their jobs by refusing, as you can readily see by one paragraph of their statement which I have marked.
>
> Seventy-five per cent of the employees at the factory here are Democrats and understand the tariff question quite well. They also are familiar with the principles of the Democratic national platform and are fully aware of the fact that you were elected along with Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH to the United States Senate to maintain the principles of Democracy for the benefit of all of the people of all of the United States. Many of us employees of this company placed ourselves and families in jeopardy during the campaign of 1912 and 1913 by refusing to sign certain petitions gotten out by the company in favor of the Republican Party and the tariff question. I was employed at the factory all of last summer as pipe fitter, and during the beet run last winter and winter before I was employed as engineer on Corliss engine, being laid off at the close of the last run. I applied for employment last month and upon asking the superintendent, Mr. Modru, for work he immediately asked me what were my political views at the present time. My answer was they are the same as they have always been, according to the dictations of my conscience. He said he had been informed that I had radical views politically and otherwise, and that he had discharged several men on that account. After talking with him for some time and all the time realizing my position in regard to the necessity of employment for the benefit and support of my family and at the same time trying to uphold my individual independence politically and otherwise he finally told me that he would talk the matter over with the master mechanic, and said he would write me in a few days. Four days later I received a letter stating that I could report for work on the next Monday morning. I reported for duty and was put to work running a planer in the machine shop. After working six days I learned from the timekeeper that I was only rated at 22½ cents per hour instead of 27½ cents, which I was being paid previously.
>
> I immediately went to the superintendent and asked the reason for the reduction and asked for more pay. He told me that it was the best he could do at this time, stating that many men were receiving that and less, blaming the unsettled conditions upon the tariff situation. So I asked for my time and quit right there after telling him it was too low pay for such work to support myself and family on respectably. During the last campaign they got out a chart showing the cost of the production of sugar throughout the world and placed the average wages in American factories at $2.99 per day, when at the same time many men were receiving the pitiable sum of 17½ cents per hour, and the vast majority 20 cents per hour. In closing will say that I know it would be useless to apply for work with them again. And my case is only one of many. So you can readily understand the workman's situation under such conditions, which are a disgrace to the people of this Republic.
>
> I have been a Democrat all my life and will fight the rest of my days to uphold the principles of pure Democracy, win or lose.
>
> Respectfully, yours,
> THOS. S. PRICE.

Mr. Price incloses me a circular letter, which I will read, because it sustains my contention that these communications are artificial creations sent to Senators in Washington and also laid upon the desk of the Senate in order to influence official action. It is as follows:

> THE GREAT WESTERN SUGAR CO.,
> LONGMONT FACTORY,
> Longmont, Colo, May 12, 1913.
>
> To the employees of the Longmont factory:
>
> You have heard so much of the tariff bill and its probable effect on our industry that many of you think, no doubt, that it is only a scare and that the sugar company will not be hurt by it.
> I want to say to each one of you in all earnestness that it is a very serious proposition to each and every employee of the Great Western Sugar Co.
> If the present bill, as it has been passed by the House of Representatives, should be passed by the United States Senate, which it has every chance of doing, we would not be able to pay more than $4.50 per ton for beets, if that much, and you all know that the acreage grown for $4.50 per ton will be so small that not more than two or three of our nine factories could be operated, and you all know also that idle factories mean idle men.

Let me digress here for a moment by saying that in 1903—I think that was the year—the beet-sugar factories of northern Colorado announced $4.50 per ton as a flat rate for beets, declaring then that they could pay no more than that and make any profit whatever, although they enjoyed a better tariff protection than they do at present. The farmers simply refused to grow beets at that rate, in consequence of which the factories were compelled to pay a better price, not because they wanted to, but because they had to. There was just as much truth then in their statement that they were unable to pay more than $4.50 per ton as there is in the statement that in the event of the enactment of this bill that sum will be the maximum amount which they can afford to pay for their raw materials.

I proceed with the letter.

> As employees of the company, interested in keeping the factories in operation, will you not each one write a letter to the Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS, United States Senate, and the Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH, United States Senate, Washington, D. C., asking that they use their influence to have the "free-sugar-in-three-years" clause eliminated in the tariff bill.

Your letter will have just as much influence with these gentlemen as any letter they will receive—

That is a fact, as far as I am concerned—and we would ask that you show your interest in the State at large as well as the company you are working for by doing this, advising the head of your department when you have written this letter. If you are a Democrat and will so state in your letter, it will carry even more weight with the gentlemen, as I do not think any Democrat in Colorado anticipated any such sweeping reduction as is contemplated in this bill.

Very truly, yours, N. R. McCREERY, Manager.

Attached to this document is a form of letter to be used:

The following form may be used to suggest ideas—

It is necessary to suggest an idea, of course, for an ordinary laborer in a beet-sugar factory, if he is intelligently to instruct his Senators what to do, when he is himself acting upon instructions.

We prefer that a letter be written in your own words, but if necessary you may copy this one.

Be sure to send two letters, one to Senator C. S. THOMAS and one to Senator JOHN F. SHAFROTH. A third letter to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, Washington, D. C., will do a lot of good. If you are a Democrat, tell them so. It will carry more weight.

Now comes the form. There is no word here, you will notice, in behalf of the sugar companies; it is all for the poor farmer and the poor wageworker.

Hon. ——— ———,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned respectfully protests against any law being passed that will do away with the duty on sugar. We believe that free sugar will mean the closing of many, if not all, the sugar factories in the State and the throwing out of employment of hundreds of factory employees as well as the thousands employed in the beet fields. This will mean decreased values of land and city property.

We respectfully ask your consideration of the thousands of farmers and workingmen in Colorado who will be hurt by such action.

Many of these people who are now making vigorous protest against this reduction supported you in the election, feeling themselves secure in your promise that you would not harm legitimate industry, and which pledge can not be faithfully fulfilled if you destroy one of Colorado's greatest industries by the passage of a bill calling for free sugar.

Yours, truly,

———— ————.

I think I can say without exaggeration that I have received 200 letters, couched almost in the language of this instruction, from the employees of beet-sugar companies operating in my State. Therefore I am justified in my charge that this apparently unified action in one direction by some of the people of my State is such only in so far as it represents an extensive, disciplined, and persistent campaign to that end.

These companies have made an enormous amount of money, not only upon their capitalization but upon their overcapitalization. Two of them operating in Colorado represent collectively a capital of $50,000,000, $30,000,000 of which is water, pure and simple. Yet they have paid dividends constantly upon their preferred stock; they have paid dividends a large part of the time upon their watered stock, and one of them has a surplus in its treasury in excess of $10,000,000—that is, it did have before it began this propaganda. What amount of it has been expended for that and the extent to which that expense is going to be included hereafter as cost of production I do not know. I do say, however, that neither at the time this overcapitalization was issued nor since then has any chamber of commerce, national bank, or commercial association protested against it. Yet we know that the high price of the necessaries of life and the low price of labor in this country are largely due to the fact that these protected industries have been hugely overcapitalized, and then the prices of their products—the necessaries of life—have been fixed so as to yield a profit upon not only their actual but their fictitious capital.

If protests of this kind are justifiable, why should they not call attention to these conditions as well? This fight merely means that these hugely overcapitalized industries want to retain their franchise to rob the people by taxing the necessaries of life, to the end that they may pay profits upon the capital that they have invested and upon the capital they have manufactured with printing presses and fountain pens.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Colorado, but it appears that this condition of overcapitalization and watered stock in the sugar factories is not peculiar to his State.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, not at all—not at all. My State is simply running with the rest of the pack.

Mr. REED. I have been furnished with a copy of the last report of the National Sugar Co., filed in September, 1912, in which the total capital of the company is given at $9,846,980.57, $5,000,000 of which is scheduled as "good will."

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I thought I would just call the Senator's attention to that.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator might go further and say that of the $141,000,000 of capital invested in this industry all but $60,000,000 is water—good will, bad will, anything you may call it except actual capital invested. Yet it is the equivalent of capital, because it rests as an incubus upon the productive and consuming energies of the Nation.

These gentlemen who operate in my State—good men, good citizens, capable gentlemen, worthy gentlemen, many of them personal friends of mine—charge the Colorado consumer for sugar manufactured in Colorado the New York price plus the freight from New York to Denver. I have not heard any chamber of commerce or national bank or civic or political association protest against that to the Senate of the United States, yet it is the levying of tribute upon the people of Colorado. The same thing is true of Wyoming; it is true of New Mexico, and I have no doubt it is true of the State of Utah. It is these people who are doubly burdened by this tribute. It reminds one of the historic tax on tea. These sugar companies have this tariff protection arranged very much like the old negro set his coon trap. You know, Mr. President, he set it so as to catch the coon both "a-comin' and a-g'wine." In Colorado we are caught going both ways. The sugar companies catch us with a national protective tariff, and locally we are caught with the railway protective tariff. They get a profit from us, in other words, from the railroad rate and from the tariff imposed by the laws of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the Senator will admit that at least four-fifths of the sugar that is produced in Colorado is sent from Colorado to another State.

Mr. THOMAS. To other States—yes; I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator referred to the sugar factories of Utah. I will say that out of every 5 pounds of sugar produced there at least 4 pounds are sent either to the Missouri River or to Chicago. The sugar has to go to places where the people will purchase it and use it. Our freight rate from Salt Lake City to Chicago is 60 cents a hundred, while the freight rate from New York to Chicago is 22½ cents a hundred; so that instead of having an advantage in the freight rate, we are at a disadvantage as between 22½ cents and 60 cents. I think not quite that difference exists in the case of Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree with the Senator, if he means that the crux of this question is more in the discrimination of railways than it is in the tariff. This is a question which never will be settled rightly until the railroads are compelled to equalize their rates over the different sections of the country and business prohibited from adding them to their charges for commodities.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to think that I fully agree with his statement, because this question of the freight rates upon sugar from the Intermountain States to Chicago and the freight rate from New York to Chicago has been before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and up to the present time the Interstate Commerce Commission has not seen fit to change them.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, but that does not deprive the rates of their iniquitious character. It is true also, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, that the great proportion of the sugar produced and manufactured in my State has to find a market elsewhere; but it finds it at a profit. I do not object to the people of the Mississippi Valley getting Colorado sugar cheaply. What I do object to is that my people are required to pay for it, because they are charged so much more for the same thing.

Why, Mr. President, I can go to the cities of Omaha and Kansas City—at least I have been told so by men who know—and buy sugar produced in the factories of Colorado and pay the freight on it back to the factory door and get it cheaper than I can purchase it from the Sugar Trust at the factory door itself.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is this discussion proceeding by and under unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wish to suggest that there is some business yet to be transacted in the morning hour, and if the discussion is likely to consume the entire morning hour I should feel it my duty to object.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield the floor in not to exceed 10 minutes, unless I am interrupted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor. I only want a portion of the morning hour reserved for the business assigned to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when the session opened I had no idea that there would be any discussion of this subject. But in view of the presentation of this petition from my home city I felt it my duty to say something, and in connection with what I have presented I was necessarily obliged to elaborate somewhat upon the general proposition.

In this connection I want to read an editorial which I have just received from Swink, Colo., where there is another very large sugar factory, merely for the purpose of showing that the people of the State, the consumers, the men who do the work and pay the taxes, are not here petitioning the Congress of the United States to take any specific action in behalf of a highly protected interest by means of which their tariff burden will be continued. It is headed—

DON'T WORRY ABOUT SUGAR TARIFF.

SWINK, COLO., Friday, May 23, 1913.

Regardless of the amount of discussion that the Underwood tariff bill (providing for the removal of tariff on sugar and other things) has caused, farmers of the fertile Arkansas Valley are very little worried.

Our farmers realize that this vast, rich, and productive area of the best soil in the golden West will produce melons, alfalfa, and many grains and grasses, as well as fruits, vegetables, etc., that will enable them within a short time to forget that sugar beets ever were an income producer. And the market never will be glutted, either, with the quality of excellent products such as can be grown in this valley.

True, it may be, that sugar beets have added much to the wealth of a large portion of this valley, but it is just as true that our resourceful farmers can easily turn their hands to some other line to which both they and this splendid soil are so well adapted.

Farmers of this section of the valley are not inclined to guzzle down a lot of hot air about certain things that are "sure to happen" to them and "the whole country" if certain tariff measures become a law and sugar-factory attachés' salaries are reduced to help make up for what the trust will "lose" in favor of the consumers.

To be sure, our farmers are entirely too wise to be fooled, and they well know that they can and will produce just as much revenue-bringing products as ever before and that they will get that revenue, tariff or no tariff, and the market will not be flooded except with the highest grade of foodstuffs such as are in daily demand.

And right below it I find this significant statement:

BUSY AT A. B. S. FACTORY—

That is, the American Beet Sugar factory—

TO BE LARGEST AND BEST IN STATE, ACCORDING TO REPORT—BIG IMPROVEMENTS WILL COST A PRETTY PENNY.

The following news item, bearing a Rocky Ford date line in the Tuesday edition of the Pueblo Chieftain, paints a very rosy word picture of the progressiveness of the American Beet Sugar Co., and is optimistic to say the least:

"The factory of the American Beet Sugar Co. is the busiest place in the city at the present time and the largest gang of men ever employed during the off season is now at work there. A large sum of money is being expended in the alterations and improvements which, when completed, will make the Rocky Ford factory the largest and best in the State.

"With the present outlook on tariff regarding sugar the company realizes that if it is to continue the manufacture of beet sugar it must devise every plan possible to manufacture the product with as little expense as possible, and improved machinery will be installed to do all the work possible, thereby keeping the pay roll down to the minimum."

Presages and prophecies of disaster surcharge the atmosphere in Washington; activities and increasing expenditures for expanded production are going on at home.

Mr. President, while I have the most profound respect for petitions sent to myself or to the Senate of the United States from my State, while I am a Member of that body, while I believe they should be given the utmost consideration, I want to say here and now, and I think I speak for my colleague as well as myself, that I was sent here by the people of my State, by the producers and by the consumers, by men and women who are not organized, who have no lobby, who are possessed with no great fund to go out through the highways and byways of the State, seeking and obtaining favorable action in their behalf by the great banks and associations. They are the toilers and the taxpayers, the common people, as Mr. Lincoln called them. It is their interest and their welfare, their wants and their desires that I propose to represent and promote in the Senate of the United States to the best of my ability. They look to us for relief, and we shall not disappoint them. I shall support the measure known as the Underwood bill as that measure comes to the Senate from the hands of the party to which I belong, and they will judge me as I shall deserve.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I am aware that I have no right in this morning hour to make a speech to the Senate on the sugar feature of the Underwood tariff bill, but in view of the discussion which we have had and in further view of the fact that I have some letters here bearing somewhat on the subject, which I propose to have incorporated in the RECORD, I want, if I may receive permission, to address the Senate for a time not exceeding 10, certainly not 15 minutes. As I hear no objection, Mr. President, I will proceed.

Mr. President, on last Thursday my esteemed and very genial friend, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], in an effort to counteract what he considered the effect of what he kindly called a calamity howl of the southern sugar planters, briefly addressed the Senate, and I shall now read as a part of my remarks his own remarks:

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. As I have said, Mr. President, I will take but a moment. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to say that, in view of the fact that for the past two months we have had one long doleful and tearful tale on the sugar question to the effect that the planters of the South would be annihilated at one fell swoop. I felt that it would be refreshing, at least, to have the testimony of some others not belonging to that particular class.

I have clipped from a prominent paper published in my State, the Newark Evening News, the statement of Mr. George F. D. Trask, a gentleman whom I know, a man of wealth and large business interests, living in Orange, N. J. He writes to Representative MCCOY, thereby putting himself on record as one exception in believing that the sugar interests are not going to be destroyed. Mr. Trask urges that free sugar will advance not only the people's interests but will advance at the same time the interests of the sugar planters. He has bought and invested largely in Louisiana lands in consequence of and in the hope of this step, and he finally says:

"I am heartily in favor of free sugar. I think it will be a fine thing for the country as a whole, and that the injury which the present producers claim it threatens to them is grossly exaggerated. I do not believe that it will result in shutting down any plant or factory that ought not to be closed anyhow.

"I know that in one case a very large producer has lately added enormously to its cane-producing acreage in anticipation of the reduction or abolition of the duty."

I desire that this shall be known and go on record as the testimony of a capable, ingenious, bright, and successful business man and investor, who is willing to invest his money notwithstanding the calamity howls of the sugar planters.

Mr. President, to those of us who are familiar with the conditions of the sugar industry in the State of Louisiana, and who on account of their familiarity with those conditions are absolutely convinced that the industry would be entirely destroyed at the end of three years if the present tariff bill goes into effect, the statement that free sugar would advance the interest of the sugar planter was incredible, coming, as it was stated, from a bright, ingenious, capable, and successful business man and investor. It was still more incredible that such a man would be willing to invest money in sugar lands because he thought that the production of sugar by him would be increased in consequence of free sugar. But it was even more incredible that a large sugar-cane producer in the State of Louisiana should have lately added enormously to his cane-producing area in the hope of reduced duties or the entire abolition of the duty.

For that reason some of us here who are interested in the facts being known, took upon ourselves the responsibility of getting in communication with this friend of the Senator from New Jersey, and the result has been two letters which I will now read. The first is dated May 22, 1913.

MAY 22, 1913.

Mr. G. F. D. TRASK, Orange, N. J.

DEAR SIR: There appeared some few days ago in a newspaper published in Newark, N. J., an interview purporting to quote you as stating that you were interested in Louisiana lands, and that from your observations the State of Louisiana farmers could continue in sugar even if free trade in sugar became law.

Believing that you are not desirous of misrepresenting facts, I would respectfully request that you advise me at this address as to whether you have been properly quoted. Our family has been for many years engaged in the sugar business in Louisiana, and we have endeavored to apply to our affairs the most approved and improved methods in field and factory. We wish to state that even with the present tariff we have found many years unprofitable, and we can hardly conceive of any local conditions that will make sugar production profitable in Louisiana with any radical change in the sugar duty, to say nothing of the distress and disaster that would occur if free trade in sugar became law.

Should you have good reason for thinking otherwise I would thank you to so advise me and will appreciate your so doing.

We are glad to learn that you are interested in our State, and with the assurances of respect we anticipate the receipt of your reply.

Very truly,

JULES GODCHAUX.

NEW WILLARD HOTEL, Washington, D. C.

The writer of this letter, as appears, is a cane producer and sugar manufacturer in the State of Louisiana. He is known to many Senators here, having been here for some time engaged in the effort of appealing to their reason and to their sympathy, also to try to enlist them and their sympathies in the effort to prevent the destruction of one of his principal means of livelihood, an effort which is characterized by the Senator from New Jersey as calamity howling, and which may be considered by some others as insidious lobbying, but considered by the gentleman and by myself as a most earnest and legitimate effort to try and save himself and a large portion of his State from this impending blow.

Now, I will read the answer:

S. F. HAYWARD & Co.,
New York, May 24, 1913.

Mr. JULES GODCHAUX,
The New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I received your favor of the 22d yesterday evening, in which you ask me whether I was correctly quoted in a newspaper article printed in Newark, N. J., which stated that I was interested in Louisiana lands and believed that Louisiana planters could make sugar profitably under free sugar.

I have not seen the newspaper article which you refer to, but I have never made the above statement. I do not own any land or any interest in sugar lands in Louisiana. I have never expressed the opinion that the sugar planters of Louisiana could make money under free sugar; I do not know whether they could or not.

I am in favor of a reduction in the present duty on sugar and of its ultimate abolition, and I did express myself to that effect in a recent letter to my Congressman, which I was afterwards told did find its way into print, although I wrote it without that intention. In that letter, however, I did not mention the State of Louisiana nor state that I had any investment there.

My opinion that the present reduction and ultimate removal of the sugar duty is desirable does not depend on the question of whether the sugar planters of Louisiana can pursue the industry profitably under free sugar or not. I hope they can, especially those who run their business capably. But even if they can not, I believe that the benefit of free sugar to the country as a whole should outweigh in the minds of our legislature the losses which may be incurred by those domestic producers who have to depend for their profits on the artificial price which has heretofore been secured to them by a high duty.

Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE F. D. TRASK.

Mr. President, this investigation was made and these remarks have been addressed to the Senate because of what we knew was a misconception of the Senator from New Jersey, who, from my knowledge of him, on account of the probity of his character and the goodness of his heart, I know would never intentionally misstate a fact or try to do an injury to anyone.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in order that I may square myself with the Senate of the United States I have this to say: The article which I read stands for itself. The Newark News is a most reputable paper, probably a paper of the largest circulation in the Commonwealth of New Jersey. I read the article verbatim, and that which has been quoted is, I believe, it in its entirety.

Now, as to the final rendering of the letter, I feel that my position is not shaken a whit. I believe and Mr. Trask believes that in the reduction, even to free from duty, the good of the whole country will be enhanced; and that is verified by the quotation that I made, and again verified by the quotation made by the Senator from Louisiana.

I had no purpose to misrepresent anybody, but I saw immediately after I made the quotation that there was a disturbance. A couple of distinguished Senators on this side immediately came to me and wanted to run down the story. They wanted to find out who the man was. I told them he was a Mr. Trask, a gentleman in Orange, as the article stated, and he could be readily found.

Now, Mr. President, I have no desire to destroy the industry in South Carolina or the industry in Louisiana or in any other State, but I do deny the right of the Senators from South Carolina or from Louisiana to come to the people of New Jersey and demand that they shall hold them up by the chin in order that their heads shall not get under water. God knows we have been doing it for 125 years.

I quoted the calamity howler, but I did not mean so badly when I said "calamity howlers." They are real generous gentlemen, big hearted and kind, most delightful in their way, but they were willing to touch cotton, and I say that we have prospered under free cotton, and I believe we can prosper under free sugar.

I am not a sugar planter, but the Lord knows I have heard how long or how necessary it was to maintain a tariff in order to hold the planter's head up or the farmer's head. I have listened to the song of praise of the farmers with tears running down their cheeks as large as walnuts. They prayed for the poor farmer, in order to put on more tariff, but in spite of it the farmer has grown poorer and poorer each year.

The Senator quoted four farms for sale in Louisiana. I can quote you 104 farms that are there for sale. You will find farms for sale all over the length and breadth of this land.

I do say, Mr. President, that the calamity proposition which is put out by the Senator from Louisiana, that they are going to be annihilated, is unfounded and unreasonable. I do not believe any such result will occur; neither do I believe, because of the reduction of the tariff on the schedules that are proposed in the House tariff bill, that business is going to be annihilated, that stagnation of trade will come, and that the shafts and spindles and pulleys of our mills and the clang of our anvils will cease. This country will go on and grow and prosper. For practically eight months—nearly a year—every man who knows enough to be in business knew full well that the tariff was going to be reformed. They knew that the Democratic Party was to triumph. They knew that it was the principle of the Democratic Party to reduce the iniquity of the so-called protective tariff. So, then, for a year we have been living in the atmosphere of tariff reduction. If you have not settled your houses and put them in order, it is your fault. You have realized for all the year that this proposition was coming. Why, in the name of heaven, have you not adjusted your affairs? If you can not grow sugar, grow something else to profit. Why should you ask us for relief?

It seems funny that only this morning I clipped out of a paper what I shall read:

With a Democratic tariff at their very doors to be enacted into law, with free sugar to come, this fact was published May 26 in New York:

NEW YORK, May 26.

Total interest and dividend disbursements next month will reach $111,286,556, as against $99,543,163 in June a year ago. Of this sum stockholders will receive in the way of dividends $55,686,556, an increase of $5,943,393, while interest payments will total $55,600,000, an increase of $5,800,000.

All this has come with that horrid nightmare, that horrible pall hanging over this country of Democratic ascendancy.

I clipped from another paper the following:

[Special to the Courier-News.]

NEW YORK, May 24.

The New York Central Railroad system has placed an order for 179 passenger, freight, and switch engines to be delivered during the fall of this year. The locomotive company will build 159 of the engines, while the remainder will be supplied by the Baldwin Locomotive Works.

Anticipating the great result of prosperity in this country.

Another clipping I have lost. It was from the papers in New York, referring to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, wherein it goes on to say that they are bonding themselves for $10,000,000 for the purpose of buying 100 additional locomotives to carry the freight, 4,000 freight cars, 8 postal cars, and 96 passenger cars. All these things have been prompted in the atmosphere of stagnation, paralysis, devastation, and woe, and you unfortunate calamity howlers and you fathers of this protective tariff, I say to you, take new courage; we are approaching a brighter dawn and a better day for God and humanity. The day of governing and controlling the millions of people by the selfish doctrine of protection in order that you may tax everybody for the benefit of somebody, thank God, has disappeared from this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will state it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, my question of personal privilege is that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], in laying his strictures on certain Democrats on this side of the Chamber for their seeming leanings toward protection, took occasion to specify the names of two States—the States of South Carolina and Louisiana. I should like for the Senator from New Jersey to explain by what authority or on what grounds he made the statement that he was holding up the farmers of South Carolina by the chin while they were pleading for protection.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to make a most abject apology so far as South Carolina is concerned. God knows I had not the least thought of making any strictures on South Carolina. I realize their troubles. I was down there a couple of months ago, and I realize what they have gone through with, with their sandy soil, their dispensary system, and God knows what. They have troubles enough, and far be it from me to burden any heavier South Carolina. I had no thought of that. I did mention South Carolina. I can not say just how it came up, but there is something in the all-pervading influence—it was the ever genial, happy smile and the generous heart of South Carolina that prompted me, and God knows where I would have landed if I had kept on looking in your face a little longer. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram in the nature of a petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 2377) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. C. Hunter (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2378) granting a pension to Charles Franklin White; to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PITTMAN. At the request of the governor of Alaska I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (S. 2379) authorizing the town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for public-school purposes, and prescribing the method of issuing bonds for such purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2380) for the relief of heirs or estate of Thomas Daly, deceased (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 2381) for the relief of heirs of James Thompson, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Willie J. Etheridge; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2383) for the relief of Stephen J. Mulhall and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 2384) amending the act approved March 9, 1892, entitled "An act to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States," to provide for the taking of depositions in foreign countries; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. BRYAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OLIVER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF ATTEMPTS TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I submit a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read (S. Res. 92), as follows:

Resolved, That there be appointed by the Vice President a committee of five Senators to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained at Washington or elsewhere to influence proposed legislation now pending before the Senate. The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends; and in giving the name of the lobbyist to give the particular bill upon which he is working, and, if it be the tariff bill, the item he is seeking to change.

The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill; and the inquiry shall include the character of the representation and the circumstances under which it was made, in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation.

It is further resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May, and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and to send for persons and papers in the prosecution of said investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, but the Chair is compelled to rule that, under the statute, the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before that ruling is made I desire to suggest that there is no provision in the resolution for any payment from the contingent fund of the Senate. The statute to which reference is made by the Chair applies only when it is proposed to make a payment from the contingent fund. If it shall be found necessary in the course of this investigation, if it is ordered, to apply to the contingent fund, then that request, of course, must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have had at various times accusations similar to the one which we have recently read in the press, that there were lobbyists about the corridors of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask has unanimous consent been given for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not advised as to the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire in rising and addressing the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. My attention was diverted for a moment, and I did not know whether consent had been given.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unanimous consent has not been given, Mr. President, and the probability is that it will not be given this morning.

I was about to say, Mr. President, that charges similar to these that we are now asked to investigate are, as a rule, unsubstantial and without any real foundation in fact. At intervals the newspapers are filled with statements that notorious lobbyists are around the corridors of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; but such lobbyists are never visible to the naked eye.

While no charge has been made in any quarter against the Senate, this resolution requires Senators to state with whom they have talked and from whom they have received communications in reference to pending legislation. Mr. President, it seems to me absurd that the Senate should give its time to an investigation of that kind. Men are here who have a right to be here, men who represent great interests in this country, which, in their judgment, are imperiled. To call them "lobbyists" is, to my mind, utterly absurd; to say that they should not be here is equally so; and the suggestion that Senators should, under oath, without any charge being made against them, be interrogated as to whether friends of theirs have written to them or talked with them about current legislation is, to me, not worthy of serious consideration on the part of this body.

Mr. President, I do not know that when this resolution again comes before the Senate I shall object to it, but I do object to its present consideration, and ask that it shall lie over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection having been made, the resolution will lie over under the rule.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire has been permitted to debate the proposition as a prelude to his objection, I think I ought also be allowed to say that I recognize the right of any interest or industry about to be affected by legislation to appear and present arguments either to individual Senators or to a committee of Senators. We are, however, at this time, I think, put in a very unenviable position. I do not know that there are any lobbyists here; none have approached me; but we have a tariff bill before us and there are a great many men here, I assume, for the purpose of putting before the Senate and its committees their reasons either for the adoption or the modification of the bill.

It is stated, with the highest possible authority from the highest possible source, that a lobby of greater proportions than ever before known fills the city of Washington, employing more illegitimate and unlawful means than were ever before employed to secure certain changes in the tariff bill, and the public is led to believe, and will be led to believe, that if any change is made in the tariff bill that is now proposed it will be under the influence of men who are termed "lobbyists."

I will not attempt to define the word "lobbyist." If he is what I believe him to be and what I have always supposed him to be, I abhor him quite as much as any Senator can; but I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, that this tariff bill shall go forward to debate and to a vote under the imputation that if any change is effected in it that change is the result of illegitimate and improper influences.

I think the country has a right to know what is now surrounding the Senate of the United States. I think it has a right to know whether Senators are being influenced by improper representations, or, rather, whether it is being attempted to influence them by improper representations. I want the country to know who are here and who are attempting in their arguments or in their statements or in their persuasion, whatever form it may take, to change the tariff bill. If there are men here who ought not to be here, if they are doing what ought not to be done—and it may be true that they are; I do not deny it—the country ought to know it, and it ought to know it authoritatively; and notwithstanding what the Senator from New Hampshire has said about the absurdity of asking Senators with regard to the representations which have been made to them, I believe that every Senator here ought to be willing and ought to be anxious to give the country the information suggested by this resolution. It is of the highest importance that whatever we do here shall command the confidence of the people of the country. A law ought not only to be just, but the people ought to believe it to be just and believe that it has been passed with high and upright motives. This is the reason which has led me to present this resolution. When it comes before the Senate I shall address myself to it again.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, the paragraph that attracted my attention particularly was that relating to Senators—that they should be summoned and, under oath, give the names of all the persons who have made representations to them concerning pending legislation, and so forth. It seemed to me that that was going further than was necessary in an investigation of the charge that was made to the effect that lobbyists are in Washington. The charge having been made in a high quarter, it ought to be investigated, and if Senators are to be investigated I have no concealment so far as I am concerned. I will endeavor to recall the scores of men who have talked with me or written to me, friends of mine, some of them from my State and some from other States, on this subject. They had a right to do it, and it was my duty to listen to them. However, waiving what seems to me a serious objection to one phase of the resolution, I withdraw my objection to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OWEN. I object, and ask that it go over one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has objection been made to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made. The resolution will go over.

COST OF ARMOR PLATE.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 93), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the following information:

1. What is the cost of manufacturing the best armor plate per ton?
2. What would be the cost of erecting and equipping a plant for use by the Government in manufacturing armor and gun forgings?
3. Whether there is any secret or patented process or processes used in the manufacture of the best armor; and if so, who own the patents?
4. How long would it take the Government to build and equip an armor plant adequate for the needs of the Navy?

TARIFF DUTY ON SUGAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an editorial by Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, proprietor of the Denver News, as to the effect of free sugar on beet culture. He is the publisher of the leading Democratic newspaper of Colorado, and I ask that the editorial to which I refer may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we could not hear the request of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I have requested the printing in the RECORD of an editorial by Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, ex-Senator of the United States, on the sugar question, which appeared in the Denver News May 11, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

T. M. PATTERSON TELLS WHY FREE SUGAR WOULD CRIPPLE COLORADO'S GREAT INDUSTRY—GIVES CREDIT OF SINCERITY TO PRESIDENT WILSON, BUT TAKES ISSUE WITH HIM AS TO THE EFFECT OF FREE SUGAR ON BEET CULTURE; BELIEVES SHAFROTH AND THOMAS SHOULD STAND SIDE BY SIDE WITH DEMOCRATIC SENATORS FROM LOUISIANA AND INSIST THAT SUGAR SCHEDULE BE TAKEN UP AND DISPOSED OF BY ITSELF.

Now that the tariff bill has passed the House and is in its next stage, that of correction and adoption by the Senate, I think this is an appropriate time for everybody who thinks seriously upon the subject to express his views. But I will confine this paper to one subject—the tariff and sugar.

I have always held that the present duty on sugar was abnormally high and that when a general revision of the tariff was undertaken I would insist that the duty on sugar and on every other protected Colorado product should be relatively reduced. I enthusiastically urged Mr. Wilson's nomination for the Presidency and his election, because I believed he was a statesman who would fearlessly insist upon a general tariff revision downward, and upon the removal of all unnecessary tariff props from industries which time and experience had proved could stand alone. Coupled with this was Mr. Wilson's broad statements that he would oppose in this revision the destruction or serious crippling of any important American industry. This I regarded as a necessary corollary to his general statements concerning the tariff. Just such a revision of the tariff was the crying demand of the American people.

The revision undertaken by Mr. Wilson's administration in conformity with this pledge involves an industry of peculiar importance to Colorado and a number of other Western States—that of sugar. It is a young industry—yet in its early teens. The first beet-sugar factory was built at Grand Junction in 1899. It was a failure. It was several years after that before a Colorado factory was in successful operation. The beet-sugar industry in the United States really dates from but a few years before the first successful factory in Colorado. The business had been started in other States before, but its permanent and unqualified success was doubtful until the soil, climate, and sunshine of Colorado put its success beyond peradventure. But besides soil and climatic conditions, the element of tariff was necessary to its success. Had sugar been on the free list during the last decade of the last century and it were yet there we would not be wrangling over protection to sugar now. There would be no beet-sugar industry to foster. The cane and beet fields of other countries would be supplying all the American needs.

GROWTH OF BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The tremendous growth of the industry can be told in a few lines.

Prior to 1895 practically all the sugar made in the United States was from cane only, and that was confined to Louisiana and a small section of Texas. The annual yield was in round numbers 300,000 tons.

Sugar from cane is yet confined to the same localities, and the yield, if there is any change, has decreased.

But from a negligible quantity of beet sugar in 1895 the amount now annually produced is but little short of 600,000 tons, and the growth of the industry continues to be rapid and certain.

Of this immense sugar tonnage, Colorado produces nearly one-third, or in round numbers about 200,000 tons.

There are 17 sugar factories in Colorado, with more planned. The Colorado farmers were paid over $9,500,000 for the beets they raised last year. It is difficult to conceive of a new industry making such rapid strides and reaching such prodigious proportions in so short a time. When it is recalled that as yet more than 2,000,000 tons of sugar is imported; that its per capita consumption more than keeps pace with our increase in population, and that enough to supply all of the United States and Canada and South America can be produced right here on the high plains of what was once the great American desert, some comprehension of the vast importance of the sugar industry to Colorado and the rest of the country may be reached.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S DECISION.

President Wilson has suddenly decided that this vastly important industry can now get along without any of the tariff protection it has had in the past. Although the Democratic majority in the last House of Representatives had signified its wish before the election to put sugar on the free list, the Senate had emphatically dissented, and its committee had proposed a compromise duty of about 1 cent a pound, which was quite generally conceded, until the present Congress convened, would be the basis for a settlement of the sugar controversy. It must be admitted that President Wilson is sincere in his stand for free sugar—for the three-year period for which the 1-cent duty is to endure is but a concession by the President to the representatives of the sugar-producing States. For every purpose of practical protection it is as though sugar will go on the free list immediately. If it can thrive as a nondutiable article commencing three years hence, it could soon readjust itself to the immediate withdrawal of the duty and march right along almost without a halt. The fact is that those who oppose putting sugar on the free list at any specified time—letting experience and time determine when such a change may be safely made—look upon the three years as a period for liquidation only, and that the President but mercifully allotted the time for winding up the business rather than force it into bankruptcy coincident with the flourish of the pen that will make the bill a law.

I will assume, then, that President Wilson is of the opinion that the beet-sugar industry can thrive in Colorado and elsewhere in the United States with sugar placed on the free list. To assume otherwise is to charge that he was insincere when he declared in Denver and elsewhere during his campaign for the Presidency that he favored no change in the tariff that would destroy or cripple any American industry. The President is not a hypocrite. Unless the Nation is deceived after a pretty intimate acquaintance with its new Chief Magistrate, he is frankness itself, and would scorn deception as an adjunct to his own advancement.

DIFFERS WITH THE PRESIDENT.

I differ with President Wilson as to the result of placing sugar on the free list, either at once or three years hence. While I do so I do not believe that if free it will necessarily destroy the industry; but I do believe that while it may probably live it will live a cripple. It will cease to invite capital. It will offer small, if any, inducements for the farmer to put in large crops of beets. The beet-growing industry must languish. In Colorado a number of the factories will inevitably be closed down. If the industry continues, the farmer must be content with considerably less for his beets—how much less I would not say, but considerably less—and the factories must be run with more rigid economy in every department, if that is possible. It isn't likely that the factories will all be abandoned; but there must be concentration. Once the smelting business was carried on at many points in Colorado; now it is concentrated at one or two. With the necessary cut in the price the farmer will get for his beets the acreage of beet culture must be greatly lessened. Ask the farmer for how much less he can afford to cultivate beets and his answer will convince you that profitable beet growing and sugar on the free list are almost fatally incompatible. It wouldn't require any serious cut in the price paid for beets to drive the farmers wholly to the cultivation of other crops—wheat, barley, oats, and the like.

GIVES FACTS AND REASONS.

I have said a good deal without giving the facts and reasons upon which my conclusions are based. The facts all resolve themselves into the price for which beet sugar can be made in Colorado and the United States and the price for which foreign-made sugar can be laid down in competition with it.

I suppose it is unnecessary to discuss the proposition that the cheapest sugars, when of practically the same quality, will drive the dearest sugar out of the market.

In presenting the question of the price for which sugar can be made in the United States and in foreign countries I won't cover any controverted ground. I recognize that after all the question of "cost" is the pivotal point in the controversy. Therefore I won't state even debatable facts, and will accept what is acknowledged to be the lowest average figure at which beet sugar can be made in this country and what is confessed to be the cost of foreign sugars.

CONGRESSMAN KINDEL'S FAITH.

There was printed in the News a week or more ago a lengthy article from Congressman GEORGE KINDEL, in which he justified his present acceptance of the sugar schedule of the Underwood bill. In stating his case he becomes enthusiastic over the benefits that free sugar will bring to Colorado. He says:

"I believe the great State of Colorado will not suffer any permanent harm from the removal of the duty on sugar and that the temporary depression that might result chiefly because of the attitude assumed by the sugar manufacturers will be followed by greater prosperity than the State has ever enjoyed under the existing high sugar tariff schedule."

I am going to accept the figures of the cost of domestic and foreign sugars upon which Mr. KINDEL based this enthusiastic and optimistic conclusion. I do this because they are authoritative, besides the advocates of free sugar are constantly using them. I quote again from Mr. KINDEL'S paper:

COST OF BEET SUGAR.

"Now, as to the cost of producing sugar in Colorado, as compared with cost of production in Cuba. The testimony of Mr. Morey before the Hardwick committee, given on page 889 of the reports of that committee, is that the cost to the Great Western Sugar Co. for manufacturing 100 pounds of sugar ranges from $3.65 to $3.75. Mr. Oxnard, of the American Beet Sugar Co., testified before the same committee (Hardwick hearing, p. 400) that the cost of manufacturing beet sugar ranges from $3.50 to $4 per 100 pounds. The statements of other sugar-beet manufacturers place the net cost of beet sugar some place within that limit. A statement filed by Edward F. Dyer with the Ways and Means Committee of the House in the investigation in 1909 places the minimum cost of manufacturing beet sugar at $2.957 per 100 (H. Doc. 1505, 60th Cong., 2d sess., p. 3498). This is for beets testing 17 per cent sugar, the cost for 14 per cent beets being placed at $3.65."

It will be observed that Mr. KINDEL quotes from the testimony of Mr. C. S. Morey, Mr. Oxnard, and Edward F. Dyer, representing, respectively, the Great Western Sugar Co. and the American Beet Sugar Co. Whom Mr. Dyer represents is not stated.

The cost of producing beet sugar, according to these gentlemen, ranges from $3.75 to $3.65 per 100 pounds. Mr. Dyer places the cost at $2.95 per 100 pounds with beets testing 17 per cent sugar, and $3.65 for beets testing 14 per cent sugar.

It may fairly be presumed that Messrs. Morey, Oxnard, and Dyer made the cost of manufacturing beet sugar as high as they conscientiously could.

But Mr. KINDEL also gives the other extreme. He calls upon Edward F. Atkins and the Spreckels Co. These people placed the cost as low as they could, and Mr. KINDEL thus refers to their statements:

"But there is a difference of opinion as to the cost of manufacturing beet sugar. Edward F. Atkins, a well-known cane-sugar expert, who said he had made a careful study of the cost of manufacturing beet sugar, placed the cost in this country at $2.87 per 100 pounds (H. Doc. 1905, 60th Cong., 2d sess., p. 3360). The cost of manufacturing beet sugar given by the Spreckels Beet Sugar Co. for 1910 was placed at $2.70 per 100 pounds (Hardwick hearings, p. 2379.) The cost of manufacturing beet sugar, as given before the Hardwick committee, all coming from experts, ranges from $2.70 to $3.02 per 100 pounds. Would it not appear either that there is a vast range of efficiency among sugar producers in this country, or that somebody has attempted to deceive us?"

COST OF FOREIGN SUGAR.

While I am inclined to think that the one side puts the cost too high and the other side too low, and that from $3 to $3.25 per 100 pounds are more nearly the true figures than those given by either, I will take the lowest cost price that anyone gives as the basis of the conclusion I reach—$2.70 per hundredweight.

The cost of West India cane sugar, as the nearest and best sugar to come in competition with American beet sugar, ought to be acceptable as the basis of the cost of foreign sugar, and the cost of Cuban cane sugar is about the highest on the market.

As to the cost of Cuban sugar, Mr. KINDEL says, quoting from the same paper:

"The sugar manufacturers in this country tell us that the cost of producing raw cane sugar in Cuba is less than $1.50 per 100 pounds. Dyer, in the same statement referred to above, places the cost at from $1.021 to $1.261. The cost of refining is not above 40 cents per 100 pounds. This would make the total cost of Cuban sugar range from $1.421 to $1.661. If refineries were operated in connection with the sugar plants in Cuba it is conceded that the cost of manufacturing refined sugar would be materially reduced."

Thus we have as the very lowest price for which American beet sugar can be made $2.70 per 100 pounds, and the highest cost of Cuban cane sugar, including refining charges, $1.66 per 100 pounds.

I do not refer to the cost charge of foreign beet sugars, for it is conceded on every hand it is much less than the American article. The import duties and excise taxes on foreign beet sugar reach all the way from 40 cents per 100 pounds in the United Kingdom to $8.67 per 100 pounds in Italy. And these duties and excises and bounties in some countries are so complicated I can not fix with anything like accuracy the cost of sugar in these countries.

So we have as the cost for the making and refining of foreign sugar (Cuban) $1.66 per 100 pounds.

This puts the foreign sugar (refined) in the warehouses of New York ready for shipment to customers $1.65 per 100 pounds less than the beet sugar of the United States, estimated at the lowest possible cost price at the factories in the West.

I will not trouble myself with transportation charges to the dealers in or consumers of either the one sugar or the other, for they must nearly balance each other. In any event, there would not be enough difference between these charges to materially change the results of the difference in the cost of production.

Now, what is the logic of these facts? If the beet-sugar industry of the country will not die it must surely languish. It can be conducted with profit to neither the farmer nor the sugar maker. The results I have before suggested are as inevitable as it is that water will run down hill.

DOES COLORADO FAVOR FREE SUGAR?

I know it is claimed by others of the congressional delegation from Colorado besides Mr. KINDEL that the great majority of Colorado people are favorable to free sugar.

If they are, it is because they believe the statements made by Mr. KINDEL and Mr. KEATING. Of course, if sugar can be put on the free list and the beet-sugar industry flourish, giving to the farmers the present or nearly the present price for beets and leaving to the sugar factories a fair margin of profit, Colorado people would, like those of other communities, insist that sugar should be made free.

But the election of last fall is no index that Colorado voters entertain any such views. Conditions in the country at the last election were exceptional. The Republican Party was divided and the certainty that it was doomed to defeat made great bodies of voters indifferent to economic issues. The plain injustice of the tariff as it is outraged the public mind, so that it lost sight of details and minutiæ and gave apparent support to any extreme, whether of reduction or the enlargement of the free list. Colorado voters are as practical as those of other States, and when they will be confronted with the concrete question of the certain closing down of a number of their sugar factories, the absolute necessity for a heavy cut in the prices paid for beets or the closing down of the rest, when such questions can not be clouded with a multitude of others and Democrats must meet the cold, clammy facts as to the future of the sugar industry in Colorado by reason of putting sugar on the free list, I fear Messrs. KINDEL and KEATING and the entire Colorado Democratic ticket will realize that a large majority of Colorado voters are opposed to free trade in sugar, and will line up once more with the Republican Party.

I had no thought when I commenced this article of giving advice to the Colorado delegation at Washington. In any event, our Congressmen now represent different districts and they will be influenced by what they conceive to be the welfare of the counties that make them up; but with the Senators it is different, for they represent the entire State; they are, each of them, as it were, ambassadors from Colorado at the National Capital to keep careful watch over the welfare of all its people.

CONSCIENCE NOT TO BE CONTROLLED BY CAUCUS.

Frankly, I do not believe that any Senator should submit his conscience to the keeping of any party caucus. I do not believe that a Senator, should he believe that the material welfare of his State is linked with an industry that is threatened, should vote to make the threat good and grievously endanger that industry. When I in part represented Colorado in the Senate I refused to be bound by a caucus dictum, and I defied the Senators of my party who tried to read me out of the party because of it. It was by my vote that the treaty with Santo Domingo was ratified, and I have never regretted that vote. But, as I read the Constitution, a Senator who, on matters vital to his State or his country, yields his duty to the decree of a senatorial party caucus is false to his State and to the oath he took on entering upon his duties as Senator.

FORCING IT AS ONE BILL IS UNGENEROUS.

The course taken by the Democratic majority of the House, with the approval of the President, that welds into one great bill every schedule of the tariff, including that of sugar, and with that an income-tax bill, is ungenerous at least to every Member and intended to coerce their votes in favor of parts of the measure they disapprove of.

Mr. Wilson justifies his stand on the sugar question by the fact that sugar is an article of prime necessity and enters into the economy of every family, wherefore it should be made as cheap as possible. That putting sugar on the free list will make sugar cheaper in the end is justly open to challenge, for should free sugar destroy or seriously cripple the American sugar industry the last condition of the consumer may be worse than the first. But I make no issue on this point; only the future can determine it.

But since President Wilson lays stress upon sugar being an article of prime necessity, and bases his stand for free sugar on that as a principle, denying that it is merely a matter of policy, may I not respectfully ask, are not the staples of woolen and cotton fabrics quite as much prime necessities, and do not they enter as deeply into the economy of the American family as sugar; and how can those who favor free sugar for the reason given support and vote for duties that will average 35 per cent on every such fabric and articles of apparel made from them? The Wilson-Underwood tariff bill that has just passed the House is made up of duties imposed to protect thousands of articles that have grown into necessities. They may say the bill puts wool and cotton on the free list, they being the raw material. There will be no complaint if beets—the raw material of sugar—are put on the free list; but sugar, the finished product, just as fabrics made from wool and cotton are the finished product, should be treated as fairly and in as friendly a spirit as the latter. If this is done there will be no complaint.

DUTY OF SENATORS.

Our Senators should, it seems to me, stand side by side with the two Democratic Senators from Louisiana. They should insist that the sugar schedule be taken up and disposed of by itself. Less than two years ago the House revised the tariff, each schedule by itself, sugar being a separate schedule. Why was that course changed to one of revising the tariff in a lump? Everybody knows. It is to intimidate the weak. It is a warning, I suppose, that no matter how injurious the treatment of certain products may be to the States represented by Senators, they must vote for the bill as a whole or suffer in patronage and lose the smiles that would otherwise greet them from the White House.

United States Senators are now elected by the people. They must even be nominated in an open primary. Patronage and White House favor will not take the place of services patriotically and faithfully performed.

T. M. PATTERSON.

ARMOR FRAUDS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present, and ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, a speech delivered in the Senate of the United States on Monday, March 1, 1897, by the Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, United States Senator then, as now, from the State of South Carolina, on the subject of armor-plate frauds.

Mr. President, the speech of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] upon the subject at that time was so forceful and so pregnant with facts that could not be and never were controverted that it now becomes illuminating in view of observations I have made upon this subject within the past few days.

When the day comes, as come it will, that this Government shall manufacture its own armor plate and thus save to the people of this country some $3,000,0000 to $5,000,000 per annum, impartial history will give, and justly give, the credit for that saving of the public moneys to the brave old Senator from South Carolina, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN.

I ask unanimous consent to incorporate his speech into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

"ARMOR FRAUDS.

"SPEECH OF HON. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, MONDAY, MARCH 1, 1897.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, from my brief experience in this body I sympathize very much with the feeling of helplessness and ignorance which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins] has confessed; and, even though I am a member of the Naval Committee and have devoted as much time as I could spare from my other duties here to the business of familiarizing myslf with the subject matter intrusted to our care, I do not feel able to give him all the light that he asks for on this question of armor. But I do feel able to give him enough light, and to give the Senate enough light, to show that there is nothing connected with the recent history of this Government—no expenditure—so reeking with fraud and so disgraceful to those who are responsible for it.

"If we go back and trace the history of this armor-plate manufacture we find that during Mr. Cleveland's first term, when Secretary Whitney began what is known as the construction of the new Navy, the manufacture of armor according to the most approved methods was an unknown thing in this country, and that there was no plant capable of performing that work. The largest steel plant in the country at that time, I believe, was at Bethlehem, and Congress wisely, perhaps—I shall not pretend to say it was not wise—entered not into a contract, but it authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Works by which they were to construct a sufficient addition to their already large steel works to make this armor. The price fixed was away up yonder, some $600 or $700, I am not familiar with the exact amount, but it was $600 or $700 per ton, and it was generally understood in the debates and in the newspapers that the enormous price was given by reason of the fact that an enormous expenditure of three, four, or five million dollars was necessary, and the Government proposed by this large price to reimburse the Bethlehem Manufacturing Co. in the contract which would then be let for its outlay. The proof is overwhelming in these reports, in the testimony taken before the Naval Committee in the investigation last winter, that the plant at Bethlehem which was constructed in addition to what they already had has been paid for twice over by this Government absolutely, and that they have made a present of it to the Bethlehem Co.

"In a year or two after the contract was entered into at Bethlehem the new Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, finding that the delivery of armor from Bethlehem did not keep pace with the needs of the Navy, or for some other reason—that was the ostensible excuse—without authority from Congress, entered into a contract of his own with the Carnegie Works at Pittsburgh, by which they were to receive the same price for the armor that Bethlehem was receiving, and he thereby hoped, as he explained, to bring about competition in the price of armor and have two plants instead of one, and thus enable the Government to obtain all the armor it might want in the construction of the new Navy at reduced prices after a while.

"The construction of the new Navy has gone on. It is getting to be rather respectable. It has cost us an enormous sum. Last winter, when the Venezuela war scare was on, the proposition came from the House to increase the Navy by four battleships. There was a struggle here to reduce it to two, but we compromised on three, as I foretold would be the case, because there are only three navy yards in this country that can construct such ships. Each one of them got a ship, and they, in collusion, agreed as to the price they would bid on those ships, and no doubt we are to-day paying a million dollars bonus or a million and a half dollars clear profit over and above a reasonable sum for their construction.

"But the question of armor to put on these ships was under investigation by the Naval Committee, and all we could do in this body as to the reduction that should be had was to put it off and forbid any contract being let out for armor plate until an investigation was had by the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy made that investigation. It is here. It is full and complete. The Naval Committee has had this matter under consideration during the whole year; we have paid more attention to it than any and all else before us; and notwithstanding our ignorance—and I confess we are still ignorant—we have learned enough to know that these two companies, instead of competing with each other in the manufacture of armor, are to-day in collusion and have formed a trust; that they fix the price absolutely, without any regard to justice, without any regard to the liberal manner in which the Government has treated them in the past, without any regard to the fact that the price they have received, amounting to about $15,000,000 for plates they have already manufactured, has paid them back fourfold for the expenditure they paid out, and that they have had large dividends on account of the investment besides.

"Mr. Herbert comes forward and makes a report based on the best information he can obtain as to the construction and cost of armor in Europe, and then he takes up the reports of the Carnegie Co. and the Bethlehem Co. He went to the auditor's office at Pittsburgh to find out the profits they had returned for taxation. He analyzed every bit of the information he obtained, and here are his conclusions:

The Secretary takes as the cost of labor and material in double-forged, harveyized, nickel-steel armor the sum of	$196
He assumes that the plant costing $1,500,000 would need $150,000 per year for maintaining it, or $50 per ton upon 3,000 tons of armor, and adds to the price	50
Making	246
Or in round numbers	250
He then adds for profit 50 per cent, or	125
Making	375
And then adds for nickel to be furnished hereafter by the contractors	20
Making	395
Or in round numbers	400

"And that is the way the $400 figures have been reached. We have constructed these armor factories, we have given them to these people, we are asked to give them 50 per cent profit upon the reasonable cost of the manufacture, to give $10 extra as a bonus on guesswork, and reach $400 as the basis of the Naval Committee.

"I will say here that the reason why there is some ambiguity or a little latitude in the report of the committee as being somewhere between $300 and $400 was in order that the Naval Committee might come in here like a band of brethren upon a united report without any minority battle to be fought.

"The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chandler], who has been largely instrumental in getting up this investigation, whose ability nobody questions, is here asking us to go back to $300 as a fair price, and here are his conclusions as to why that is enough.

"After the Secretary's report was received, the committee engaged in considering the question whether it would not be a sufficiently liberal allowance to take the careful estimate of the Secretary's experts as to the cost of labor and material; to allow for maintenance of the plant only three-fifths of the sum per ton named by the Secretary, and to add only 33⅓ per cent for profits on work where the plant has been in fact paid for and is maintained by the Government. A statement thus revised would be as follows:

Cost of labor and material per ton	$168
Add for reforging	12
	180
Add for maintenance of plant	30
	210
33⅓ per cent profit	70
	280
Add for nickel	20
Making the price for armor	300

"Now, Mr. President, the proposition here is to limit this price to $300 or have the Government go into the manufacture of armor on its own account rather than submit to further imposition. Those who are accustomed to hold up their hands in horror at the idea of the Government going into business, who see the specter of the Subtreasury or the Government ownership of railroads in everything brought in here to take the trusts by the throat and cause them to relinquish their grasp upon the throats of the people say, 'Oh, no; we can not have the Government do anything on its own hook except to sit down here as the agent and tool of these corporations and trusts, wring from the people their hard earnings in taxes, and turn them over to these robbers.' That is the business we are engaged in. That is what we are here for, and that is why all of this discussion is being raised here as to the Government not going into business and buying or erecting a plant of its own for the purpose of making armor. How else are we to do under the law which requires us not to purchase abroad one bolt or one scintilla of material which goes into these ships, which limits us to home manufacture? How are we to break the grasp of this trust?

"The theory advanced in this body as we heard it discussed here in regard to the monopolies in the District of Columbia in the matter of electric lighting and gas is that Congress can regulate monopolies here, hold them down and make them put their prices at whatever we please; that we can control monopolies. I say here that the evidence is overwhelming in this electric-light business and everything else that instead of our controlling monopolies, monopolies have the Senate in their breeches pockets.

"Mr. President, I grow so indignant when I trace the history of this iniquitous business that I am apt to say harsh words, but God knows I believe every utterance I have made here is true. I would hate to believe or even to insinuate that these people have their paid agents in this Chamber. I would hate to suppose or suspect——

"Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

"Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator dare to say that, or even dare to insinuate it?

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

"Mr. TILLMAN. I dare say that, as far as I can see and understand the situation here. I can explain it upon no other ground except that there must be men here who are the agents of these trusts.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I say that is a disgraceful slander, unworthy of any gentleman.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

"Mr. CULLOM. And in order.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I might say that none but the galled jade winces.

"Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator applies that to me, I have a very sufficient answer.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut must address the Chair and be recognized before he can interrupt a Senator on the floor.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the pardon of the Chair.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

"Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator addresses any language of that kind to me, I have a sufficient answer.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must not proceed to speak until he is recognized by the Chair.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I accept the rebuke.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I said I would feel ashamed to even insinuate that there were men here who are so lost to their duties to the men who sent them here and to the States they represent as to be guilty of this, but I am bound to put two and two together. I am compelled, as an honest man, to speak what I believe to be true, and so help me God, unless this be true, then I can not explain it upon any other hypothesis.

"Mr. President, to go on with the question as to the Government going into business, who conducts this vast and complex machine of handling the mails, a business ramifying into the remotest corners of this country, covering every State and county and hamlet, a monopoly created by the Government and made self-sustaining almost in spite of the facts brought out here and notorious to everybody that everything else has gone down in the last 20 years except the compensation of these corporations for transporting the mails? The cost of manufacturing steel rails is one-half what it was 15 years ago, when these contracts were begun, or 10 years ago. Everything now, almost, is reduced by reason of the shrinkage in the volume of money; yet the Armor-Plate Trust, created by the money of the Government, acknowledged by the Secretary of the Navy to be a trust, is to have its hands thrust deep into the coffers of the Treasury, into the pockets of the people, and when I get up here and try to expose their iniquities and proclaim my belief that there is dishonesty in it—fraud, peculation—I am twitted. I do not want to say anything harsh. God knows I have got enough vitriol in me now, and I could let out a heap of it. I will try to go on with the question.

"On what do I base these charges? Here is the conclusion of the Secretary of the Navy, as to his belief that there is a trust in the manufacture of armor, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"During the debate in the Senate upon the armor question at the last session of Congress, one question discussed was whether there was an understanding or agreement among armor manufacturers throughout the world to keep up prices. This was one of the questions I inquired about upon my recent trip to England and France. If there be any such understanding it is of course impossible to prove it, unless some one of those to whom the secret has been confided should betray his trust. My impression is that there is and has been for some time at the least a friendly understanding among armor contractors both in Europe and America as to the prices to be charged for armor. This impression I find prevails abroad, certainly among some of the persons who have inquired into the subject.

"Without undertaking in any manner to justify such combinations, there are reasons that would naturally induce armor contractors to agree among themselves as to the prices to be charged to their own Government, and also with armor makers abroad as to the prices at which armor is to be furnished to countries which do not manufacture it.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Here we have the representative of the Government in the control of the Navy Department, the man charged last winter by this Congress with the duty of investigating this question, and who has done it fully and thoroughly, proclaiming his belief in a combination, and yet he has acted so liberally that after arriving at such a conclusion he allows them 50 per cent profit in order to make the price $400.

"What other business in this country, except that of those conducted by trusts and monopolies, now earns 50 per cent, or 30 per cent, or 20 per cent, or 10 per cent? Why are these millionaires to be given 50 per cent profit after we have created the factories and presented them to them? Why, I ask, unless, as I said, it be because they have their 'friends' in this Chamber?

"Mr. President, if the statement were made, the proof produced that the Treasury was to be looted to the amount of two or three million dollars in a transaction, and there was no doubt about it, and men got up here and said, 'We can not help it; we must let this go on; we can not have the Government go into competition in business; we have got a monopoly here, created by ourselves, two corporations in combination; they have the Government down; they have their hands in our pockets, and we can not help it,' what other conclusion can be reached but that we are sharing in the booty? Let me ask why we can not help it? We can help it if Senators will rise to a sense of their duty, will consider that the country is looking at us, and we are already considered a body disgraced by reason of our lack of ability to do business according to the dictates of Wall Street. We do not hurry up enough. We do not obey orders. The touch of the electric button between Wall Street and the Senate has been broken somehow in the last year or two on the financial issue; and the newspapers are turned loose on us like a pack of sleuthhounds to abuse and slander and misrepresent the Senate. If the Senate does this thing in the broad light of day, in the face of the facts produced by its own committee and by our Secretary of the Navy, how can we escape the condemnation of honest men as being the paid agents of these corporations?

"But there is another phase of this armor business that is even blacker than this. In 1894 a big complaint was made through the newspapers, a furor created as to frauds in armor plate. The charges were that the Carnegies were not complying with their contract even at the high price we were paying them, $650 a ton; that they were putting off on us spongy material, rotten material, untempered material, as armor plate at that price. The Naval Committee at the other end of the Capitol got a resolution through that body instructing its committee to investigate these questions. They sent for the manufacturers themselves. They did not go out in the highways and byways and look up this informer or that spy, and men who had been turned off by the company; but they sent for the superintendent and the manager of the Carnegie Works and the others connected with the manufacture of those plates and asked them questions, took their own admissions, brought in no other testimony except that which Carnegie's men themselves made; and what did they report? Here are the charges made against the company, which were admitted by the agents of the company who appeared as witnesses before the committee. I want the Secretary to read it.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Now, gentlemen, those of you who do not feel so thin-skinned, who know you are honest, who feel that you are the agents only of the people of the States which you represent, please listen.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"THE CHARGES AGAINST THE COMPANY.

"[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 23, 1894, p. 8638.]

"First. The plates did not receive the uniform treatment required by the specifications of the contracts. In many cases the treatment was irregular, and in other cases it was practically inefficient. The specifications of the contract of February 28, 1893, required that each plate should be annealed, oil tempered, and again annealed, the last process being an annealing one.

"Second. False reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made by the Government inspectors. This was in violation of paragraph 95 of the circular concerning armor-plate appurtenances, dated January 16, 1893, which was made a part of the contract. Paragraph 95 says:

"'The contractor shall state for each article in writing the exact treatment it has received.'

"The specifications of the contract of November 20, 1890, paragraph 164, say:

"'A written statement of work and contractor's tests to be commenced and in progress each day must be furnished to the chief inspector.'

"Third. No bolts received the double treatment provided for in the specifications of either contract. A report of a double treatment, however, was made to the Government inspectors.

"Fourth. Specimens taken from the plates both before and after treatment to ascertain the tensile strength of each plate were stretched without the knowledge of the Government inspectors, so as to increase their apparent tensile strength when actually tested.

"Fifth. False specimens taken from other plates were substituted for the specimens selected by the Government inspectors.

"Sixth. The testing machine was repeatedly manipulated by order of the superintendent of the armor-plate mill so as to increase the apparent tensile strength of the specimens. These specimens were juggled in measurement so as to increase their apparent ductility.

"Seventh. Various specimens selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated without their knowledge before they were submitted to test.

"Eighth. Plates selected by the Government inspectors for ballistic test were re-treated with the intention of improving their ballistic resistance without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. In one case at least the conclusion is almost irresistible that the bottom of another plate was substituted for the top half of plate A 619, after it had been selected by the Government and while awaiting shipment to Indian Head. Upon this ballistic test a group of plates containing 348 tons, valued at about $180,000, were to be accepted or rejected. In three cases, at least, the plates selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated in this manner without their knowledge. These ballistic plates represented 779 tons of armor, valued at over $410,000. The groups represented by these three plates had all been submitted for premium of $30 per ton if they passed a more severe test than required for acceptance.

"Ninth. In violation of the specifications of the contract, pipes or shrinking cavities, erroneously called blowholes, in the plates were plugged by the contractors and the defects concealed from the Government inspectors. These cavities, in some cases, diminished the resistance and value of the plate.

"Tenth. The inspector's stamp was either duplicated or stolen, and used without the knowledge of the Government inspectors.

"Eleventh. The Government inspector in inspecting bolts was deceived by means of false templets or gauges.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, those were the charges, and the testimony is there to show that every word of them was admitted and confessed before a committee of the House of Representatives, and that House, without a division—because even the Republicans over there dared not face their constituents for reelection and fight the investigation—passed a resolution to have certain plates taken off the vessels of the Navy and have them put through the necessary test to show the frauds and prove them. Mr. Carnegie was fined by the Secretary of the Navy and, by some hocus-pocus, this glorious President of ours, who, God be thanked, goes out of power in two days from now, remitted that fine. The thieves were caught; they confessed that they had robbed the Government; the House of Representatives sent to you a resolution to have certain plates tested upon your new Navy to prove the frauds which had been practiced upon the Government.

"That resolution came over here and went to sleep and died without action, and Mr. Carnegie sports his steam yacht and floats back to Scotland to his game preserve, and writes gold-bug literature to tell the American people how they ought to behave themselves. He can come to Congress and come to the President, and get such recognition as he has had. Why should he not sport steam yachts and live in palaces? Why not? He can conduct private business; yes; oh, yes; but we can not. We can not compete with him, because there is too much red tape here, too much eight-hour law, too much this, too much that, too much tother created here by political influences to stop the wheels of an honest administration and to rob the people and make millionaires at the expense of the paupers, who are growing more and more numerous every day. Then, when I get up here and bring these facts to the attention of the Senate and ask the Senators if they do not propose to convict themselves in the eyes of the people of being in collusion with these men, of being only their greedy and paid agents, a Senator gets up here with his thin skin and undertakes to twit me with being insulting and slanderous!

"Why was not that resolution passed here and those plates taken off? Why? Why? Here is a list of the ships of our new Navy—our boasted new Navy, the one we love so, and that we pet so. This is only a partial list of the ships the plates on which were confessed to have been plugged up, or not tempered, or some other thing which would weaken them and make them worthless, and not according to contract.

"Four on the Monterey, six on the Monadnock, eight on the New York, four on the Amphitrite, three on the Terror, three on the Oregon, three on the Olympia, six on the Indiana, four on the Massachusetts, and so on.

"You were asked to cooperate with the House and to have those plates taken off and tested before the Government paid for them, and you would not do it. Why did you not do it? [A pause.] Do not everybody answer at once [laughter], especially you people who think I am slandering the Senate. Why did you not do it?

"If we get into a war with Spain or anybody else and those ships of ours go out to meet an honestly constructed vessel of equal strength, a shot from one of those vessels plunging through one of these spongy plates which have been plugged up would send our American vessel with 600 or 800 men to the bottom of the sea by the frauds perpetrated by these pets of the Senate. Then what will your responsibility be?

"Now, are you ready to continue these monopolists in their grab game of looting the Treasury at will? You can only help it by authorizing the construction of a plant which will make armor for the Government in case these monopolists will not submit to a decent price. Our committee tells you that $300 will allow them 33 per cent profit, while the Secretary of the Navy, in order to reach $400, has to give them 50 per cent profit and $10 a ton bonus.

"Why should you not reduce the price to $300 and say, 'Now, you robber rascals, if you do not come here and take this work at a reasonable price, we will make it ourselves, even if it costs $500 or $800 a ton.' We would at least have then the satisfaction that the money that is spent would go to the common laborers and mechanics, the 'men in blouses,' who are going into the ditch with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Quay], or, I believe, he is to go into the ditch with them. [Laughter.] Now, my friend, if you do not vote to fix the price at $300, we will know that you do not mean to go with them.

"The eight-hour law and the red tape in connection with Government administration in conducting its own affairs is such that it costs the Government more. But let us distribute the benefit among the masses and not concentrate it upon these two pets, the Carnegie Co. and the people at Bethlehem, who have had a rich, rich, rich reward for their 'patriotism' 10 years ago in going into the manufacture of armor so that Americans could have a navy constructed by Americans out of American material. You are face to face with it, gentlemen; you can not dodge it. That is the situation.

"This committee comes here and says that these frauds were perpetrated, and they proved it by the admissions of Carnegie, and you did nothing about it, and would not even investigate. Carnegie was fined, but the fine was remitted. The two plants were in collusion, and the Secretary of the Navy said so before the committee, and I as an humble member of that committee directed all the inquiries I put to them to bring out the fact that they to-day are practically one corporation. They did not deny it. That is the situation. You can not help yourselves from taking whatever they offer, unless you do now allow the Government to make its own plant. I would not say buy any plant, because there are only two for sale—they are the only two in the country—and we open the doors to buy what we paid for to these people, and we were asked to give them two dollars for every one the plant cost.

"They have got it; they have got the title; and now you say 'We will buy it.' I would rather build a new one. Any honest man who resents robbery and rascality and stealing would rather build a new one than let these thieves have their own way. I would sooner see them become useless if the Government enters into the manufacture. That is my position. I am not afraid to get up here and say what I think and what I believe when you give me facts like these to base my belief on. Nobody from Connecticut or anywhere else is going to terrorize me. I am not thin skinned. I am not afraid of being accused of stealing if I did vote for the subsidy for the Southern mail last night. You men who have been here so long, who are so friendly, so loving and kind in your consideration toward the great wealthy combinations—you are the men who have to face the alternative of voting for a decent reduction in the price of armor and giving us a way out by allowing us to construct a plant if these people will not come down to a decent rate; you have got to vote one way or the other.

"You have voted for these people in the past without regard to public opinion, and I dare say you will vote that way to-night. The old guard never surrenders. But there is a young man in the Senate from West Virginia, a weakling, a suckling, like myself, who feels his inability here to get in touch with the business of the Senate, and sits here and sees things ground out; and you get up and quarrel like schoolboys or like geese over some little pitiable $10,000 or $5,000 or $3,000 proposition, and you slide through these millions like greased lightning [laughter]; you do not even discuss them; you do not even ventilate them. Here is one that the Naval Committee brings to your attention. We prove these charges; we prove not only that they are robbing the Government, but that they are practicing fraud upon the Government in the manufacture of armor, and they have not been punished for it. Will you stop it, or will you not? Will you allow the Government to go into the business of manufacturing armor if the Government must pay these people twice what the armor is worth?

"I went down to Bethlehem. I followed that thing through from the ore at the beginning to the finished plate at the end. I saw how many men were at work; I saw the machinery; I saw the entire output and how it was handled; and I do not believe it costs $200 a ton to make it. I am ready to take an oath to that, and others of the committee think so, too.

"But the Naval Committee tries to be harmonious. We come here with what we think is a reasonable proposition, a liberal proposition, to give these people $300 a ton, and it is left for the Senate to decide now whether we shall reduce the price to $300 or will allow the Government a way out by giving it an opportunity to make its own armor if it can not buy it at that price.

"Mr. President, I have only to say in conclusion that I would be glad if somebody would ask some question about this, for I have probably forgotten some points about it.

"Mr. STEWART. I would ask the Senator the cost of the same kind of armor in other countries?

"Mr. TILLMAN. We found out that all the armor manufacturers in the world are in the same combination that these two American concerns are—the Creusot people in France, the German manufacturers, and the English are all together, each robbing their own Government all in a pile. So that if you go abroad you will only get on the other prong of the fork. You do not want to go abroad. I would rather pay the American workmen $10 a day for six hours' work, and let this money be distributed among the masses, than allow it to go into the pockets of the combination here. Let us do the Government business through Government agencies, and then these combinations against the Government will be in vain.

"(To Mr. Quay, who had risen.) Now I am ready for the Senator, who is the blouse Senator. [Laughter.] I am afraid he is not with the workingman. I know how he is going to vote.

"Mr. QUAY. There is no difficulty about the way I am going to cast my vote on this question; but I merely desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether I understood him to say that this amendment, proposing to limit the cost to $300, comes from the Naval Committee and is offered by the authority of that committee?

"Mr. TILLMAN. It comes in this way. The Senator from New Hampshire and all of the committee, except four, were in favor of fixing the limit at $300, but out of consideration for the other members of the committee, and with a desire, as we thought, to be reasonable and to get some action—mind you, we have got to run the gantlet of the House, and everybody knows how the trusts are fortified in that end of the Capitol at this time, with the gag law in full force and effect, with every man manacled and unable to obtain the eye of the Speaker or get a chance to say a word, unless he crawl around on his belly like a worm—for a free American Representative in Congress has got to crawl around like a whipped cur to obtain recognition. You can not do anything over there; and unless the Senate rises to its duty and protects the people, then the steal goes on. The majority of the committee are in favor of $300 a ton.

"Mr. QUAY. But they did not direct this amendment to be offered on the floor of the Senate.

"Mr. TILLMAN. We did not direct it.

"Mr. QUAY. That is all I want to know.

"Mr. TILLMAN. We did not direct it, because we knew that we had to pass the gantlet of the great moguls of the Appropriations Committee, and we proposed to come in here, where we would have a better chance, and ask you gentlemen to give us some consideration. Let the Naval Committee take charge of the Navy, instead of you gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations managing it, because we do know more about it than you do, although you are all-wise and have been here long enough to have wisdom die with you whenever you go out of here. [Laughter.]"

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE (S. DOC. NO. 46).

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. At the dedication of the Jefferson Memorial Building at St. Louis, Mo., on the 30th day of April, 1913, the principal address was delivered by Prof. William M. Thornton, of the University of Virginia. The occasion was a historical one, and the address is of such merit that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ALLEGED COTTON POOL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution coming over from a previous day.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 91, by Mr. SMITH of South Carolina:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to inquire fully as to the names of the party or parties or corporations that sold the cotton alleged to have been bought in the year 1910 by a pool of purchasers, who are now under indictment by the Department of Justice, and at what prices these parties sold this cotton to the alleged pool, and whether or not the parties selling this cotton owned the cotton at the time of the sale thereof, and the price of spot cotton in the markets of this country on the date of the making of these contracts or the sale of these contracts for this cotton, and to report the same at the earliest possible moment to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this resolution yesterday and asked that it should go over. As a matter of fact, I wanted to examine the resolution and wanted to examine the opinion from the Attorney General's office which the Senator from South Carolina afterwards produced and incorporated in the RECORD.

The opinion from the Attorney General's office thoroughly confirms me in the view which I expressed upon the floor of the Senate. Nowhere in that opinion does the Attorney General say or indicate that the Department of Justice is not fully qualified and equipped to make any investigation which it chooses as laying the foundation for future action. The resolution does not appear to provide for securing information to lay the foundation for future action. It calls upon the Secretary of Commerce to give information to the Senate for its action, I suppose, which action can be only in the way of legislation.

While it occurs to me that the Senate in seeking information should use its own agencies, I do not propose to object to the consideration of the resolution or to oppose its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I see that the chairman of the Finance Committee is present in the Senate. I should like to ask him what action, if any, his committee has taken in regard to the matter of making public the testimony that is being presented here before various subcommittees in connection with the proposed tariff legislation. I understood his committee was to consider that matter some day last week. I have not personally been informed of any results that may or may not have been obtained. I should be glad to know the result of their consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, at the meeting of the committee last week a resolution was adopted, and I think the papers carried the substance of the resolution, providing that all briefs upon the tariff which had been filed or which might be filed and which were not already printed as a part of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House should be printed. There are a great many of these briefs, and it took two or three or probably more men some little time to classify them. They were thrown together without much reference to the subjects to which they related. Those gentlemen have finished their work as to the briefs that have been filed up to this time, and the briefs are in the hands of the printer to be printed. I can not tell the Senator when they will be ready for delivery, but I should imagine very likely to-morrow.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am very glad to hear that the committee have taken comparatively prompt action in regard to this matter. The course the committee seemed disposed to take when this matter was first brought up had rather created in my mind the idea that perhaps they would decide not to make this information public.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not understand why he should make that statement. On the occasion of his first reference to this matter in the Senate Chamber I stated to him that I should bring the matter to the attention of the committee and that I myself was in favor of the publication of all these briefs that had not already been published, and I was satisfied that there would be no objection on the part of the committee. The Senator has referred to the matter several times since then, and every time he has referred to it I have made substantially the same statement with reference to it. At this date, in view of what has transpired here, I do not see why the Senator should throw any doubt upon the purpose of the committee with reference to this matter.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, the only reason I threw any doubt upon it was that it has taken about two weeks of consideration to bring the matter to the present point. I never could understand why there was any hesitation on the part of the committee, or the chairman of the committee, or any member of it, or any Member on that side of the Chamber, about making all these matters public. Another reason why I was in doubt about it was because one of the most competent members of the committee, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], argued here upon the floor that he thought it was not advisable that this information should be made public. I do not attempt to quote him exactly, but that was the gist of his argument as I remember it from listening to it.

Certainly there is no doubt but that this matter has been treated in rather a dilatory way. In addition to that there have been repeated attempts to intimidate the people who are coming down here to offer testimony, threats to have them "hung as high as Haman," threats that there is a million dollars to be used to investigate the actions of men who may express their opinions in regard to these matters; and now, no later than this morning, a publication in the daily papers applying opprobrious terms to the great experts of this country who are coming down here day by day to give the information that they, and they alone, possess in regard to the conduct of all the multifarious business of this country. It seems to me almost like an organized attempt to suppress and stifle the information that Congress ought to have for the proper consideration of this bill. It is for those reasons that I am trying to have this action taken promptly and effectively and completely, and I think I have good reason for it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not recall that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who is not in the Chamber, a member of the Committee on Finance, has ever given utterance to the views that the Senator attributes to him. I think I have heard substantially everything the Senator from Georgia has said upon this subject. I do not think he has ever said that he thought it was unwise to publish these briefs. I do not think any member of the committee has ever entertained any such sentiment as that. The Senator upon my left [Mr. JAMES] reminds me that he voted in favor of their publication when the question was before the committee.

I want to say to the Senate, once for all, with reference to these briefs, that from the very beginning of this session, when gentlemen interested in these tariff hearings came to see me pressing for hearings, I suggested to them that I did not think there was any necessity for further oral hearings such as had been had before the Ways and Means Committee, but that I thought if there was anything that representatives of any industry desired to say in addition to what they had already said it could be said in a way that was more likely to receive consideration from the committee, through briefs, than by these oral hearings.

I explained in full my experience with oral hearings, and expressed my opinion that they were not nearly so satisfactory to the Senators as well-considered briefs and did not contribute toward informing the Senate to nearly the same extent. I said to each of them: "As a substitute for hearings I think the plan I shall suggest to the committee will be that when these briefs are all in we will carefully classify them, carefully index them, and have them all printed in one volume of moderate size; and in my judgment a book of briefs properly indexed will be more likely to be read by the Senators than these long, drawn-out hearings, full of irrelevant and immaterial matter, requiring so much time on the part of Senators to obtain a minimum of information."

So I want to say to the Senator that in the very beginning, before any suggestion had been made as to the printing of briefs, I had outlined to various gentlemen who had come here to discuss these matters with me this plan of printing the briefs for the use of the Senate.

Now, the Senator says we have delayed in the matter. Why, Mr. President, what he calls delay was merely waiting in order that everybody who desired to do so might have an opportunity to present briefs, so that they might all be published at the same time and in one volume. The Senator became anxious about the matter of printing, however, and pressed it, and I assured him I would take it up at once. The result is that we will have to have two books. The briefs that are in now will be printed. We are expecting other briefs. We are expecting answers to some questions that have been sent out. As soon as those come in I assure the Senator that we will have printed the additional briefs and the answers to these questions in whatever form they may come, whether they are in the nature of briefs or statements or testimony or depositions.

I do not think Senators on the other side have any idea that it is our purpose to conceal anything or to withhold from the Senate the fullest measure of information. Certainly, if they have any such opinion as that, it is not warranted by anything that has happened. We were simply proceeding in an orderly manner.

With reference to what the Senator has said about the manner in which representatives of these industries have been treated who have come down here for the purpose of conferring with members of the Finance Committee, or appearing before subcommittees, I want to say to the Senator that I have heard no complaint on the part of gentlemen who have come here as to the treatment they have received either from the hands of the individual members of the committee or from the subcommittees. I do not think gentlemen who have come to this Capitol on similar missions have ever been treated more courteously and more considerately than these gentlemen are being treated by the majority members of the committee and by the subcommittees. If the Senator knows or can state to the Senate any individual complaint of lack of courteous treatment or lack of opportunity of these gentlemen to confer when they have desired to do so, I should be glad to have him state it. I want to say to him frankly that if there has been anything of that sort it has not come to my knowledge.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. LIPPITT. I scarcely know why the Senator from North Carolina asked me that question, because I have not in the slightest degree, or at any time, intimated that he or his committee had not given hearings.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I wholly misunderstood what the Senator said a few minutes ago. He did not mean that, then.

Mr. LIPPITT. On the contrary, I took occasion here a few days ago to state that I thought the committee, as far as was within their power and at the expenditure of a great deal of personal effort and time, had been giving these hearings. What I objected to was the fact that the result of those hearings was not made available to the Members of this body and to the country, and that the important information that was being filed there from day to day, and that was being poured into the ears of the members of these subcommittees verbally from day to day, was being almost wasted, although much of it had been prepared with great trouble and great care and great skill by the only people in the entire world who know the facts.

MIDSHIPMEN AT THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up a measure which is of very great general importance in connection with the appointment of naval cadets.

On the 30th of June of this year the privilege of appointing two cadets to the Naval Academy by Senators and Representatives will expire, and the Navy Department thinks it is very important that we shall get through at this special session of Congress legislation continuing that privilege. Consequently I ask unanimous consent that we take up for immediate consideration Senate bill 2272.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that we have a unanimous-consent agreement that upon the completion of the routine morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 37, authorizing the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district, West Virginia.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, we can not hear what the Senator says on this side.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. SWANSON. The matter will take only a few minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not do it under the unanimous-consent agreement. It says that we will take up the matter immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I appreciate the recognition, but it is entirely vain.

I was going to say to the Senator from Virginia that I sincerely hope there will be no objection to the bill which he proposes to take up. It was intended to put that clause in the last naval appropriation bill. It was a mere accident that it was not included in the bill. It is absolutely necessary, in order to keep up the appointments at the academy, that this bill should be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason I objected was because of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KERN. Senators on this side of the Chamber were unable to hear a word said by the Senator from Utah. We have no sort of idea as to what the subject of discussion was.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill. I called attention to the fact that there was a unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, and that agreement was that upon the completion of the routine morning business to-day the Senate would proceed with the consideration of a Senate resolution; and under the rules I did not see how we could, by unanimous consent, take up the bill and consider it, in the face of the agreement yesterday.

PAINT CREEK COAL FIELDS, WEST VIRGINIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate resolution 37.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 37, authorizing an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district, West Virginia, reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this resolution, and I want in a very few words to give my reasons for that vote.

The question which is presented by the resolution is one of far-reaching importance. With what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] had to say on this subject yesterday afternoon I, in very large measure, sympathize. I think it is an exceedingly delicate matter to undertake to investigate the proceedings of the officials of a State—the governor, the courts, or the legislature—and yet I conceive it to be the duty of Congress, under some circumstances, to do that very thing.

I think that the order which was issued by the governor in these proceedings, the appointment of the military commission to try cases under the civil law, their action in trying individual citizens and sentencing them to terms in the State prison were violative not only of the constitutional guaranties contained in the constitution of West Virginia but of the fourteenth amendment contained in the Federal Constitution and destructive of the most important principles which lie at the foundation of free government.

I understand that when a military government has been established the commander in chief of the army may appoint a military commission, which military commission may be empowered to try not only cases of violations of military law but cases of violations of law generally. But I understand that that applies only where the army is in the enemy's country and where either the courts of the enemy's country have been closed or are incapable of action, or it is perfectly manifest that they are so out of sympathy with the forces that are for the time being in control that they ought not to be permitted to administer the law.

I do not understand that that can ever be the case in a State of this Union. I do not believe that it is competent under any circumstances to declare martial law in the way in which martial law was declared in the State of West Virginia, namely, that not only the military forces of the State were called out to suppress disorder and to apprehend persons who had been guilty of violating the law, but to supplant the courts of the State in the trial and conviction of the offenders.

As far back as the year 1322 such a proceeding on the part of the English military authorities was declared to be wholly unwarranted. It was one of the things which was declared against in the Petition of Right under the first Charles. I read very briefly what is said upon that subject in McGehee on Due Process of Law, at page 13:

> The formation of the Petition of Right in the Commons, under the leadership of Sir Edward Coke, was the result, and that great constitutional document became a statute of the realm by the grudging assent of the King. This instrument recites various guaranties of the rights of the subject and acts of the King declared to be in violation thereof, which show the meaning given to the guaranties. Chapter 29 of the Magna Charta of 9 Henry III, and statutes 28, Edward III, chapter 3 (where the words "due process of law" are used), are recited and declared to be violated by imprisonment of subjects "without any cause showed," "but that they were detained by your Majesty's special command, signified by the lords of your privy council"; statutes 25, Edward III, chapter 4, is given, and declared to be infringed by commissions authorizing trial by martial law. The construction thus put upon these acts is confirmed for the future by the King's assent to the prayer "that no freeman in any such manner as is before mentioned be imprisoned or detained, * * * and that the aforesaid commissions, for proceeding by martial law, may be revoked and annulled; and that hereafter no commissions of like nature may issue forth to any person or persons whatsoever to be executed as aforesaid, lest by color of them any of your majesty's subjects be destroyed or put to death contrary to the laws and franchises of the realm."

To that declaration of the Petition of Right the reluctant assent of the King of England was given.

In the case of the Earl of Lancaster, during the rebellion of 1322, after he had been tried by court-martial and executed under the sentence of that tribunal, the Parliament declared as follows:

> 1. That in time of peace no man ought to be adjudged to death for treason or any other offense without being arraigned and put to answer.
> 2. That regularly, when the King's courts are open, it is a time of peace in judgment of law.
> 3. That no man ought to be sentenced to death by the record of the King without his legal trial per pares.

That has been the law of England since that day. It was the law of England when we borrowed the common law and when we adopted the Constitution.

I have no doubt that the spirit of this rule, which was embodied in the Petition of Right and before that in Magna Charta, was covered and intended to be covered first by the fifth amendment to the Constitution and later along by the use of the same words with reference to due process of law in the fourteenth amendment.

This question has arisen in the United States from time to time. In Shay's rebellion, which was referred to here the other day and which occurred, as I recall, in 1787, Gov. Bowdoin's order to Gen. Lincoln contained this clause:

> Consider yourself in all your military offensive operations constantly as under the direction of the civil officers, save where any armed force shall appear to oppose your marching to execute these orders.

Again, in the Pennsylvania disturbances of 1793, the Secretary of War stated:

> The object of the expedition was to assist the marshal of the district to make prisoners.

And President Washington, who, as we know, marched at the head of the troops, declared:

> The Army should not consider themselves as judges or executioners of the law, but only as employed to support the proper authorities in the execution of the laws.

In the history of the United States, so far as I have been able to investigate the question, I have been unable to find a parallel for the order which was issued in these proceedings. Let me read what was said by the governor of West Virginia in his military order, for the purpose of contrasting it with the various orders and pronouncements to which I have just called attention. It is dated—

> GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 23.
> STATE CAPITOL,
> Charleston, November 16, 1912.
> The following is published for the guidance of the military commission, organized under General Orders, No. 22, of this office, dated November 16, 1912:
> 1. The military commission is substituted for the criminal courts of the district covered by the martial-law proclamation, and all offenses against the civil laws as they existed prior to the proclamation of November 15, 1912, shall be regarded as offenses under the military law, and as a punishment therefor the military commission can impose such sentences, either lighter or heavier than those imposed under the civil law, as in their judgment the offender may merit.

Now, let it be remembered, Mr. President, that this order was issued at a time when it is conceded the courts having jurisdiction of these various offenses were open and competent to try them. It was as easy for the military authorities to take these individuals who had been apprehended before the regularly organized courts of the State for trial and punishment as it was to try them before this military commission and then take them after sentence to the prisons of the State.

Not only is this military commission substituted for the courts of the State and given jurisdiction over these various offenses, but by this order the will of the military commission is substituted for the laws of the State. When a military government has been established and a military commission organized to try cases in a condition of war, it is true that the will of the military commander becomes supreme. As was stated in the Milligan case by the counsel for the Government:

> The officer executing martial law is at the same time supreme legislator, supreme judge, and supreme executive.

Could it ever have been contemplated under a scheme of constitutional government such as ours that in a State of this Union there could ever exist circumstances which would make the executive officer of the State the supreme legislator, the supreme judge, and the supreme executive? Yet that is what this order in effect does. As I have said, it not only puts this military commission in the place of the courts and substitutes their operations for the operations of the courts, but it puts the will, the arbitrary will, it may be, of the commission in the place of the laws of the land, because the order provides:

> And as a punishment therefor the military commission can impose such sentences, either lighter or heavier than those imposed under the civil law, as in their judgment the offender may merit.

If I have understood the genius of our institutions, it is that its very corner stone is that this is to be a government of laws as distinguished from a government of men, and whenever a situation such as I have described is tolerated immediately the laws are submerged and the government of men becomes the controlling thing.

This military commission was authorized to impose sentences either lighter or heavier than those imposed by the civil law. For a mere misdemeanor, for which there is a punishment of three months in a county jail, they might under this order imprison a man for life in the State prison.

I understand that in these very proceedings two of these men who were convicted were guilty of misdemeanors, the extreme punishment for which would have been confinement for one year, and yet they were sentenced to imprisonment for five years by the military commission. But this order goes further:

2. Cognizances of offenses against the civil law as they existed prior to November 15, 1912, committed prior to the declaration of martial law and unpunished, will be taken by the military commission.

The effect of that is that if a bank cashier within that district of country which was made subject to the order had been guilty of embezzlement two years preceding this disturbance and still remained unpunished he could have been brought before this military commission and tried and convicted and sentenced for life if the commission so willed.

3. Persons sentenced to imprisonments will be confined in the penitentiary at Moundsville, W. Va.

By command of the governor:

C. D. ELLIOTT, Adjutant General.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. REED. I wanted to ask the Senator if he really thinks it would make any difference whether the bank cashier had been previously tried and convicted and punished when a board was organized outside of the Constitution and proceeding with no law to govern it except the will of the commander in chief? Does not the organization of such a board set aside the constitutional guaranty which provides that a man shall not be placed twice in jeopardy? Could a man with success plead before such a board a prior conviction or acquittal, and if so, what rule would there be to compel the board to pay any attention to the plea?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no rule that would compel the tribunal to pay any attention to any defense so far as that is concerned, but if he had been punished prior to the issuance of this order he would not come within the terms of it, because it provides that cognizance of offenses against the civil law committed prior to the declaration of martial law and unpunished would be taken by the military commission.

Mr. President, as I have said, I think that the action of the governor in appointing this commission and the action of the commission itself after their appointment constitutes a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, which reads:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

As I understand that provision of the Constitution, it means that, so far as life and liberty are concerned, whatever may be the case with property, no man can be deprived of them except by judicial action; that no man can be deprived of life or liberty in a State of this Union except by the orderly processes of the courts.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in One hundred and eleventh United States, page 708, distinguishes between the three things which are enumerated in the amendment in this language:

The appellant contends that this fundamental principle was violated in the assessment of his property inasmuch as it was made without notice to him or without his being afforded any opportunity to be heard respecting it, the law authorizing it containing no provision for such notice or hearing. His contention is that notice and opportunity to be heard are essential to render any proceeding due process of law which may lead to the deprivation of life, liberty, or property.

And the court says:

Undoubtedly, where life and liberty are involved, due process requires that there be a regular course of judicial proceedings, which imply that the party to be affected shall have notice and an opportunity to be heard; so, also, where title or possession of property is involved.

So it seems to me that we are presented here with a case involving a very grave violation of the fourteenth amendment upon the part of the officials of this State.

The Senator from Georgia, however, says that while he concedes the violation of the constitutional guaranty, that the remedy is ample, so far as these individuals are concerned, in the courts, and Congress has no function to perform in connection with the matter. I quite agree with the Senator that so far as these individuals are concerned Congress has no functions to perform. It can render no judgment in their cases. It can not order their release from prison. They have a remedy by taking their case, upon writ of error, to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the Supreme Court of the United States, if it finds them deprived of their liberty without due process of law within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, will, of course, discharge them. But it does not follow that because the Congress can do nothing so far as these individual cases are concerned it has no function to perform in this matter. The fourteenth amendment provides further:

The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Therefore Congress, by the affirmative language of the fourteenth amendment, is charged with some duty in respect to these provisions of the amendment. Congress may enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, including the guaranty of due process of law, by appropriate legislation; and if Congress has the power to enact appropriate legislation to carry a provision of the fourteenth amendment into operation, it certainly has the power to inquire into suggested violations of the fourteenth amendment in order that it may know what legislation to adopt.

I do not know, none of us know, what particular legislation might follow after a full inquiry into this matter; perhaps none whatever; but certainly it will be competent for Congress to gather the information, and then determine whether or not the laws of the United States need strengthening, and whether or not in this class of deprivations by denial of due process of law of the rights of the citizen we should not provide some other remedy, some more speedy remedy, than that which to-day exists; whether or not we should not provide for an immediate application to the Circuit Court of the United States, instead of the roundabout method of permitting the case to go through the State courts, and then to the Supreme Court of the United States, and perhaps other remedies may be suggested after the facts shall have been gathered.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say in regard to this subject, and I should not have said anything at all had it not been for the suggestion here that Congress has no function in the matter, and that it is an idle performance on the part of the Senate to make this inquiry. I think the inquiry ought to be made, and I think we ought to ascertain the facts. It is significant——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment. It is significant that in the Constitution there are only three amendments where provision is specifically made that Congress shall have power to enforce their provisions by appropriate legislation, indicating to my mind that in the preparation of those amendments it was deliberately considered that Congress would have some affirmative duty to perform in the matter of their enforcement. These three amendments are the thirteenth, the fourteenth, and the fifteenth.

I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I first wish to state to him, however, that I have followed his argument with a great deal of interest; and, as I understand, his remarks have been addressed to the fourth subdivision of the resolution. The question I desire to ask the Senator is, if he believes any investigation can establish more than the admitted facts in the decision of the Supreme Court of West Virginia? Does it not occur to the Senator that it is quite reasonable that in the writ of habeas corpus the party discharged from custody by the military commission would state his case as strongly as it could be stated, and that from the statement of his case by himself Congress would be placed in possession of the facts without an inquiry into the action of the courts of West Virginia, just as effectually as would be obtained by an investigating committee of the Senate? Can the Senator imagine that the petitioner did not place before the Supreme Court of West Virginia his case in as strong a light and as favorable to himself as any investigating committee may find by making a dragnet inquiry around the coal fields of West Virginia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, so far as the individuals who are parties to the habeas corpus proceedings are concerned, the Senator from Florida is probably correct.

Mr. BRYAN. Well——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment. In all probability we have all the facts we could ever get with reference to their cases, but we do not know as to other cases; we do not know as to the general conduct of this military commission in this disturbed area; and other charges were made, as I understand. So it seems to me that we ought to make a full investigation of the whole subject.

Mr. BRYAN. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that while the facts may be different, and different cases may be presented, they all present the proposition as to whether or not the section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution to which the Senator refers is being violated; and if so, if there is any legislation Congress can pass, it does seem to me that we are sufficiently in possession of that information to legislate without questioning the good faith of the courts of West Virginia or assuming to go to meddling with the affairs of sovereign States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Florida may think he has sufficient information upon which to act; I do not. I think that this is a very grave matter, and that before Congress undertakes to do anything upon the subject it ought to investigate it fully.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not understand there is any difference of opinion between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Utah as to the law. As the Senator from Georgia contends, and maintains with much force, no military commission has the power to sentence men while the courts of the land are open. We understand thoroughly and fully and completely now, as much as we shall after this matter shall have been investigated, that the Supreme Court of West Virginia takes the opposite view. It seems to me, therefore, we are in possession of facts sufficient to legislate with reference to the matter without investigating that particular branch of it. If any of these laws are being violated, if access is prohibited to the post offices, or if the immigration law is being violated or the antitrust law is being violated, I can well see that it would be proper for a committee of this Congress or of the Senate to go and possess itself of the facts; but you by this resolution undertake to say that we shall investigate the administration of the law by the courts of West Virginia, when you know of the holding of the courts of West Virginia, when you know the facts upon which those courts acted as well now as you will then.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it has been strenuously urged that if the Senate institutes an inquiry to ascertain whether citizens of the United States have been imprisoned in West Virginia without trial by any court of law the Senate by such investigation invades the rights of a sovereign State. I do not agree with that doctrine. I recognize the fact that the rights of sovereign States should not be impaired or disregarded. But I insist that if a citizen of the United States is deprived of those great rights guaranteed to him as a citizen of the United States by the Constitution of the United States it is a matter of grave concern to every citizen of the Republic and to the Nation at large. I believe, sir, that the United States Government owes to its citizenry protection not only when they stand upon soil specially ceded to the Federal Government but also that it owes them protection whether they be within the confines of a State of the Union or the boundaries of a foreign country.

I do not concede that when we inquire whether a citizen of the United States has been deprived of his rights under the Federal Constitution we thereby trench upon any of the prerogatives of a sovereign State. I insist that wherever the American flag floats every citizen beneath its folds has the right to call not only upon the Congress of the United States but, if need be, upon the Army and Navy of the country to protect him in those liberties guaranteed to him by the Federal Constitution.

I am not so sensitive about this proposed investigation as are some Senators. If it be true that in a great State of the Union men can be taken, not before a court, not even before a court-martial, but before four or five individuals acting without the slightest warrant or authority of law and by the farcical, illegal, and unwarranted decree of that unauthorized body of irresponsible men be deprived of their lives, their liberty, or their property, then I want to know the fact.

If that intolerable, despotic, and infamous condition exists in the State of West Virginia, and the General Government is powerless to grant protection to its victims, then, by parity of reasoning, it is equally impotent in all other States. It follows that the governors of all States may exercise like arbitrary power. Thus all citizens of the Republic may be deprived of the rights reserved to them in the Constitution; thus will the Constitution be rendered worse than a dead thing. Such, sir, is not my conception of the Federal Constitution and Bill of Rights.

I believe that it ought to be worth something to be a citizen of the United States of America. I believe that wherever our laws and jurisdiction extend the liberties of the citizen are guaranteed, the great privileges of the common law are his. Before he can be deprived of his life, his liberty, or his property, before so much as a single hair of his head may be touched, he is entitled to the judgment of his peers, according to the language of the Constitution and the forms of law.

Mr. President, it was well said by my learned friend from Florida, Mr. BRYAN, that there is enough admitted upon the face of this record to warrant action. With that statement I agree.

It is conceded that there was in the State of West Virginia absolute peace, order, and quiet. Throughout the confines of the State the courts were open. There was neither interference with the processes of the law nor the ordinary course of justice. There was no resistance to established authority save in one little spot in the single county of Kanawha known as the Paint Creek district. It is conceded that the court having criminal jurisdiction over that entire county, including the Paint Creek district, sat at Charleston, a city of 25,000 population and the capital of the State. It is admitted that in this city there was neither actual nor anticipated disturbance. The doors of the courts were open, and their officers were ready and willing to perform every duty devolving upon them.

All this is admitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who avers that the disturbed district bore about the same relation in area to the State as the small desk in front of him bears to the entire Senate Chamber. The Senator further admits that the criminal courts of the county were not only open, but that they were presided over by men learned in the law, of high probity, and unassailable character. With that condition existing, we are confronted with the admitted fact that the governor of West Virginia declared martial law within the Paint Creek district and issued the following order:

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 23.

STATE CAPITOL,
Charleston, November 16, 1912.

The following is published for the guidance of the military commission organized under General Orders, No. 22, of this office, dated November 16, 1912:

"1. The military commission is substituted for the criminal courts of the district covered by the martial-law proclamation, and all offenses against the civil laws as they existed prior to the proclamation of November 15, 1912, shall be regarded as offenses under the military law, and as a punishment therefor the military commission can impose such sentences, either lighter or heavier than those imposed under the civil law, as in their judgment the offender may merit."

It is further admitted that, having issued this order, the governor invaded the Paint Creek district with his armed soldiery, and that the troops almost immediately suppressed disorder and brought about a condition of absolute peace. It thus conclusively appears that all persons accused of offenses against the law committed within the disturbed area could at all times, upon apprehension, be brought before the constitutional courts of justice sitting at the State capital, 25 miles from the disturbed area, and there brought to trial according to the forms of law. This the governor refused to do. On the contrary, he brought the men before his so-called military commission, and expressly authorized it "to impose sentences, either lighter or heavier than those imposed under the civil law, as in their judgment the offender may merit." By this action the governor of West Virginia undertook to strike down the Constitution of the United States and the constitution and laws of West Virginia. He became the assassin of liberty.

For the Federal Constitution, adopted by 48 sovereign States; in place of the bill of rights of West Virginia, representing the crystallized opinion of her 1,500,000 free citizens; instead of the common law, established by centuries of sacrifice and revered by the great English-speaking race—for all these he substituted his own dogmatic will. He assembled four or five political understrappers, military sycophants, bursting with the importance of new uniforms, inflated with the newly acquired authority of pistols and cartridge belts, ignorant of the law, unlettered in the Constitution, uninstructed in either the tactics or rules of civilized warfare. To this aggregation of incompetence and truculence he gave the high-sounding name "military commission," and ordered it to impose upon American citizens any penalty their prejudice, malice, ignorance, or cruelty might suggest. Citizens of the United States, surrounded by detectives and other hired thugs, were driven at the bayonet's point before this usurping and farcical tribunal and by it sentenced to the penitentiary for long terms of years upon charges which, if true, would not, under the law of the land, send them to penal servitude for even a day. And the Supreme Court of West Virginia sanctions the farce, applauds the usurper's crime, and affirms the unjust and cruel decree.

Mr. President, if the action of the governor of West Virginia was legal and valid, if it can stand, then the Constitution of the United States is dead and liberty is "a dream that is past and gone."

Let us analyze this new doctrine. It is this: That for the judgment of all the people, crystallized into a constitution, a single individual may substitute his own will. That, Mr. President, is absolutism, and absolutism is despotism based upon slavery. For rules of law duly established and subject to change only after full consideration we are now to be governed by the transient whim, the senseless caprice, or the baseless prejudice of one man. We adopt this frightful policy, not because there is a necessity growing out of the absence of all law, for the courts are open. We adopt it not because the State is in peril, for the militia has restored order in every part of the State. We adopt it for no other purpose than that men shall be punished, not according to the law but in spite of the law; not according to the Constitution but in defiance of the Constitution. And then the Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia does this remarkable thing: It announces that when the governor of the State declares there is a state of war, war exists whether it exists or not. Says this learned court, in the majority opinion: "If the governor says there is war, there can be no inquiry into the fact." There can be no investigation as to the truth of the governor's proclamation. There may never have been a shot fired; there may not be a firearm in the State. His decree is a verity, not to be questioned or disturbed.

We, then, are brought by this astounding doctrine to this, that it is possible for a man who happens to be governor of a State to declare a state of war in a time of profound peace. He may declare there is an insurrection when, in fact, law and order reign. Having so declared, he may set aside every constitutional guaranty. Every right that was baptized in the blood and tears of those who went down to their deaths that we might have liberty may be stricken down. And the people are not only barred from punishing the culprit who has thus overthrown the temple of liberty, but they may not even investigate his conduct!

I denounce such a doctrine as the most monstrous ever written by any court in any country. I unhesitatingly declare that the majority opinion of the Supreme Court of West Virginia suffers by comparison with some of those decisions rendered by Lord Jeffreys, which brought to that judicial criminal an immortality of infamy.

Mr. President, if governors can declare a state of war when there is no war, and there can, under the law, be no inquiry into the fact, and the citizen be deprived of those great rights guaranteed by the Constitution, and there is no redress, then it is high time that methods be devised by which there can be inquiry into the fact and redress given to all citizens who have been ravished of their liberties.

Mr. President, the "doctrine of necessity" relied upon by the defender of the governor of West Virginia is not of recent birth. It is as old as human ambition. It is as bloody a doctrine as has ever cursed the world. There never has been king who sat upon a throne, ambition-mad and bent upon the exercise of arbitrary power, who has not masked his most despotic cruelties behind the "doctrine of necessity."

Never has English monarch dared attempt to supersede the civil law who has not sought warrant in some pretended danger to the state. Yet, 500 years ago, it was declared in England—and it has never since been doubted to be the law—that even when insurrection was rife within the land and armed bodies were marching and countermarching across the island, when there was a state of actual war, still, even at such a time, if the courts of law were open, there could be no military trial save for those who were in the military service.

That rule of law has not been seriously doubted since the days of Charles II. It was in some part invaded by George III as to these colonies. One of the bitterest complaints laid against the English monarch in the Declaration of Independence was, "He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to the civil power."

Mr. President, every tyrant who has established a despotism has only made his will the law of the country. When a King of France issued his lettre de cachet and sent a citizen of France to the Bastile without trial, he only substituted his will for the laws of France. When the Sultan of Turkey condemns his subjects to be sewed in sacks and drowned in the Bosporus, he merely imposes his will upon the Empire of the Ottomans. When the Czar of Russia issues a ukase that drags men and women from their beds at night and drives them at the bayonet's point into the wilds of Siberia, to starve and freeze until death brings a respite from the tyrant's wrongs, he only expresses his will and declares it to be the law. When commanders of armies have seized citizens and put them to death without trial, they have only made the civil authority subject to military power. And when the governor of West Virginia called out his little army, captured defenseless citizens, put them to a mock trial before a packed and pretended court composed of men selected to convict; when he issued his order directing that the accused should have neither court of law nor jury of peers; when he declared that this false tribunal might punish in its discretion without limitation and without mercy, he simply substituted his will for the law. But when he did all this, he struck at the very heart of human liberty; he violated the Constitution of the United States, the constitution of his own State, and the law of the land. By that act he became a dangerous criminal.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] declared that the governor of West Virginia stands upon a pedestal. I reply, he stands within a pillory, and will so stand as long as the men of West Virginia love liberty and revere the Constitution of the United States. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the occupants of the galleries do not preserve order, the Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries.

Mr. REED. The question under consideration is one of the gravest nature. Let me state it again: It is declared by the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia that the governor of a State may declare that a riot or revolution exists; he may follow this by a declaration of martial law; he may set aside the Constitution and laws of the country and impose his will in their stead; he may deny citizens the right to trial before the courts of law; he may drag them before military commissions existing without warrant of law, and these illegal tribunals may inflict whatever punishment their ignorance or malice may inspire. Nay, more, if in fact there has been no riot; if in fact there has been no revolution; if in fact there has been no disturbance, the man sentenced by this pretended tribunal to scaffold or prison can not in any court on earth show that there has at all times been a condition of profound peace, and that the governor's declaration to the contrary is an official falsehood. Such is the doctrine which we are here confronting. I confidently assert that there never fell from the pen of George III or any of his ministers, never was written during the infamous reign of Charles II—by the king or any of his ministers—a doctrine more destructive of all law, of all justice, of all free government, of all the rights of man.

"But," says the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, "when the governor declared martial law, he did so to save the constitution; when he superseded civil authority by the military power, he was only preserving civil authority and civil law." This remarkable doctrine, epitomized, amounts to this: That when a riot starts, the constitution stops; the beginning of a disturbance is the end of the law; resistance to authority terminates the authority; the moment men meet in unlawful assemblage the constitution is dead. If this be true, a few evil-disposed persons may inaugurate a riot, and thereupon the constitutional rights of the multitude of well-disposed and law-abiding citizens residing in that division of the country is deprived of all rights reserved to it by law or constitution, and becomes at once subject to the arbitrary rule of power as represented by the commander of the military forces, because the riot has in itself made both the constitution and the law dead things.

The truth is found in the converse of this silly doctrine. It is only when the rights of the citizen are being violated, when the peace and order of a community have been infringed upon, that the constitution and laws become effective and vital. It is under such circumstances that the citizen needs and is entitled to the protection of constitutional government. The philosophy of the West Virginia courts amounts to this: That the governor of a State has the right to destroy all constitutional law in order to save the constitution. In a word, you must kill the constitution in order to save the constitution from death. Thus this court goes back to the old plea that the necessities of the case warrant the usurpation of arbitrary authority.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this doctrine at length. It is not a new one. It is no longer a debatable proposition. Upon it the minds of lawyers and students of the Constitution do not differ. The doctrine of necessity was advanced in the Milligan case.

I want at this point to put in the language of the United States Supreme Court in the Milligan case. One preliminary word, however. The constitution of West Virginia expressly provides that the writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended. In this respect it differs from the Constitution of the United States, which confers upon the Federal Government express authority to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in case of rebellion or invasion. The language, therefore, of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Milligan case, so far as it relates to this great writ of right, is not applicable to the West Virginia situation. It is necessary to bear this distinction in mind in reading the Milligan case. In that great case the court asserts the right of the Federal Government to set aside the writ of habeas corpus in the cases specified, but expressly declares that none of the other rights reserved by the Bill of Rights can be set aside, even in case of rebellion or actual war, so long as the civil courts are open. The sum of the opinion is that the great rights enumerated, viz, freedom of speech, the right of petition and peaceable assembly, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury, are preserved. So, also, the prohibitions against the quartering of soldiers upon the people without their consent, unreasonable searches and seizures, the preservation from trial for an infamous crime except upon indictment by a grand jury, the inhibition against taking property, life, or liberty without due process of law, and against ex post facto laws all are declared to be sacredly inviolable even in time of actual war, the court in substance declaring that it was to guard against usurpation by those in authority in times of disturbance or war that these great privileges of the citizen were engraved into the fundamental laws of the land. I read from this great opinion:

This Nation, as experience has proved, can not always remain at peace and has no right to expect that it will always have wise and humane rulers, sincerely attached to the principles of the Constitution. Wicked men, ambitious of power, with hatred of liberty and contempt of law, may fill the place once occupied by Washington and Lincoln—

And if they could have looked down the years of time they might have added "or may become governors of States"— and if this right—

Namely, the right to supersede the civil law by military force when it is deemed necessary because of riot or rebellion—is conceded and the calamities of war again befall us, the dangers to human liberty are frightful to contemplate. If our fathers had failed to provide for just such a contingency, they would have been false to the trust reposed in them. They knew—the history of the world told them—the Nation they were founding, be its existence short or long, would be involved in war, how often or how long continued human foresight could not tell; and that unlimited power, wherever lodged at such a time, was especially hazardous to freemen. For this and other equally weighty reasons they secured the inheritance they had fought to maintain by incorporating in a written constitution the safeguards which time had proved were essential to its preservation. Not one of these safeguards can the President or Congress or the judiciary disturb, except the one concerning the writ of habeas corpus.

It is essential to the safety of every Government that in a great crisis like the one we have just passed through there should be a power somewhere of suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

And I remark, by way of parenthesis, the men who wrote the constitution of West Virginia did not believe that even that right ever should be taken away.

In every war there are men of previously good character wicked enough to counsel their fellow citizens to resist the measures deemed necessary by a good government to sustain its just authority and overthrow its enemies; and their influences may lead to dangerous combinations. In the emergency of the times an immediate public investigation according to law may not be possible, and yet the peril to the country may be too imminent to suffer such persons to go at large. Unquestionably there is, then, an exigency which demands that the Government, if it should see fit in the exercise of a proper discretion to make arrests, should not be required to produce the persons arrested in answer to a writ of habeas corpus. The Constitution goes no farther. It does not say after a writ of habeas corpus is denied a citizen that he shall be tried otherwise than by the course of the common law. If it had intended this result, it was easy by the use of direct words to have accomplished it. The illustrious men who framed that instrument were guarding the foundations of civil liberty against the abuses of unlimited power. They were full of wisdom, and the lessons of history informed them that a trial by an established court, assisted by an impartial jury, was the only sure way of protecting the citizen against oppression and wrong. Knowing this, they limited the suspension to one great right and left the rest to remain forever inviolable.

But, sir, down in West Virginia the governor and supreme court take a different view. They hold that if a few excited men in one parish engage in a fight the Constitution and the civil law may be suspended. Suspend the Constitution of the United States because there is a riot!

What is a riot? Three men can constitute a riot. Fifty men might, to the inflamed vision of a small-minded governor armed with a little brief authority, loom as a dangerous revolution. All the other millions of population might be at profound peace, yet by this miserable "necessity" doctrine, now in the beginning of this century announced, we are told that a governor may suspend all those rights the heroes of the past died to gain; that citizens may be riven from the arms of wives and children and dragged before four or five of the governor's sycophants and understrappers and by them sentenced to prison or scaffold for even trivial offenses.

For, mark, this military despot left to his military commission composed of men unlearned in the law, responsible to nobody, appointed by no authority—for where there is no legal authority there is none whatever—the right absolutely of life and death over the thousands of men and women living within the afflicted Paint Creek district.

I say now, and I weigh my words, that the men who sat upon that commission made of themselves criminals, and, together with the chief offender, the governor of the State, are liable under the laws of this country to indictment, trial, and imprisonment for their offenses. Of that there can be no doubt under the law. Whenever men joining in conspiracy deprive a citizen of his liberty, unless acting by warrant of law, they breach the law and themselves become criminals. That has been decided not once but many times in the course of history.

What are the limits to this doctrine of necessity? Who shall set its bounds? Is it anything more or less than the law of power, the supremacy of brute force? Suppose we apply it, not to poor miners—suppose we leave the cottage of poverty and go to mansion at the capital. Suppose a new governor takes office in West Virginia and concludes to try the law of necessity upon the gentleman now occupying that exalted place. He thereupon sets up a tribunal to try the present governor and instructs that tribunal to try him according to its own notions and to affix any penalty it sees fit. Suppose the autocrat of the present is fed out of his own spoon by the autocrat of the future. What an outcry will then be heard! How loudly will he proclaim his constitutional privileges! How stoutly will he demand a jury of his peers! How insistently will he cloak himself in the Bill of Rights! How complete will be his conversion to the glories of constitutional government!

A word more of this decision. Says this great judge:

Knowing this, they limited the suspension to one great right and left the rest to remain forever inviolable. But it is insisted that the safety of the country in time of war demands that this broad claim for martial law shall be sustained. If this were true, it could be well said that a country preserved at the sacrifice of all the cardinal principles of liberty is not worth the cost of preservation. Happily, it is not so.

Mr. President, I want this investigation. I want it to go to the very bottom. I heard much said the other day by the learned Senator from West Virginia about property rights. He told us how men of means had come there from other States and opened mines, started furnaces flaming, industry humming, and the State prospering. I am glad that is true. But, Mr. President, I wondered when the eloquent Senator was speaking so feelingly of "the rights of property" why it never occurred to him to give a few moments of consideration to the rights of human beings, to the men who moil in the night in the mines to bring up wealth for their industrial overlords; to the women who stint and starve to keep their ragged children from hunger's cruel gnawings, who go from girlhood to the grave with no prospect but toil, no respite but death. Mr. President, I do not affirm the fact, but the public prints state that the real truth is that the men in West Virginia saw fit to strike because their condition had become unbearable; that these went peaceably to their homes; that thereupon the proprietors of the mines brought in large numbers of men claiming to be detectives and locally known as Baldwins, and that they were armed to the teeth; that they inaugurated such a series of persecution and of abuse as almost literally to drive miners to arms in defense of their homes and of their wives. I have read that armored trains were arranged for, and were sent plunging through the valleys, their sides blazing with the fire of rifles.

I do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know that a governor bent upon maintaining the peace in that community would have stopped that sort of a proceeding before it had been well started. I do know that if that sort of thing was done the country ought to know it. If that was done and was followed by a declaration of martial law, and the miners were brought by the soldiers out of a place where there had been trouble and turmoil into a peaceful community where courts having full jurisdiction sat, but instead of being taken before those courts and there being tried by a jury of their peers, they were drawn before a usurping, illegal, and criminal tribunal organized by the governor and composed of four or five men who sat in defiance of constitution and law, and by these men were sent to the penitentiary to be caged like animals until the long and weary months have run by and their appeal is heard by the Supreme Court of the United States—if that is possible as the law now stands, then there ought to be a law passed which will insure to us our rights under the Constitution of the United States without that long and endless delay.

Mr. President, the attempt to parallel this case with a case of actual war is pitiable—aye, it is ridiculous. In a case of actual war, if we were to invade an enemy's country and set aside its government, its courts, where there were no time to set up a government, if we were surrounded by enemies, waging battle on every hand, there might be excuse for trial by military tribunals. But to say that when in a State of this Union there is a riot in one township, its inhabitants, all of its people—not only those concerned in the riot, but every other man, woman, and child in that district—lose the protection of the Constitution of the United States, is a doctrine so monstrous as to shock the conscience and rouse the indignation of every man who reveres his country or loves the word liberty.

I have heard the technical arguments advanced that the courts have decided that technically a governor may do that which the governor of West Virginia did. But, sir, so confident am I that the Constitution of the United States can not be set aside, or its great precepts impaired, changed, or annulled by any authority on earth save the people themselves in the manner and form prescribed, that I would declare it to be my opinion that the governor of West Virginia was guilty of gross usurpation and oppression, even if every court in the land were to declare him to have been in the right. If, however, I am wrong and the governor of West Virginia acted within the law, then so much the more reason to make this investigation ascertain the extent of the wrongs wrought, and to amend the law so that the future may be secure.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it is my intention to vote for this resolution, but I wish to say that I shall cast that vote without impugning or questioning the good faith or the patriotism either of the governor or of the courts of West Virginia. I do not doubt the governor of West Virginia, under very difficult and perplexing conditions, did what he believed to be the best he could for the interests of peace and order and the welfare of the people of that State. I do not doubt that the courts of West Virginia have passed upon the questions presented to them or the records before them in accordance with their sincere and honest views of what the law is. But, sir, it is possible for governors and courts to be mistaken.

Without undertaking to determine the question whether the governor and the courts of West Virginia were mistaken in this case, it appears to me that their action has been challenged by so great an authority and upon the production of such an array of unquestioned facts, that the Senate owes a duty to the Constitution and the laws to take the action which is indicated in the fourth paragraph of the resolution. That paragraph reads as follows:

> Fourth. To investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

That points directly, sir, to a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, an amendment by which now almost 50 years ago it was made the duty of the National Government to see to it that its citizens should not be deprived of life or liberty or property without due process of law, and should not be denied the equal protection of the laws even by a sovereign State.

Mr. President, I do not consider this a question merely of the laws of West Virginia or the interests of its people. It seems to me as this question is presented to the Senate it rises above the interest of the litigants in West Virginia or of all the people of that State. It rises to the dignity of presenting to us the question whether we shall do our duty by those great guarantees of liberty which underlie and are necessary to the perpetuation of American freedom.

There is, sir, always motive power enough in a democracy. There is motive power enough in American democracy. The supreme necessity is the necessity of self-control, and we have imposed that upon ourselves by these great rules of freedom. We call them the limitations of the Constitution, those limitations which protect citizens against the overwhelming power of government, so that however weak and friendless a man may be, whether he works with his hands or his brain, is poor or rich, the great rules of right conduct embedded in the Constitution give to him the whole power of our Nation to protect him against the arbitrary control of government and its agents.

It is a question affecting the liberty of everyone in every State, not merely in the State of West Virginia. There have been, sir, no such fatal influences to sap the strength and destroy the practical effect of rules for the protection of liberty under such constitutions as ours as are to be found in the permission granted to great officers of state to suspend the constitutional guaranties in time of disorder. It seems to me upon what has been presented in this debate that there was furnished in the State of West Virginia grounds upon which we may well consider whether it is not our duty to enact legislation which shall draw more definitely and particularly lines about the conduct of officers who may under some circumstances and not under others suspend the constitutional guaranties.

I do not know, sir, none of us can tell now, what legislation may be indicated by a full presentation of the facts in such an investigation as the resolution provides. It may be that we shall find it desirable to define powers. It may be that we shall find it desirable to provide for the transfer of such cases to the Federal courts. It may be that we shall find it desirable to give power to call them up by writ of certiorari. It may be that we shall find it desirable to give the power to issue writs of prohibition. It may be that we shall find it necessary to impose upon the Department of Justice or upon the Executive the duty to take the initiative in order that the weak citizen may be protected in the fundamental rights of liberty that have come down to us from Magna Charta and are imposed upon the States by the fourteenth amendment, with the duty resting upon us to see that they are preserved.

For these reasons, without impugning or criticizing any of the officials of the State of West Virginia, I am for doing our duty by passing this resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I did not expect to say anything upon this resolution, although I was upon the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which this resolution was first referred; but we have had a condition in the State of Colorado which somewhat resembles the situation in West Virginia, and I want to say a few words with relation to it and to make a suggestion to the committee as to the inquiry that is proper and should be made.

There was a declaration of martial law made by the governor of the State of Colorado about 10 years ago. It was contended upon the part of many of the people that there was no justification whatever for it. In my judgment there was none. A case involving that question was taken to the supreme court of the State and it held, similar to the decision of the Supreme Court of West Virginia, that the declaration of the governor was supreme; that no matter if the causes for the declaring of martial law did not exist, when he proclaimed them so they did exist.

I do not believe that that decision is sound, but it received the concurrence of a majority of the judges upon that bench. One judge, however, delivered a dissenting opinion which has been considered a classic. It has been considered one of the strongest decisions ever rendered in our State.

The difficulty that occurred then was in the case of a strike. This declaration was made upon representations to the governor, and from those representations he declared martial law. The result was that great indebtedness was incurred. A bonded indebtedness of the State of Colorado, to the amount of $950,000, had to be issued in order to liquidate the expenses that were incurred by that governor.

As to the difficulty in the procedure relative to the declaration of martial law, I want to invite the attention of the committee. Gentlemen representing large corporations appear before the governor and represent a condition of affairs which, though theatening to the peace and order of society, do not justify a proclamation establishing martial law. Danger of great loss to life and property is declared to be imminent and that delay would be disastrous. The governor often is not a lawyer; he does not look into the matter closely; he relies upon the representations made, and under such pressure he signs the document that proclaims martial law over a great part of the State. Then it becomes almost impossible to remove the troops and the order for martial law until the strike is broken.

The initial difficulty lies in the fact that the governor has not looked into and has not inquired as to whether the causes for the declaration of martial law exist. When we ascertain what the law is, there is a very plain remedy to be invoked in the handling of such situations. We find that a riot does not constitute cause; I do not care how many are in the riot; they may all be armed, but that fact does not constitute a cause for the proclaiming of martial law. Under our Constitution martial law can only be legally established in case of invasion or insurrection. Those two words have been defined by the courts. An armed body of strikers upon one side and an armed body of strike breakers upon the other side do not constitute insurrection, nor does the killing of one or more persons upon either side.

The test which is made as to the existence of insurrection is whether or not there is resistance to the enforcement of the law. If the sheriff can arrest any man there, then there is no cause for the declaration of martial law; there is no insurrection. If the sheriff of the county is resisted and an attempt is made to forcibly rescue men who have been seized by the sheriff, then a cause for martial law might exist. But where there are armed bodies resisting one the other, it is not an insurrection. An insurrection means violence against the Government; it means treason against the Government; it means rebellion against the officers of the Government in their capacity as peace officers. When we hear of a riot, when we know that there are armed men upon one side and upon the other, we are apt hastily to say that is a state of war or that is insurrection; but it is not. According to the authorities that are numerous in the courts of the United States, it is resistance to the authorities, such as the attack upon or killing of an officer, or something of that kind, that clothes with authority the govern to declare martial law.

I do not believe that the governor possesses, even if martial law is declared, the power to suspend the great writ of habeas corpus and many of the other declarations of the Constitution in behalf of the protection of the citizen.

If there are armed bodies of men pitted against each other, ready to kill each other, there is a remedy to prevent bloodshed. That remedy is laid down by the authorities, and it is plain and clear. It is for the sheriff to call upon the governor, not for martial law, not to suspend all the rights which guarantee the liberties of men, but for the governor to aid and assist the civil authorities by sending the militia of his State to act under the direction and control of the sheriff. That can be done, and is frequently done. If this committee will investigate the facts with relation to this subject and go into the question as to the law, they will find that, instead of justification for martial law, there is not one occasion out of a hundred that is presented where martial law should be declared. It is only when there is a resistance to the Government, not the resistance of one body of men against another, not a conflict between bodies of men who have grievances against each other. No; the true test is resistance to the State. If there is no resistance to the State, no martial law can properly be declared.

It is true that these authorities—the one in Colorado and the other in West Virginia—say that if the governor proclaims there is a cause for martial law his decision is supreme; but it seems to me the inquiry of the committee would be very well directed toward cautioning governors against declaring martial law when they have the power vested in them, by reason of being the commanders in chief of the military forces of their States, to send aid to the sheriffs; so that nothing but the administration of the civil law will take place; so that men will be tried by juries and due administration of the courts will continue.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not care to trespass upon the Senate again in discussing this question unless there is to be an amendment offered to strike out section 4.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator—and it is proper that I should state in view of that statement—that it is my purpose to move to strike out section 4; and with that stricken out I shall be ready to support the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of that suggestion, I will say a few words, but shall undertake to be brief.

This question, Mr. President, as was well said by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], is not alone a question of labor; it is a broader question than that, and involves the duty and the obligation of the Government toward its citizens regardless of their vocation or profession in life. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was of the opinion last evening that there was no precedent for this kind of a resolution, and was of the opinion that had such a resolution been presented some time ago, it would have caused great excitement throughout the country.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. In order that I may be set right, I will say that the latter part of the statement of the Senator from Idaho is a correct statement of what I said, but I do not think the Senator will find in my remarks any statement that there was no precedent for this proposed action, because I have not searched the records, and I could not have made such a statement broadly unless I had done so. I do not think the Senator will find in my remarks any statement to that effect.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps I am in error as to the Senator who made the statement, but it has been declared in discussion here that there was no authority or no precedent for such a resolution.

Mr. BACON. No such declaration was made by me.

Mr. BORAH. I may be in error as to the Senator who made the statement, but the Senator from Georgia said so much upon that particular phase of the case that I drew the conclusion, perhaps, that that part of it had also been covered by his remarks.

Mr. President, if those who are interested in the precedents will look at a resolution which was introduced in January, 1900, they will find a resolution which is much broader in its terms than the resolution which is now before the Senate, authorizing the House of Representatives to make a full investigation as to the acts of the governor of Idaho, his justification for declaring martial law, the proceedings of the courts, and the acts of different officers of the State with reference to the things which were done after martial law was declared. A full hearing was had under that resolution. The governor of the State came here and was put upon the witness stand; the attorneys who represented the State were also put upon the witness stand; and the entire subject matter was investigated. The question of whether or not there were just grounds for declaring martial law and the question of whether or not the parties were properly convicted after martial law had been declared were all inquired into. If you will compare the resolution which is now before the Senate with the resolution which was then introduced, and under which the House acted, you will find that the resolution now pending is very mild in its terms compared with the terms of the resolution to which I refer, which provided for an investigation of certain conditions in the State of Idaho.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the question of what constitutes a just ground for the declaration of martial law nor the power of the governor after martial law shall have been declared. We discussed that a few days ago; but I desire to say in passing that it was attempted to distinguish the Milligan case by saying that there was at the time of the alleged trial of the party in Indiana no insurrection; that it was not in the military zone; and that there was no occasion therefore for the operation of martial law; but the fact is that the decision of the court turned upon the proposition, not that it was not in the military zone but that the civil courts were open, and undoubtedly established the rule that so long as the civil courts are open there is no justification for even attempting to try people by a tribunal erected under a court-martial proceeding.

I want to call attention to the decision of Mr. Justice Miller in the case of In re Murphy, which bears out that construction of the Milligan case. Murphy was arrested in New Orleans in 1865 charged with offenses which had been committed at Memphis in 1864, at a time when civil war raged throughout that part of the country. He was afterwards taken to St. Louis, where he was tried. Associate Justice Miller, who presided in the circuit where the matter was heard upon a writ, said:

> In both of these places—

That is, the place where he was arrested in Alabama and the point to which he was taken in New Orleans—

> In both of these places the courts of the United States were open and perfectly competent to the trial of any offenses within their jurisdiction. He was tried at St. Louis, in a State where the process of the courts had never been interrupted.

This party was arrested in a State where a state of war prevailed, then taken into another State where a similar condition prevailed, and finally taken to a State where it is true that condition did not prevail; but Justice Miller says that in all of these places, notwithstanding the condition which prevailed at the time with reference to civil war, the courts were open, and for that reason the party was improperly tried by a military tribunal. I call attention to that as a construction of the Milligan case by one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was decided after the Milligan case.

Mr. BORAH. That was decided after the Milligan case.

I freely concede the strength of the argument against the effectiveness of what we may do. With reference to releasing the particular individuals who may now be in custody, or who have been in custody, the power of this committee will perhaps be very ineffective; but we do not investigate for the purpose of determining a particular case which is pending in the courts at the time that investigation takes place, but for the purpose of preparing the facts for future legislation and to provide against future contingencies. If the investigation is held after the parties shall have been released, we will not hesitate in our investigation by reason of the fact that they have been released; but we are investigating for the purpose of preparing for future conditions or prescribing rules of conduct which may cover future contingencies.

While it may be true, as has been said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that after the committee have returned their report and after the Senate may have acted upon it those particular individuals may still remain in prison, it is nevertheless our duty to provide such rules and such statutes as will prevent that condition from happening again. I go further, and say that if those parties were in prison at the time when the Senate acted the Congress could undoubtedly proceed in such a way as to relieve them from imprisonment through the process of the courts under the instruction of the Congress to the Attorney General; that is, we could pass a law which would authorize him to protect in the courts the rights of citizens whose constitutional rights were being denied.

However, I do not follow the argument, Mr. President, of those who say that this is an invasion of State rights. We are not seeking to interfere with any right of the State of West Virginia. The allegation is made that the action in that State has been such as to interfere with the Federal rights of citizens of the United States. In so far as any right peculiar to the State of West Virginia is concerned, the State of West Virginia must settle it, so long as in the settlement of that right the State does not interfere with the Federal rights of the citizen; but it must be remembered that the very object and purpose of the fourteenth amendment was to impose upon the National Government the duty of supervising not the act of an individual, of looking after not the act of the citizen, but of supervising the act of the State when the State as a State should deprive the citizen of his liberty without due process of law or deny him the equal protection of the law.

It might be well, Mr. President, to refer to the exact language of the fourteenth amendment:

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States—

It is the action of the State which is referred to here; it is the action of the State with reference to which we may deal, and it is concerning that matter that we make the inquiry in order that we may intelligently legislate—

nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

If it be true that the State of West Virginia, in the discharge of its duties, through its officers, has done those things which have interfered with the rights of citizens of the United States, the United States should not stand idly by and say that it is the sole duty of the State of West Virginia to settle that matter. We have an obligation to perform and a duty to discharge, the same as has the State of West Virginia; and when we supervise and oversee or overrule or override the act of West Virginia, we are simply performing the duty which the Constitution of the United States has imposed upon us and to which the State of West Virginia has consented, as has every other State.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there can be no question whatever as to the correctness of the proposition just announced by the learned Senator from Idaho, but I submit that when the fourteenth amendment provides that no man shall be deprived of his property or of his liberty without due process of law, it means that the power of the United States Government shall be so exercised and so exerted that whenever that is attempted to be done the Government of the United States will by its proper and effective interposition nullify that act. Now, in what way does the Government make provision for the nullification of an act when under the authority of a State one is deprived of his liberty without due process of law? Is it by the resolution or the finding of Congress or of one branch of Congress, or by a judgment of the Supreme Court? When the proper methods are pursued by which that act can be nullified, those which are pointed out by the law, the Government does perform its obligation when, in pursuance of the methods which the law has pointed out, it nullifies the improper act of the State or the authorities of the State in depriving a citizen of his liberty without due process of law. The method pointed out is by an appeal to a tribunal vested with the power, not simply to assert a conclusion, but to enforce a judgment based upon that conclusion. The Senate of the United States is not the body intended by the Government of the United States for the assertion and the vindication of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I stated yesterday evening, during the argument of the Senator, that it seemed to me his argument all drifted to the proposition of the propriety of the Senate doing this, rather than the fact that by doing these things we were invading any right of the State; and his argument all comes back to that proposition. But I remind the Senator of the fact that when, in the first instance, the Supreme Court of the United States undertook to review the action of the State court and to review its judgment that precise argument was made by the attorney, and he said to the Supreme Court of the United States, in effect, Suppose you enter a judgment here—who will enforce it? What will be the effect? It will be a vain and an idle thing to do.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not mean that if the question as to the legality of this trial by a military commission were brought to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court should hold that it was violative of the fourteenth amendment and was null and void, that judgment could not be enforced by the liberation of the prisoner?

Mr. BORAH. No; not now. We have passed that period in the history of this country; but the time was when it was true. I remember reading in my history, in former days, where when Chief Justice Marshall rendered an opinion liberating two men in a certain State of the Union who had been convicted and imprisoned under the decision of a State court, the President of the United States said:

John Marshall has rendered his judgment, now let him execute it.

The State refused to release the men and the men remained in prison, notwithstanding the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States had held that they were there under a void judgment.

I say that time has passed; but it was just as vital a question at that time as the question now is whether the Senate of the United States can find out facts upon which to legislate concerning the protection of its citizens in the different States of the Union.

We do not propose, by virtue of the report of this committee, to do all that is to be done in regard to this matter. I apprehend that we make the inquiry in this case for the same reason that we make an inquiry in reference to a "money trust," or the violation of the Sherman law, or any other condition of affairs—to enable us to legislate, to provide against a recurring condition of affairs.

Will it be said that the Senate of the United States may send out all kinds of committees to make inquiries concerning the property rights, the material interests about which we are going to legislate, and that when a tribunal is erected which, as the Senator from Georgia says, violates the fundamental principles of this Government, we can not make an inquiry so as to legislate intelligently for the protection of citizenship?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator unduly.

Mr. BORAH. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. With the Senator's permission, I desire to ask him the same question which I asked yesterday of the learned Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], whether, in the opinion of the Senator, there is any possible doubt that we now have legislation which should furnish ample opportunity for any man in any State who was tried by a military commission in violation of the fourteenth amendment to take his case to the Supreme Court of the United States and have that judgment annulled and himself set free?

I ask the Senator if, in his opinion, there is any possible doubt about the fact that we now have laws on the statute books which will perfectly accomplish that end? If so, what is the purpose of further legislation, or inquiry with a view of having further legislation?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is a protection of general citizenship or of the citizenship of all the people, aside from the question of protecting the particular individual who at the particular hour happens to come under the displeasure of this military tribunal. But I will read to the Senator a telegram I have here which throws some light upon that proposition. It is dated a day or two ago:

We have not been able to appeal from the State court to the Supreme Court of the United States because prisoners have been turned out of the penitentiary without giving us time to get into the Supreme Court of the United States. Our efforts have been thwarted in that behalf.

It seems, Mr. President, that they arrest men, they take them before a military tribunal and try them, and send them to the penitentiary for from one to five years; and when the time comes to have that action reviewed they are released from imprisonment, although they may be returned to prison within 10 days by that same military tribunal.

Does the Senator think it is any usurpation of authority for the Senate of the United States to inquire as to the exact facts, in order that that constant harassing of the citizen may cease and that the guaranties of the Constitution may be a thing of substance and not merely a shadow or a delusion?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator and I do not in any manner differ on the proposition that this trial was an utterly illegal one, violative of every principle of government, and violative of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. I do not know that I could state my proposition any more broadly than I did on yesterday, or in a more unlimited expression than I used yesterday. The Senator can not go further than I can in that, although he may be so fortunate as to express himself more felicitously. But however far he may go in its condemnation, I agree with him most thoroughly that this was an illegal act; that the court was without any authority at all, and violative of all laws. But the question the Senator is discussing is not that, because we do not differ as to that. The question is as to the purpose of the investigation.

The Senator says that his purpose is—and it is the only thing which can be logically said—to find out whether or not there should be further legislation in order to protect people who may be put in a position where their rights are thus violated. When I asked the Senator the question, as a lawyer—and there is none better in this Chamber—whether he had any doubt that there are now upon the statute books laws which will enable anyone who has his personal liberty thus violated to have his rights adjudicated and asserted and his liberty restored by a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Senator, in reply to that, read a telegram stating that these parties had been released.

If it were true that there was some question not adjudicated, some question about which he and I had a doubt or any other lawyers had a doubt, as to the legality of that court, and the opportunity for the adjudication of that question had been destroyed by the liberation of these parties, then his telegram would have been pertinent. But there is no question in the Senator's mind, and there is none in my mind, that there is now ample law for the liberation of any man thus illegally incarcerated under a judgment of an illegal court. Therefore the liberation of these parties has not taken away any opportunity of which it was valuable to take advantage. Their liberation, it is true, enables them to be free prior to the judgment of the court. It anticipates what would have been the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. But there has been no opportunity destroyed by their liberation to have adjudicated a doubtful question, because there is no doubtful question.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator that so far as the individual is concerned who has been incarcerated, he has his remedy if you are going to leave it to the individual to fight out this proposition by himself. But does the Senator from Georgia contend that we have not the power to provide aid and assistance to this party who may be improperly imprisoned, through directing the Attorney General of the United States or some other proper officer, under a law properly passed, to see to it himself that he does have his appeal and that he does have his protection?

Mr. President, it is almost cruel to stand here and say that with all the influence and power of the State back of these military tribunals, the citizen alone and by himself shall fight this proposition to a final conclusion. The Government of the United States may itself furnish him and his attorney with the aid and power of the Government in order to relieve him from improper imprisonment. We have not now any such provision as that so far as I know.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Idaho, I desire to say to him, as I said on yesterday in the discussion of another feature of this case, that that is a question of degree. If the Senator's argument is sound and the principle is correct, then it is only a question of degree as to one man's imprisonment being under circumstances which will excite our indignation more than the circumstances of another illegal imprisonment. But the principle would be the same for which the Senator contends, that whenever a man is illegally imprisoned, whenever he has had his liberty taken from him without due process of law, it would be the duty and province and office of the Federal Government to direct the Attorney General to intervene in his behalf and see that he is released.

Is that to be done whenever the fourteenth amendment is violated in all the length and breadth of this great country? Whenever a man has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law, are we to come to the point that the Government of the United States is to intervene for the purpose of seeing to his release? If it is true that it is a correct principle of law when a man has been deprived of his liberty by an illegal judgment of an illegal court—a military commission—then it is true when he has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law in any other circumstances, and it would not be confined to the State of West Virginia; but if we are to enter upon that system of paternalism, as has been suggested to me by a Senator, it would be a very wide field.

If the Senator will pardon me further—however, I will not trespass upon his time. I will end with that.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object to the Senator's statement.

Mr. BACON. I was just about to say, though I fear I would trespass upon the Senator in so saying, that yesterday when a similar line of argument was being made and the contention was made that it was perfectly competent for these parties, either by a direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, or upon an appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court of West Virginia, or by a writ of habeas corpus taken out before any Federal judge, to have his liberty restored to him, the reply was made that the party might not have sufficient money to do it. I want to say that in this case there could be no question about that. I have no doubt that right in this Chamber money enough could be had for any man who was thus incarcerated who wished to take proper measures to have his liberty restored and did not have the money to do it. I should be very glad to contribute to that end myself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this Government was not constructed upon the theory that men would voluntarily contribute to the defense of other men. It was constructed upon the theory that the Government itself as a Government should see that its citizens are protected in every part of the country. So far as the position first assumed by the Senator is concerned, I do take the position, without any hesitancy, that it is the duty of this Government to see that a man is properly cared for when he is deprived of his liberty contrary to the Constitution of the United States, and it makes no difference whether the judgment is that of a military tribunal or a court of the State.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean that he would favor the passage of a law which would make it the duty of the Government of the United States, through its law officer, to undertake the case of every man who claimed that he was deprived of his liberty without due process of law and to carry his case to the courts and see to his release?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would not say that it would be true in every case where a man made that claim.

Mr. BACON. Well, where there was reasonable ground to believe that it was well founded?

Mr. BORAH. I would unhesitatingly say that if a man were actually deprived of his liberty in any State of this Union in violation of the Constitution of the United States, there ought to be a provision in our laws by which the Government itself would interpose to see that he secured his liberty. What is the Government constructed for? Is it a daydream?

The Constitution says that no State shall deprive a man of his life or his liberty or his property without due process of law or deny him the equal protection of the law. Why does it say it? It meant that the Government of the United States, if necessary, would call into action all its power to see that that was carried out.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, he must not stop, then, at the question of the Government interposing for the purpose of taking care of a man who has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law. In that case the Senator says that, in his opinion, there ought to be a law by which an officer of the Government should be clothed and charged with the duty of going and seeing that that man was presented in court and that he was liberated. Now, if that be true, the Senator must not stop there. He must go further and say that it is the business of the Government, whenever a man has been deprived of his property without due process of law, to step in and represent his case, and that whenever a man has not had the equal protection of the laws the Government will step in. I think in this Democratic administration I should like to have that law passed as rapidly as possible, if we are going to have it, because we would have about a thousand district attorneys in every State, and the field of patronage would be very much enlarged.

Mr. BORAH. When a proper occasion arises we should make sure all the guaranties of the Constitution.

Mr. President, I want to read from one of the justices of the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Field, in his interpretation of the fourteenth amendment. He says:

> All history shows that a particular grievance suffered by an individual or a class from a defective or oppressive law or the absence of any law touching the matter is often the occasion and cause for enactments, constitutional or legislative, general in their character, designed to cover cases not merely of the same, but all cases of a similar nature.
> The wrongs which were supposed to be inflicted upon or threatened to citizens of the enfranchised race by special legislation directed against them moved the framers of the amendment to place in the fundamental law of the Nation provisions not merely for the security of those citizens, but to insure to all men at all times and at all places due process of law and the equal protection of the laws. Oppression of the person and spoliation of property by any State were thus forbidden, and equality before the law was secured to all. * * * With the adoption of the amendment the power of the States to oppress anyone under any pretense or in any form was forever ended, and henceforth all persons within their jurisdiction could claim equal protection under the laws. And by equal protection is meant equal security to everyone in his private rights—in his right to life, to liberty, to property, and to the pursuit of happiness. It implies not only that the means which the laws afford for such security shall be equally accessible to him, but that no one shall be subject to any greater burdens or charges than such as are imposed upon all others under like circumstances. This protection attends everyone everywhere, whatever be his position in society or his association with others, either for profit, improvement, or pleasure. It does not leave him because of any social or official position which he may hold, nor because he may belong to a political body, or to a religious society, or be a member of a commercial, manufacturing, or transportation company. It is the shield which the arm of our blessed Government holds at all times over everyone, man, woman, and child, in all its broad domain, wherever they may go and in whatever relations they may be placed. No State—such is the sovereign command of the whole people of the United States—no State shall touch the life, the liberty, or the property of any person, however humble his lot or exalted his station, without due process of law; and no State, even with due process of law, shall deny to anyone within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Now, Mr. President, if that provision of the Constitution means anything at all it means that if our laws are so defective that men may be tried by military tribunals or in any other way deprived of their liberty or denied the equal protection of the law, it is our duty to inquire and ascertain the fact and to so amend our laws and our statutes that that may not occur again.

These things go on, Mr. President, unless there is public discussion until the precedent becomes established and we become accustomed to the conduct which may deprive a party of his liberty and it becomes ingrained and ingrafted in and upon our institutions. These men have been there contending against this situation for months.

This condition of affairs has prevailed in the State of West Virginia for nearly a year. Has there been any discussion of it in the public press? In all that time I have seen but three editorials in the entire country in regard to that condition of affairs.

And yet, Mr. President, such a condition of affairs prevailed that here in the very shadow of the Capitol where we sit as the representatives of this Constitution, men were tried by a military tribunal in violation of all the principles of Government and of the Constitution which we have taken an oath to support, and not an effort was made to see that these men should enjoy what the Constitution of the United States guarantees to them.

There is no wonder, Mr. President, that in these days men sometimes think that the Government is separate and apart from the people. If men can be deprived of their liberty through a tribunal unknown to our institutions, certainly it will not be long until the respect of the people for these institutions will be utterly gone. There is no higher duty resting on the Senate to-day, in view of the turmoil and condition of affairs which prevail throughout the country, than to see that the courts are open to every man who is charged with crime or who may be arrested and detained of his liberty.

In order to legislate intelligently and fairly we must hear both sides, hear all the facts, and pass our laws upon a full investigation. What harm will be done to the State of West Virginia? What harm would be done to any State by going therein for the purpose of ascertaining a condition of affairs which is said to exist? If it does not exist the report of this committee would be an exoneration of the State and of the State officers. If it does exist, would the Senator from Georgia say we ought not to remedy it by a law which shall be effective for the protection of the citizen?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were adopted for the protection of the political rights of citizens of the United States as well as their other rights. The Senator recalls the fact that a very exhaustive investigation took place in the year 1884, of which the late Senator Hoar was chairman, and a finding was had and a report made to the Senate which is very illuminating. Yet Congress has not by appropriate legislation protected those people in their rights.

Now, does the Senator think we will be any more fortunate in dealing with the few men in West Virginia who feel aggrieved when a million people in this country are to-day deprived of the rights guaranteed by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments?

Mr. BORAH. I would not cite the dereliction of Congress in one instance as a reason why Congress should be derelict in another. I am not familiar with the report which was made nor the reasons why Congress has seen fit not to legislate, but I may say in answer to the Senator that if such a precedent has been established, here is another one, and pretty soon there will be no question about the proposition that the fourteenth amendment means nothing.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there can hardly be a justification for refusing to support this subdivision of the resolution because in the past Congress for some reason, why I do not know, has not seen fit to act. Perhaps the Senator knows why it did not. I know I do not.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the other features of this matter, because it is late and the desire to vote upon this measure I know prevails throughout the Senate. I only want to say that section 4 is the one section which interested me in this controversy. I can submit to any other proposition, because I think it would be a temporary matter, except that of denying the right of a citizen to a trial before a common-law court and before a jury. When it was asserted and practically admitted that that was true, I could but believe that this was a matter which ought to be investigated, and if the facts are as alleged, something should be done in the way of legislation to prepare for the future. I believe it our duty to fairly and fully secure all the facts on both sides and then determine what, if anything, Congress should do by way of legislation.

If section 4 is to go out, so far as the other investigations are concerned, in my opinion they are merely incidental to the question.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this resolution. There is, in my judgment, no question about our constitutional authority to pass it. Neither have I any question as to the expediency under all the circumstances. It seems to me if I were one of the Senators from the great State of West Virginia and took the view of this controversy that they do, I would vote for the resolution. If the facts are as they contend them to be, and if these men have been tried in conformity with the laws in the name of their great State, it seems to me that they would invite this investigation. If, on the other hand, these men have been improperly convicted, have been denied the right of trial by jury, have been called before a military commission when there was no just reason for the organization of the commission, then our duty in the premises can not be questioned.

If this were the last labor controversy that we were to have in this country, it might be wise to draw the veil and close it from view, but in this great industrial country of ours, when we know from past experience that we will have these disputes whether they are due to one cause or to another, it seems to me that now is the time to investigate the situation as it was in West Virginia in order that we may learn a lesson therefrom.

The other day in the discussion of this subject the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] referred to the recent strike in the city of Cincinnati in these words:

> I assume that the conditions are very similar, and I think if we had authorities in New Jersey that would put an end to the violence that exists there and the destruction of life and property, it would be well to have that authority invoked; just as I think when the mayor of Cincinnati appealed to the governor of Ohio, when the police force of the city of Cincinnati proved utterly inadequate to cope with the desperadoes who were destroying lives and property there, there ought to have been relief furnished by the governor of Ohio by sending militia to that great city. That is my judgment.

No one else seems to have heard of any lives being destroyed there.

On the same day my very good friend, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], used this language:

> If the governor of Ohio and the governor of New Jersey would take a lesson from the governor of West Virginia concerning those regions where strife has prevailed and where insurrection in fact exists in those States and issue their martial-law orders, there would be peace in the great city in the Valley of the Ohio, as well as in that industrial center in New Jersey.

Mr. President, at the very time the distinguished Senators from New Hampshire and from West Virginia were giving their advice to the governor of Ohio to declare martial law and to send the military forces to Cincinnati the representatives of the contending forces were then engaged in a council which on the very night of that day led to the cessation of all differences and ended in an agreement for the settlement of their contentions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. And on the very morning of the day on which I made those observations—and I did not intimate that I was in favor of suspending the operations of the courts—on that very morning the newspapers chronicled the fact that lawless men had been throwing steel beams and other heavy material on a street car in the city of Cincinnati, injuring the passengers and destroying the property of the corporation.

Mr. POMERENE. The facts are, as I understand them at this distance, that there was a strike. There were certain differences between employees and employers. The street cars were stopped; for some days they did not operate, and during that time it does seem that there were some missiles thrown and that the running of cars was interfered with. I think that some missiles were thrown from a high building, perhaps. There were no lives lost. There was no personal violence. And yet under those conditions the Senators wanted the military.

The mayor of the city of Cincinnati, having the view of the situation he did, did make a call for troops. The governor of the State of Ohio having the view of the situation as he had it, did refuse to send the military. Both these men—and I have the honor of the acquaintance of both of them—are men of the highest character, consecrated to their official duty, and I will do both of them the credit of saying that I believe each of them thought he was doing his duty as he saw it under the circumstances.

Yet it would seem from the events as they actually occurred that the governor of the great State of Ohio was right in declining to send the military to the city of Cincinnati, and now the entire controversy is settled.

On the morning of May 20, which was Tuesday following the discussion here in the Senate, the Cincinnati Enquirer had these headlines:

Strike has been settled and cars will run to-day; company recognizes union. Pact signed by both sides. Representatives of the carmen and Cincinnati Traction Co. announced after a conference, which was ended at a late hour, that terms satisfactory to all concerned had been agreed upon by them. Action of the leaders unanimously indorsed by strikers when report was read at meeting; employers follow suit and arrangements were at once made to open up all lines.

And this was the settlement that was being made when the advice was given to send the military to Cincinnati. In view of the fact that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New Hampshire presumed to give advice to the governor of Ohio, may the junior Senator from Ohio presume to give a little advice to the governor of West Virginia and suggest to him that hereafter he be not so insistent upon sending the military? For myself I prefer the conduct of the governor of Ohio to the conduct of the governor of West Virginia.

Mr. President, under the circumstances, in view of the fact that the distinguished governor of a sovereign State was criticized upon this floor, and unjustly so, as the facts developed, I feel that I ought to present to the Senate the governor's own statement with respect to that situation. I therefore send to the desk this letter from Gov. Cox, and ask that it be read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF OHIO, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
May 22, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have noticed newspaper reports of a discussion in the United States Senate of labor strike troubles, in the course of which Senators GOFF, of West Virginia, and GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, criticize my action in refusing to send troops to Cincinnati at the time of the street railway strike.

I am personally indifferent to the intemperate observations of the two Members of your body, except the thought that if there were any doubt in my own mind about the propriety of my conduct it would be entirely removed by the senatorial evidence of disapproval.

However, consideration for the State of Ohio suggests that the facts in the case be given prominence equal to that received by the misrepresentation.

When the call for troops came the mayor was advised that whenever the disorder was beyond the control of the maximum resources of the local government troops would be dispatched without delay and the peace, good order, and dignity of the State maintained. The suggestion at the same time was made that since the public was not riding in the cars and no utility was created they might very well be run into the car barns and kept there until the acute stage was passed. This was done, and within a few hours, the immediate menace of troops withdrawn, the city was in quiet, and arbitration, the sole resort of either contending party, spurred on by an insistent public opinion, was under way. Two days later, on Monday, at the very hour that the Senators from West Virginia and New Hampshire, respectively, were making their contribution to public records, the agreement of peace was being written in Cincinnati. The Tuesday morning papers, which carried Washington stories of the senatorial slander against an orderly and peace-loving State, also in bold headlines announced the settlement of the strike, and displayed in conspicuous manner interviews with street railway officials, labor leaders, and representative citizens, all satisfied with the outcome. This was in such marked contrast to the scenes so familiar to the Senator from West Virginia that one can easily understand his resentment against a civilized and humane industrial condition which might sweep eastward over the Ohio River and wipe out a situation that has been a disgrace to the Republic for 20 years. In Ohio we court the intelligent criticism of our sister States, but we look with pity, rather than resentment, upon the lamentations of one whose political and industrial standards grew out of a condition made abhorrent in memory by the brutal tyranny of government over human rights.

Very truly, yours,
JAMES M. COX.

During the delivery of Mr. POMERENE's speech,

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for just a moment? I have to leave the Chamber.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. It is evident that it will be too late to take up Senate resolution 19 for consideration to-night after this matter is disposed of. I now give notice that on Thursday, after the routine morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 19.

After the conclusion of Mr. POMERENE's speech,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] would not on his own responsibility have made this contribution to the discussion to-day, because a rule of the Senate would have prevented him from doing so. The governor of Ohio is at liberty to make any observations concerning me that he chooses, and I will feel at liberty to form any opinion concerning that official that I see fit to form.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, with all due respect and kindliness of feeling for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and with great respect for the governor of his Commonwealth, I do make a protest against the introduction of a communication that is in the nature of a criticism—I am attempting to use moderate terms—of what is said by Senators on the floor of this body by gentlemen outside of this body, even though they may hold important public positions. I do not by that mean to say that the Members of the Senate are not open to criticism; they are; but I can not approve of having any man outside the Senate, through the intervention of a Senator, make a speech in the Senate criticizing the utterances of a Senator. I think it is in violation of the rules of the Senate, and I hope it will not be repeated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has called attention to this matter as he has done. The rule of the Senate provides that—

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The next clause of the rule is that—

No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to any State of the Union.

Mr. President, those rules are essential to the proper conduct of debate in this body. I do not think I ever knew them violated here, but if the utterances of others outside of the Senate, which violate both those rules, can be introduced, read here, and placed in the RECORD the rules cease to have any meaning. I do not think a letter of the character of that which has been read, reflecting on two Senators and two States, ought to remain in the RECORD.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I will leave it to the Senate to determine who has used intemperate language; I submit to the Senate the decision of the question who has violated the dignity of this Chamber or the honor of a State. If there have been utterances of that character upon this floor, they have escaped me; but there has just been read before this Chamber a communication which is an insult to the Senate and a degradation to the State of Ohio. I submit that statement without fear of successful contradiction. I am surprised that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] should introduce such a communication to the Senate.

At the very time referred to in the communication, where allusion is made to the headlines of a Cincinnati newspaper, at the very time the governor says—and his statement meets the approval of the Senator from Ohio—that peace was being arranged and that honorable men were meeting in conference for that purpose, and that at last they succeeded, what do the journals of the State of Ohio say and what do the people of the State of Ohio say? They say, "Yes; an agreement was reached, but how?" The great power of a great city was held in the palm of the hands, if you please, of insurrection, and a great governor of a great State refused aid to that community. In that situation—the power of a mob controlling a city, the prayer of the mayor thereof being repudiated, a governor withholding the power of the law that he had but recently registered an oath to support—is it any wonder that the corporations involved, the men who owned the property through which flame had swept and destruction was threatened, realizing that they had no support from the State or the city, should acquiesce in the adjustment that we have been told about? It is acquiescence of that character, Mr. President, that has led this country—Ohio and West Virginia included—to the very verge of anarchy.

It makes a great deal of difference whose ox is gored. The governor of Ohio is not a stranger to martial law. It has only been a few weeks since the present governor of Ohio issued a proclamation of martial law. Only a few weeks since in a district afflicted by an unprecedented misfortune, toward which the sympathy and the heart of mankind went out, what did he do? When the rioter was there, when the looter was there, and when confusion reigned supreme, the governor issued his proclamation declaring martial law in the flooded districts, thereby temporarily suspending the authority of the civil law. I am not complaining of that; it was right. He realized that it was right. The military officers and the militia paraded the streets of the cities, stopped people, arrested citizens, and suspended the power of the local authorities, but maintained order and protected the communities. It was right; the exigency and the hour demanded it; the preservation of society required it. But in Cincinnati we are told the situation was entirely different. Yes; the shoe was on the other foot. There, in a great city where half a million people live, but where confusion reigned supreme, where law was trampled in the dust, where the majesty of the law was defiantly denounced, business suspended, and property destroyed, the governor, who could under relatively easy circumstances issue his martial-law proclamation and send his militia into the field, said: "Nay, nay; verily I will not." Why? Because a very different state of affairs prevailed. The people, the corporations, if you please, which so largely contributed to the making of the city what it is, were in a controversy with—what shall I call it?—the idiosyncrasies of labor. It was a dangerous situation to meddle with, but dangerous only in the future.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GOFF. I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think the criticism I made a little while ago of the letter introduced by my friend from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is equally applicable to what the Senator from West Virginia is saying. I think one is just as much subject to objection under the rules of the Senate as the other. To attack the governor of a State and the authorities of a State——

Mr. GOFF. I am criticizing the conduct of the governor of the State; that is what I am doing.

Mr. STONE. I can not see what that has to do with determining the question before the Senate. It seems to me to be wholly out of place and not at all in accord with the proprieties of the occasion or the rules of the Senate. So I hope the Senator will not continue.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, if I had without cause injected into this discussion the remarks I have just submitted, as the governor of Ohio injected himself into this controversy, then I might have been subject to the criticism of the Senator from Missouri; but when I simply reply to the unjust attack of the governor of Ohio upon the Senator from New Hampshire and myself, and to his unfounded aspersions upon the State of West Virginia and her governor, surely I violate no rule of the Senate, no precept of propriety. I would be less than human if I did not resent the misrepresentations contained in the communication presented by the Senator from Ohio. So far as I am concerned, the Senate can dispose of the matter as to it seems proper.

Mr. KERN. Regular order!

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I have in any way violated the proprieties of this Chamber, no one regrets it more than I. I am not convinced that I have so violated them. The Senators to whom I referred did not hesitate to refer to the great State of Ohio and to the conditions which prevailed there and to the conduct of her chief executive in such a way as to reflect in a very severe degree upon the conduct of our distinguished governor. I did not feel when I presented that letter that it was different in kind or in degree from the utterances which were made by the Senators themselves.

Mr. President, I do not intend to carry on this discussion very much further, except to say this: The Senator from West Virginia referred to the settlement of the strike because there was nothing else to do, in view of the fact that the governor of that great State failed to send the necessary protection.

I happen to have before me a statement that was issued by the general manager of the Cincinnati Traction Co. I am not going to weary the Senate by reading that entire statement, but there is just one sentence to which I wish to refer. He says:

> I believe that the influence of Gov. Cox was also useful at the last in aiding to bring about the final result.

What was it about which this governor had so offended? Not that he refused aid; not that he said that the military would not be sent if the conditions were such as to justify it, but he felt that the civil arm of the government had not been exerted to its utmost, and for that reason he declined to send the military branch of the service; and in that I think he was right.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate to repeat anything I said on yesterday, when the Senate was kind enough to listen to the views I then expressed. I propose to offer an amendment to strike out the fourth paragraph of this resolution.

I simply wish to say in this connection, repeating what I said yesterday, that I entirely condemn the action of the State authorities in the creation of this court-martial or military commission and in the trial of these men. I think it was utterly illegal. I am not indifferent to the fact that that illegality should be corrected. I am not in doubt of the fact that the law already exists, and the method by which that correction is to be made is already well known, and that that method is by a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, and not by any resolution or conclusion which may be adopted or reached by the Senate.

I am not in favor of an investigation of the official acts of a State or the authorities of a State unless it is a case of absolute necessity to do so, and when there is no other way through which the end may be accomplished. As the end can be accomplished in this case and every other similar case by the judgment of the Supreme Court, I am not in favor of the invasion of the State for the purpose of having its official acts examined by a committee of the Senate.

I will simply add that what has occurred in the Senate in the last half hour must impress every Senator with the fact that if we are to enter upon the examination of the official acts of the authorities of every State who may contravene what we may think to be proper in the matter of the issuance or nonissuance of an order for martial law, or anything done under it, we have entered upon a most interminable enterprise; and it will not be limited to one State or to a dozen, but will affect every State in the Union.

It is for that reason that I move to amend the resolution reported by the committee by striking out the fourth subdivision of it. I will say that while there are reasons why I might hesitate to give my support to the other sections of the resolution, of which there are six, I believe, because there is a remedy which might be applied in each case, on account of the prominence given to this matter and the importance which is attached to it I am willing to support the other six sections of the resolution, and will do so if the fourth section is stricken out.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, one word in conclusion. I desire to say that, in my judgment, of all the seven propositions contained in this resolution the one of the highest importance to the public and to the country is the fourth; and I hope the motion of the Senator from Georgia will not prevail.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, not exactly in conclusion, because I want to explain my vote upon the resolution, I repeat what I said at the beginning of this discussion; it is somewhat embarrassing to me, because I differ in politics from the entire administration, both judicial and executive, of the State of West Virginia.

If any man will take the resolution as it now is and compare it with the resolution as originally introduced he will see that there is a vast difference in the scope of the proposed inquiry, especially as to section 4, now under consideration. In the original resolution it provided that the committee should investigate whether or not the laws of the United States had been violated. In my opinion that is almost insulting to a State. But as it is now framed, directing the committee to investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States, it is entirely a different matter, and, in my judgment, contains about all the virtue there is in the resolution.

The Department of Justice can investigate peonage, and has done it. It can investigate whether or not the immigration laws of the United States have been violated, and has done it. It can investigate every subject that is embraced in the seven branches of the resolution except the fourth. That one, I submit, can not be investigated unless it shall be investigated by the legislative branch of the Government.

I stated in the beginning of this discussion that if this resolution should take the regular course, if it should be properly referred to a committee and both sides of the matter should be heard, and if a favorable report should come in and, in the opinion of that committee these matters should be investigated, I, representing in part West Virginia, should not object. I still stand by that, and as we have here now a unanimous report from the Committee on Education and Labor, I do not intend to oppose the resolution unless, sir, the fourth clause should be stricken from it. In that event I shall consider it proper to vote against the resolution as a whole.

A great many things have been said on this floor. I can not go back and correct them. I can not interject here and there facts which have been omitted in the discussion. But I want the Senate to know that, so far as I am concerned, both in West Virginia and here, I have never defended nor excused the decision of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia upholding the conviction of men in West Virginia under the declaration of martial law. I am sorry to disagree with my distinguished colleague upon that subject, but I do disagree with him. I think those men were improperly convicted. I think the Supreme Court of the United States will hold that they were improperly convicted when the matter is taken to that tribunal. But, so far as I am concerned, I think if anything should be investigated the Senate should investigate all the facts connected with that matter, because if that is the law in the State of West Virginia I certainly want something done to correct what I consider to be a deprivation of the rights of the citizen.

With this explanation, Mr. President, the matter may go to a vote so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, a short explanation. If the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is adopted, it will be in exact accord with the theory I have taken from the beginning of this discussion. I have maintained that the Senate should not investigate the action of the State of West Virginia; that it should not investigate the action of its governor; that it should not investigate the decisions of its courts; that we have ample provision in our laws by which all of that can be reviewed and corrected if erroneous. The Senate will bear me out that that, in substance, has been my contention. I am glad there are some Senators upon the floor who agree with me in that contention.

I go further; I differ, also regretfully, with my colleague. If the fourth section is eliminated and the State is no longer to be interviewed, so to speak, or to be investigated by this committee, I can see no objection to investigating the riot or the strike or the matter of peonage or anything else, if the Senate should deem it proper to do so. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment, and, if carried, I shall vote for the resolution. If the amendment should be defeated, as matters now stand I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, upon the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] proposing to strike out the fourth clause of the resolution, which clause the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fourth. Investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. CLAPP's name was called). I am authorized to say that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], if present, would vote "nay." He is necessarily absent.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). Upon this particular resolution, and all questions pertaining to it, I am paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]; but I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote on all matters pertaining to this measure. Therefore I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. Knowing that he would vote as I will, I will exercise the privilege of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the city on business. I desire this announcement to stand for all the votes that may be taken.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. OVERMAN. My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. When I voted I did not know that he was absent from the city and I voted inadvertently. I have, however, been informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote as I have already voted. Under those circumstances, and with this explanation, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, I think he would vote "nay."

Mr. KERN. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Bacon	Catron	Smith, Ga.	Tillman
Bankhead	Goff	Stone
Bryan	Overman	Thornton

NAYS—59.

Ashurst	Hollis	Nelson	Shively
Borah	Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	James	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Smoot
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Pittman	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Pomerene	Swanson
Colt	La Follette	Reed	Thomas
Crawford	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Cummins	Lewis	Root	Townsend
Dillingham	Lodge	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Walsh
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Works
Hitchcock	Myers	Sherman

NOT VOTING—27.

Bradley	Fall	McLean	Simmons
Burleigh	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Chilton	Jackson	Penrose	Warren
Clapp	Lea	Poindexter	Weeks
Culberson	Lippitt	Ransdell	Williams
du Pont	McCumber	Shields

So Mr. BACON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I now ask that the vote may be taken separately upon the several resolutions. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I have the right to make the request.

Mr. SMOOT. Unquestionably the Senator has the right.

Mr. BACON. I am not going to call for the yeas and nays on them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in doubt as to what the Chair should do. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the substitute resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. BACON. I do not think that the ordering of the yeas and nays on yesterday has any force to-day. I do not think there is any order of the yeas and nays on any proposition except the one that has just been voted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands——

Mr. BACON. If there is no yea-and-nay vote called I shall not ask for a separate vote, but if there is a yea-and-nay vote called I shall do so, because, while I can not vote for the fourth resolution, I am ready to vote for the other sections. If no yea-and-nay vote is called on the general proposition, I am willing not to press my demand for a separate vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the yeas and nays were ordered on yesterday.

Mr. BACON. In my opinion, and I have adhered to that opinion for years and have so expressed it on the floor——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will read the order that was made on yesterday, I think he may modify his view as to this particular case.

Mr. BACON. I do not think I will.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (reading):

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that when the vote is taken it be taken by yeas and nays.

* * * * * * *

[The yeas and nays were ordered.]

Mr. BACON. That is not the way in which the yeas and nays are called for.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is the way they were called for at that time.

Mr. BACON. When a Senator calls for the yeas and nays the demand is in the nature of a motion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Vice President said:

The Senator from Arizona demands the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

[The yeas and nays were ordered.]

Mr. BACON. But the Constitution says that the yeas and nays, when ordered upon the demand of one-fifth of those present, shall be entered upon the Journal. It evidently contemplates that those who were about to vote shall order the yeas and nays. We have measures here which sometimes run in the Senate for a whole month, and if that construction were adopted it would be competent for those to order the yeas and nays who would not be present when the vote was taken. That is not according to the contemplation of the Constitution. The contemplation of the Constitution is that one-fifth of those who are going to vote shall demand the yeas and nays, and that they shall be entered on the Journal, not that a month ahead of the time one-fifth shall second the demand for the yeas and nays and then a month after that, when the question comes to a vote, it shall be taken with possibly no single person who had ordered the yeas and nays present.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, I have seen the contrary rule followed here frequently, and I supposed it was the established procedure of this body. If now a new demand for the yeas and nays were permissible and the yeas and nays should be ordered, debate might go on after that before the calling of the roll was commenced; it might run on indefinitely notwithstanding the yeas and nays had been ordered. It might run on 10 minutes; it might run on 10 hours——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Or 10 days.

Mr. STONE. Or 10 days; but at the conclusion of the debate, the yeas and nays having been ordered, it seems to me they should be taken.

Mr. BACON. That has been a mooted point. I know that has been the rule in some instances, and in other instances, for the purpose of avoiding the very thing the Senator from Missouri has suggested, the yeas and nays have again been called for and ordered. The RECORD will show that fact. I have a distinct recollection of instances in which that was done. I have no objection to a demand for the yeas and nays, but if the yeas and nays are ordered I want a separate vote on the different provisions of the resolution.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if the order for the yeas and nays could not be set aside now by unanimous consent?

Mr. LODGE. It can be rescinded, of course. If the Senator who demanded the yeas and nays asks leave to withdraw his demand, by unanimous consent it can be withdrawn.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, although against my own inclination, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays may be rescinded. I could not insist further upon the yeas and nays when it is perfectly obvious to all that the roll call just had shows the resolution will safely carry. Therefore, in view of the roll call just had, it does seem to me that I would, to say the least, uselessly and for no real practical purpose, cause the Senate much inconvenience by now insisting upon a further roll call at this late hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore entered for the yeas and nays be rescinded. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is rescinded.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the motion is put by the Chair on the passage of the resolution, without the yeas and nays, I desire to say a word or two. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. I do not believe in the wisdom or the policy of the Government of the United States entering at pleasure upon the work of investigating the acts of a State. I do not think that a State is a mere province. I think it is a sovereignty. I do not like the thought embodied in the fourth resolution. It is obnoxious to me. Nevertheless, I intend, with great misgivings and doubt as to the wisdom of that particular part of the resolution, to vote for the resolution as proposed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it seems that it may take as long to make these explanations as to call the roll. I simply want to say that I am heartily in favor of every one of the resolutions except the fourth, which I voted against.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the speeches in behalf of the adoption of this resolution have uniformly been so clear and convincing that it would be a work of supererogation for me to add anything further; but I now embrace the opportunity most emphatically to record myself as being in favor of this resolution and investigation, and in favor of each and every subdivision of this resolution.

Had the duty of drafting the resolution been assigned to me, I should have made the resolution, if possible, even more searching and drastic than it is in its present form.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that if I had an opportunity to record my vote it would be in favor of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has called for a division of the question.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw that call.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question then is upon agreeing to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported as a substitute by the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Education and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the conditions existing in the Paint Creek coal fields of West Virginia for the purpose of ascertaining—

First. Whether or not any system of peonage has been or is maintained in said coal fields.

Second. Whether or not postal services and facilities have been or are interfered with or obstructed in said coal fields; and if so, by whom.

Third. Whether or not the immigration laws of this country have been or are being violated in said coal fields; and if so, by whom; and whether or not there have been discriminations against said coal fields in the administration of the immigration laws at ports of entry.

Fourth. Investigate and report all facts and circumstances relating to the charge that citizens of the United States have been arrested, tried, and convicted contrary to or in violation of the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

Fifth. Investigate and report to what extent the conditions existing in said coal fields in West Virginia have been caused by agreements and combinations entered into contrary to the laws of the United States for the purpose of controlling the production, sale, and transportation of the coal of these fields.

Sixth. Investigate and report whether or not firearms, ammunition, and explosives have been shipped into the said coal fields with the purpose to exclude the products of said coal fields from competitive markets in interstate trade; and if so, by whom and by whom paid for.

Seventh. If any or all of these conditions exist, the causes leading up to such conditions.

Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or of either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed; and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who having appeared refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns it shall adjourn to meet on Thursday at 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, May 29, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 27, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that thou hast made us progressive beings, that nothing less than the best will satisfy our longings, hopes, and aspirations, since it is the dynamo which moves the car of progress and promises perfection for the individual, for the race. And we thank Thee that possession in the material, intellectual, moral, or spiritual life is never fully enjoyed until we begin to share our possessions with others. Help us to realize that when we shall have reached the end of our earthly existence it will not be the wealth, wisdom, or power which we may have attained but the full, rounded-out character and the knowledge that we have wrought not only for ourselves but for others which will bring us peace, joy, and happiness. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 23, 1913, was read and approved.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 4357) to provide for the inspection of any parcel sent by mail which contains fruit, plants, trees, shrubs, nursery stock, grafts, scions, peach, plum, almond, or the pits of other fruits, cotton seed, or vegetables at point of delivery in any post office of the United States that requests such inspection and where the requisite inspectors are provided by the States to perform such service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE NECESSITY OF INSPECTION OF PARCELS SENT BY MAIL WHICH CONTAIN PLANTS, ETC., AT POINTS OF DELIVERY IN POST OFFICE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert herewith bill H. R. 4357, introduced by me on April 28, 1913, which bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4357) to provide for the inspection of any parcel sent by mail which contains fruit, plants, trees, shrubs, nursery stock, grafts, scions, peach, plum, almond, or the pits of other fruits, cotton seed, or vegetables at point of delivery in any post office of the United States that requests such inspection and where the requisite inspectors are provided by the States to perform such service.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any postmaster or postal clerk to receive any parcel containing fruit, plants, trees, shrubs, nursery stock, grafts, scions, peach, plum, almond, or the pits of other fruits, cotton seed, or vegetables to be sent by mail except that the same be plainly labeled, which label shall not only give the character of the parcel, but also the name of the person who produced it and place where grown, if possible; also the name of the sender. It shall also be unlawful for any postmaster or postal clerk to deliver at any post office in any State any parcel containing fruit, plants, trees, shrubs, nursery stock, grafts, scions, peach, plum, almond, or the pits of other fruits, cotton seed, or vegetables until the same has been inspected by a regularly appointed fruit inspector provided by the State, and it shall be the duty of the postal officers to apprise said fruit inspectors of the presence of such parcels. It shall also be unlawful for any postmaster or postal clerk to deliver such parcel until it is released by such regularly appointed fruit inspector, who certifies that it is free from injurious insects and injurious fungi. In case any State desires inspection at destination, it shall be divided into a reasonable number of inspection districts, to be determined by the joint action of the Agricultural Department and the State authorities, and that in each of such inspection districts there shall be designated a point of inspection, and that all nursery stock coming through the mails shall be routed through such inspection point and there subject to inspection prior to reshipment to destination, and in this case, immediately after inspection, the parcel shall be carefully rewrapped and remailed to the consignee in case it is free from pests, and otherwise treated and destroyed as the State officials shall direct.

Dr. A. J. Cook, State commissioner of horticulture of California, in writing to me under date of April 21, 1913, upon this subject contained in H. R. 4357, says:

The matter is certainly one of no little importance and requires immediate action. The point of one or two places for inspection is certainly the right thing. If some dreadful disease were in this country, would there be any hesitation about acting on the part of Congress? Of course, this is not a dreadful disease, but you know its importance and the fact that immediate action might save us thousands and possibly millions of dollars. Are we not justified, then, in using every possible effort to secure immediate legislation? I wish to repeat what I said before: This is too important a matter to neglect. I wish Congress could know the danger as I see it. If it is a possible thing by straining every point, do not fail to get immediate action on this matter, as delay may cause frightful loss. It is not at all imperative to have this bill touch the express or railroad. We have those now in thorough control, and we inspect everything that comes by express or rail, so the post office is all with which we need to concern ourselves. I know you see the importance of this and will leave no stone unturned to secure the needed protection at an early date.

Dr. Cook was furnished a copy of bill H. R. 4357, and I received a letter from him under date of May 6, 1913, in which he states:

I am delighted with your bill and also the letter of the 29th ultimo. I do not see how the bill can be improved. The district idea is good, because some States will wish more districts than others, and the way of determining it will make all satisfied. Now, Judge RAKER, you have a chance to do a marvelous good for our State, as you have done in the past; that is, to get this bill through. We can not afford to put this off until another session of Congress. Within a week or ten days I will send such a statement as you desire. * * * Thanking you sincerely for the active interest you have taken in this matter, and hoping and believing that we can succeed at this session of Congress to consummate this most important action.

Under date of May 14, 1913, Dr. Cook writes me in relation to this bill as follows:

I think the last bill you sent (H. R. 4357) is excellent. I do not know how we could better it. I am glad you appreciate the fact that haste is exceedingly important. I shall get the data that you request as soon as possible, making a strong case in favor of hasty action.

In response to the letters of date April 21, May 6, and May 14, 1913, Dr. Cook writes under date of May 21, 1913, upon bill H. R. 4357 and the necessity of its being enacted, as follows:

Agreeable to the promise I made you some time ago, I am glad to give you some reasons why we so emphatically urge the necessity of inspecting plant material arriving by mail before the same is delivered to the addressee. I submit the following:

"At San Francisco all plant material arriving by parcel post at the United States post-office customs for California points is submitted to the inspection of the State horticultural quarantine officers. In looking over the records for the past three months we find the following entries of plant material infested in such a manner as to preclude its admission into the State under the present quarantine laws:

"One lot fruit trees from Australia badly infested with live specimens of bud moth.

"One lot small cherry trees from Japan infested with live specimens of Aulacaspis pentagona.

"Four lots peach trees from localities known to be infested with peach yellows.

"One lot of fruit hosts of the Mediterranean fruit fly in violation of section 5, State quarantine law.

"Seven lots of potatoes in violation of Federal quarantine No. 3, 'potato scab.'

"Potatoes from European points which might bring the terrible potato wart.

"Plants from greenhouses in the Northeastern States badly infested with the citrus white fly.

"Such findings as these in the small amount of mail matter we are at present enabled to examine makes the necessity of examining all plant material arriving by mail a very potent one in our opinion. The good effect of our quarantine laws will be lost and the most diligent efforts of our quarantine officers will be brought to naught if we are to continue to leave wide open in California over 1,750 avenues of entrance for this material, all available to every man, woman, and child in the State each working day in the year, yet all of them beyond the control of the horticultural inspection officers.

"Is not this matter of sufficient moment to warrant the most energetic effort to secure a law such as you have formulated and presented to the National Congress? I believe that law is excellent, and I hope no effort will be spared to secure its enactment at the present special session of Congress.

"Again urging the necessity of this law and thanking you for your energetic action in the matter."

The Department of Agriculture, as well as the Post Office Department, is earnestly cooperating in this important matter. The great need and necessity of bill H. R. 4357 being enacted by Congress at an early date is fully set out and explained in the statement made by Dr. Cook under date of May 21, 1913. The number of special instances in which the State commissioner of horticulture of California has located infected plants, trees, and so forth, if scattered over California might be sufficient to infect the entire State. One lot of the Mediterranean fruit fly, if permitted to be distributed, would of itself be sufficient to cause untold loss, and I am therefore most respectfully calling this matter to the attention of Congress that early action might be had upon bill H. R. 4357.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am just in receipt of a telegram signed, or authorized to be signed, by some 250 of the leading banks and about 50 of the business men's associations of the various cities and towns of Colorado, protesting against the clause of the Underwood bill placing sugar on the free list at the expiration of three years and petitioning Congress to make only such proportionate reduction in the tariff on sugar as may be made in the tariff on other products manufactured in this country.

These petitioners represent a very large per cent of the business interests of my State. They respectfully ask me to present their petition to the House of Representatives. They certainly are entitled to this consideration, and in compliance with their request I ask that the following telegram be inserted in the RECORD:

DENVER, COLO., May 26, 1913.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

M. Rubey, president Colorado State Bankers' Association.

Acting in our own behalf and of those commercial organizations and banking institutions solely who have specifically authorized us to represent them, respectfully represent: That the enactment of the tariff bill pending before Congress known as the Underwood bill in so far as it proposes within three years to remove entirely all import duty on sugar, will if enacted into law seriously cripple and is likely to entirely destroy one of the principal farming industries of this State, and one of its most important manufacturing industries, and we therefore most respectfully and most earnestly protest against such enactment. The sugar-beet growing industry and the sugar-manufacturing industry in Colorado distribute annually amongst the farmers of this State $10,000,000, and amongst workmen and for supplies and fuel $5,000,000, and these industries have been expanding. The sugar-beet-growing and sugar-manufacturing industries in Colorado have more than doubled the value of farming lands within the State; extensive irrigation enterprises are underway which are dependent for their success and for the success of their financing upon this industry, upon the basis of value given to good farming lands in Colorado by reason of the prosperous industry of beet raising and sugar manufacture. Here many farmers in this State have secured loans upon their lands for improving them and making them more productive; but will suffer serious loss and in many instances eventual loss of their entire properties if the value of the lands is reduced by crippling the sugar-beet-raising industry here. Such result would be exceedingly hurtful to workingmen and to every business interest and landowner in the State. The Underwood bill preserves a portion of the old tariff upon most manufactured goods in this country, but in the case of sugar it proposes to wipe out the tariff entirely. We respectfully represent that such action would constitute unjust discrimination against the people of Colorado, and would be unfair to them and to the people of the several States where sugar beets are now grown. We urge upon Congress that in the case of sugar it in any event make only such proportionate reduction in the tariff as it may make in the case of other products manufactured in this country and that it do not destroy by removing the sugar duty a great industry, the continued prosperity of which is of vital importance to all our people. And your petitioners will ever pray.

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By EDWARD J. YETTER, President.
DENVER CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION,
By G. B. BERGER, President.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 32 and disagree to the Senate amendments thereto, and that the same be sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 32, with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the title of the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the title of the bill and the Senate amendments had better be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that the committees will soon be appointed. I think I shall ask for a roll call on disagreeing to these Senate amendments. It is manifest that it would not be a safe thing to do that this week. I hope the gentleman will either withdraw his request or let this go to the Judiciary Committee and let them make a report upon it. When they make a report I shall have no objection myself to the matter being taken up.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman objects, of course I can not do anything else; but I think we will accomplish the same purpose by letting it go to conference.

Mr. MANN. As I say, when the matter does come before the House, I think I shall ask for a roll call upon the amendments. That would hardly be the thing to do this morning.

Mr. CARLIN. The amendments may never come before the House, except in a conference report.

Mr. MANN. They are before the House now.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For the present I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

HETCH HETCHY VALLEY (H. DOC. NO. 54).

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the report of the advisory board of the Army Engineers to the Secretary of the Interior on an investigation relating to the sources of water supply for San Francisco and Bay communities, known as the Hetch Hetchy Valley project, dated February 19, 1913, be printed as a House document. I ask it for this reason: There is a bill before the Committee on the Public Lands relating to this subject, and this entire report will have to be used by the committee and the Members. I have inquired of the Secretary of the Interior and there are not enough copies that can be used, and it will be necessary to print it to be used at the hearings. It will be much cheaper to do it now than when it comes before the committee later.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if he has ascertained what it will cost to print this? How many copies does he want printed?

Mr. RAKER. I have ascertained this morning that this report is already set up and stereotyped, and the printing of 5,000 copies will cost $510.77.

I will say to the gentleman that there are many requests being made for this document. It is the report of the engineers covering the entire water supply of that part of California surrounding San Francisco. It will be absolutely necessary to reprint it in the hearings before the committee unless it is printed as a public document, in which case it will not be necessary to reprint it.

Mr. MANN. How many copies does the gentleman ask to have printed?

Mr. RAKER. I think 1,000 copies now will be sufficient.

Mr. MANN. And then it will not be printed as a part of the hearings?

Mr. RAKER. Then it will not be printed as a part of the hearings, because we will use the copy now printed as an exhibit.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows that the Committee on the Public Lands will obtain authority to have printing done for that committee, and after obtaining that authority it could then order this printed if it chose to.

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman that it will be my purpose not to have it printed as a part of the hearings, because it will be a public document if we get this through, and the Members will have it in advance to use. There will be no necessity for printing it as a part of the hearings.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to this, as it will be of great advantage to the members of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I recognize the importance of the matter and I shall not object.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what the usual number is that is printed?

Mr. MANN. The usual number is 1,320, but that would not give the committee very many copies. If the gentleman gets an authorization for printing 1,000 copies, that carries the usual number and 1,000 copies besides. Whenever the House authorizes a certain number of documents the usual number is printed and that number in addition.

Mr. RAKER. It would not cost much more; suppose we ask for 2,500 copies for printing?

Mr. MANN. That would give 2,500 copies in addition to the usual number.

Mr. RAKER. We do not care for that number.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the report of the Army engineer on the Hetch Hetchy Valley water supply be printed as a House document, with 1,000 copies in addition to the usual number. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHAIRMAN OF CONFERENCE MINORITY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the chairman of the conference minority be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for official business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for the purpose of making a statement, I wish to say that I think this is a perfectly fair provision for the minority to have. The chairmen of committees do have the right to print official business. The minority up to this time has never had the right to print official business, and I am inclined to think that in order that the minority may have full opportunity to express its views it ought to have this privilege. The minority performs a useful function in the House in seeing that the majority does not do the things that it ought not to do, acting as a check on the majority, and I think they ought to have this privilege.

Mr. MANN. I would not make the request, but I need to have some printing done in reference to the committees at this time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the minority committee? I will say that I ask this for information.

Mr. MANN. The term "chairman of the conference minority" is used in appropriation bills. It has always been the same term, and a similar term is used in the Senate in appropriation bills. It is supposed to cover the minority leader. I appreciate the fact that there might be some question as to who is the chairman of the minority. I believe my friend from Kansas has not raised any question of that sort under authority of the appropriation bills.

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. What I wanted to inform myself on is, does the chairman of the conference minority, as such, perform any services of any kind in the House.

Mr. MANN. I think not; it is simply a method of recognition of the minority in reference to positions, and so forth.

Mr. MURDOCK. What kind of printing would he have done?

Mr. MANN. At present I want to have committee lists printed of Republican assignments as a matter of convenience.

Mr. MURDOCK. Separate from the main committee lists?

Mr. MANN. In advance of the main committee lists; that is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

There was no objection.

The order was considered and agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, Friday is Decoration Day. Why not adjourn to meet on Thursday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had overlooked that fact, and I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two brief editorials relative to the effect of the pending tariff bill on the industries of the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. There has been some dispute here and in the country at large relative to the probable effect of the free-wool provision of the Underwood bill on the production of wool and the raising of sheep in this country. What this effect is likely to be is indicated by the following editorial from the Morning Republican, Findlay, Ohio:

FARMERS MARKET WOOL—ACTION OF CONGRESS ON FREE WOOL CAUSES PRODUCT TO BE SOLD AS SOON AS POSSIBLE—FEAR FOREIGN COMPETITION—THINK IT WOULD BE UNPROFITABLE TO RAISE SHEEP ON HIGH-PRICED GROUND, WHEN RETURNS WOULD BE SMALL.

According to Findlay wool dealers, Hancock County farmers are not holding back their wool in hope of getting better prices this year, as they are accustomed to do. On the other hand, they are bringing their wool to market as soon as possible, because they think that the price now is better than it will be later in the season, if foreign wool should be admitted to the country duty free.

Owing to the uncertainty of the market on account of the tariff tinkering, the price this year is from 6 to 10 cents lower than it has been in former years. The prices range from 12 to 20 cents, while the product formerly brought from 18 to 30 cents a pound. Should wool be put on the free list, it is possible that the price will go still lower.

MAY KILL OHIO INDUSTRY.

If such a thing happens, it is probable that it will kill the wool industry in Hancock and a number of surrounding counties, as many farmers in this vicinity say that it would not pay them to raise sheep on high-priced ground when the market price of wool is so low. They claim that they could get a better return from their land by using it for other purposes.

Although free wool would kill the industry in this vicinity, it is thought that sheep could still be raised at a very slight profit in the Western States, where land is cheap and the animals could be allowed to run at large. It is said that the high or low price of wool has very little effect in cheapening the price of a suit of clothing, as it requires only about 4 pounds of wool to make a suit of clothing, and the difference between the high and low prices is not over a dollar.

As to whether the purchaser of clothing or the manufacturer of cloth is to receive the benefit of free wool is shown by the following article from the Daily Trade Record of May 1, 1913:

WASHINGTON.

In letter to Senate Finance Committee William C. Hunneman, of Boston, says that free raw wool will not particularly benefit consumer, but will be of great benefit to 17 worsted mills, which consume over half of wool used in this country; suggests that these millmen be summoned for examination. Members of the Senate Finance Committee have received the following letter from William C. Hunneman, of Boston:

DEAR SIR: I learn to-day from the press dispatches that your committee has decided to grant hearings on the free list of the tariff bill, and I beg leave to submit some observations on the plan to make wool free of duty.

For four years I have been actively engaged in the agitation to change the present specific duties on wool to an ad valorem basis. During that time the House of Representatives has twice passed a bill making the wool duty 20 per cent ad valorem, and twice it has passed a bill making the wool duty 29 per cent ad valorem. The Senate during the same period has twice passed a bill providing for a wool duty of 29 per cent ad valorem, which failed to become a law because of the veto by President Taft, and once the House, by a two-thirds vote, agreed to pass over the veto of the President the bill providing for a duty of 29 per cent ad valorem on wool. Seldom has an issue been presented more clearly to the country than was the wool tariff at the election in November, 1912. The voters of the country gave the control of the Government to the Democratic Party with the distinct understanding that in the coming revision of the tariff an ad valorem duty should be placed on wool.

I desire to protest against the Underwood bill, which makes wool free of duty, not only because it is in violation of this understanding by the people of the country, but also because the removal of the duty from wool, while depriving the wool producer of protection, confers a special privilege of great value on a few wool-manufacturing corporations.

FAVORS CONSUMER OF WHAT?

It has been widely proclaimed that the President of the United States, at whose request free wool was substituted for a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem in the Underwood bill, has stated that he favored the change in the interests of the consumer. The consumer of what? Of raw wool or wool clothing? If he meant a few large consumers of raw wool, his measure was well conceived, for the benefit of free wool will go to them; but if he meant the consumers of wool clothing, he has laid his plan on a foundation of sand, namely, the ridiculous assumption that the few great wool-manufacturing corporations will pass the benefit of free wool on to the clothiers, who in turn will give it to the ultimate consumers.

The benefit of free wool will accrue first of all to the wool manufacturer, and it will remain there if business can make it stay. That is business. The normal consumption of wool in this country is estimated at 300,000,000 pounds (scoured weight) a year Over one-half of this quantity is consumed by the following 17 worsted corporations, each one of which has an officer who is also an officer in the National Association of Wool Manufacturers:

QUANTITY AND VALUE OF WOOL USED BY MILLS MENTIONED.

Estimating the average value of wool at 40 cents per scoured pound and the annual consumption of wool at 150,000 pounds per comb, we get the following quantities and values of the wool used by these corporations:

Corporation.	Wool.	Value.	15 per cent duty.
	Pounds.
American Woolen Co	64,500,000	$25,800,000	$3,870,000

OVER HALF WOOL USED IN COUNTRY CONSUMED BY THESE MILLS.

This estimate shows that over half the wool used in this country is consumed by these 17 corporations. Over 30 per cent is consumed by 3 of them. Over 20 per cent is used by 1 of them. And it is an interesting fact that 3 of these corporations operate 519 combs in Lawrence, Mass., where they consume over 25 per cent of all the wool used for clothing the American people.

It is to these great corporations that the main benefit of free wool, which I have estimated at $9,000,000 a year, will go. They are all represented in the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. That organization has led in the fight during the past four years to keep Schedule K with its specific duties unchanged. It has during that time advocated a duty on wool as part of a broad protective policy. One of its vice presidents, William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Co., on March 20, 1909, publicly stated his solicitude for the woolgrower in these words:

"To be able to arrange the schedule to satisfy them (the Maine carded woolen manufacturers) of course would be a happy thing to do, if it would not do an injustice to the woolgrower, who certainly is entitled to consideration. He works hard in a lonely occupation in the wild mountains of the Northwest, where his life is dreary and hard, and if he feels he is entitled to protection he ought to have it, the same as we ask for in our industry. * * * I congratulate the woolgrowers on their deserved wool duties."

The flaw in Mr. Wood's proposition at that time was in the fact that the wool duty he wanted to protect the woolgrower was specific, under which he could import the light shrinking worsted wools his mills needed at half the price imposed on the wool needed by his carded woolen competitors. Now, however, there is an opportunity for Mr. Wood and his worsted associates in the National Association of Wool Manufacturers to show their disinterested devotion to the interests of the woolgrower by choosing between free wool and a fair ad valorem duty. Since the election last November the policy of the association has been one of evasion, as shown by the following extract from the testimony of its president, John P. Wood, before the Ways and Means Committee on January 27:

"Mr. JAMES. Are you in favor of free wool?

"Mr. WOOD. I do not wish to express any opinion in regard to the wool duty at all.

"Mr JAMES. Have you not expressed any in the brief you have filed?

"Mr. WOOD. No, sir.

"Mr. JAMES. Are you unwilling, then, to give the committee your opinion about whether wool ought to be free or taxed?

"Mr. WOOD. Quite unwilling."

SUGGESTS THAT MILLMEN BE SUMMONED TO TESTIFY REGARDING REMOVAL OF WOOL DUTIES.

In view of the record of this organization, which, in 1864, petitioned for free worsted wool and a duty on other kinds of wool, and which has since worked openly and in secret to keep wool duties specific, and in view of the great advantage that the removal of the duty on wool would give to these worsted manufacturers, I respectfully suggest to your committee that you summon William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Co., and the heads of the other 16 worsted corporations before you to testify as to their position in regard to the removal of the duties from wool.

Respectfully, WM. C. HUNNEMAN.

(Since this letter was written to members of the committee it has been decided not to hold public hearings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1689. An act authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations; and

S. 485. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

MEMBERSHIP OF CERTAIN COMMITTEES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a few changes in the rules in reference to the membership upon committees of the House. I seek to do this by unanimous consent rather than to have it referred to the Committee on Rules, because it is a matter that may properly be attended to in that way, and I hope there will be no objection. The majority in this Congress gave the minority the same representation it had upon committees in the last Congress, although the number of Representatives upon that side of the House has largely decreased. It somewhat embarrassed the majority in fixing committee places. I ask unanimous consent to increase one or two committees which I will state in their order, and, in the first place, the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee was increased in number in the last House from 19 to 20, but that was only for the last Congress. There was no change made in the rules, so that it leaves only 19 members upon that committee at the present time, of which the minority now have 7. I ask unanimous consent that Rule X, subsection 16, be changed by striking out "19" and inserting in lieu thereof "21," so that this side of the House may have 14 members of that Committee, and the minority 7, as on all of the other large committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to change subsection 16 of Rule X so as to increase the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs to 21. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There are now 3 members of that committee from one State. Is it the purpose of the majority to add the 2 additional members to that committee from that State?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the majority is not yet prepared to state who will be on the committees of the House. That is a matter which has first to go to the Democratic caucus.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not seeking the information in the interest of any applicant for a place on that committee.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I will suggest that there are also 2 Members on that committee from the State of Kansas, and if any objections are made to the number of men going on the committee from any particular State, I think it ought to operate as to one State the same as to another.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I heartily agree with the gentleman in that.

Mr. CARTER. The State of Oklahoma has one-third of the entire Indians in the United States and the State of Kansas, I think, has less than 20,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But there are a lot of good ones among those.

Mr. CARTER. So I leave it to the House as to which State has the greatest representation on the committee, Oklahoma with three or Kansas with two.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order that I may ask a question. Will this increase of two on this committee sufficiently take care of everyone on that side of the House so that we shall not have to have a new committee on public health, and all the rest of this tomfoolery that is talked about, in order to take care of the Members of the majority?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentleman that I intend before I get through, if I am not stopped in asking unanimous consent, to ask unanimous consent that a committee on expenditures in the Department of Labor may be created, because that is a new department. The reason that I am asking this now is that I am trying to prepare a report to present to the House, and I desire to have the numbers on the different committees fixed.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Alabama has his way about increasing the membership of these committees, I would like to know whether it would do away with the necessity or the policy of increasing the number of committees, and making new committees on some of these different subjects that are liable to grow so fast in the future into legislation and possibly into departments?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the question of a committee on the public health is a matter that is before the Committee on Rules, and it is for them to report to the House and for the House to determine.

Mr. PAYNE. I have been told that the Committee on Rules has already been authorized to report that favorably.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question for the House to determine. The requests I propose to make to-day are those that will not involve any issues.

Mr. PAYNE. I was in hopes the gentleman had something more in view, something of real benefit besides taking care of a couple of Democrats.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at the organization of the last House there were 19 members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. A number of committees at that time were increased in membership to 21 each and the minority was given 7 of the 21 and the majority took 14. Although there has been some decrease in the actual membership of the minority and a considerable increase in the actual membership of the majority, due to the increase in Members of the House, at a meeting between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Kansas and myself with reference to the membership of the minority and the majority of the present House, the membership of the minority of the 21 membership committees was not decreased and the minority was given 7 places on Indian Affairs as though it were a 21-member committee. And I think the gentleman from Alabama is only asking what is fair, to give to the majority the same number upon the Indian Affairs Committee that it has upon the other committees now consisting of 21 members each. In the last House when Arizona and New Mexico were admitted as States there was one full number on the Committee on Indian Affairs provided by unanimous consent for that House. So, too, with the Committee on Irrigation, and at our meeting the minority was given 6 places on the Committee on Irrigation, although the rules only provided for 13 places. In the last House the membership of that committee was temporarily increased upon the admission of the new States to 15 each, and, as I understand, the gentleman expects to ask unanimous consent to increase the committee to 15, so I think it is perfectly fair that the majority should have the 9 places. That also exists in part as to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority having been given its proportion of the larger committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Committee on Indian Affairs is authorized to be increased to 21.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the rules are now modified.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the rules are modified. The Speaker did not take the trouble to put the question, but announced it as carried without objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on page 284 of the Manual that Rule X, paragraph 34, on irrigation of arid lands, which now reads, "To consist of 13 members," be changed so as to read "To consist of 15 members."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the rules be so modified as to increase the number of members on the Committee on Arid Lands from 13 to 15. Is there objection to the change in the rule? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Rule X, paragraph 21, that now reads "On Public Buildings and Grounds to consist of 17 members," be so changed as to read, "On Public Buildings and Grounds to consist of 19 members."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the rules be amended so as to increase the membership on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from 17 to 19. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the rules are so changed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Rule X, paragraph 45, which now reads, "On Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, to consist of 7 members," that the words "and Labor" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to modify the rules by striking out of Rule X, paragraph 45, the words "and Labor."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, what does that do?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intend to ask unanimous consent to establish a Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, what are we doing; amending the rules?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is exactly what we are doing. We have amended the rules in three particulars already.

Mr. HENRY. I have just had my attention called to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the amendments we have made here were carried in the last House for that House only, but in making up the committee positions the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor is a new matter. That is as far as we are going——

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman from Alabama, this creates, when he finishes his request, a new Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; that is one of the reasons. In making up the committees we prefer to do it now and have it uniform. We have established since these rules were adopted a Department of Labor, and of course it has to have a Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I understand it, this request includes only one-half of the proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is the first half of it. If this is agreed to, I shall ask for the other half.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there has been a committee on expenditures in every department of the Government until the present time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And this change becomes necessary because of the creation of a Department of Labor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to omitting from subsection 45 of Rule X the words "and Labor"? The Chair hears none, and this rule is modified to that extent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add to Rule X a new subsection to be numbered 56, to read as follows:

On expenditures in the Department of Labor, to consist of 7 members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify Rule X by adding as subsection 56 the words—

On expenditures in the Department of Labor, to consist of 7 members.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it more desirable to put that in as subsection 56 or to put it in following the Committee on Commerce, and to change the numbers of the others?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For the present I ask unanimous consent that it go in as subsection 45a.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies the request, and asks that the words suggested go in as subsection 45a of Rule X. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One more request, Mr. Speaker. In Rule XI, subsection 45, which now reads—

In the Department of Commerce and Labor—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor—

I move to strike out the words "and Labor," where they appear in two places in that paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that in Rule XI, subsection 45, the words "and Labor" be stricken out where they appear, and that subsection 45 of Rule XI be modified to that extent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add to the rule subsection 45a to read as follows:

In the Department of Labor—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to add as subsection 45a the words—

In the Department of Labor—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor.

Is there objection to the rule being modified in that respect?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Commerce has recently given to the press a statement with reference to the comparative efficiency of labor at home and abroad. This statement is claimed to be supported by a pamphlet on "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions," issued by the same department, and is apparently based on tables contained therein from which inferences have been drawn and deductions made.

Some of these inferences have been made by the compilers of the pamphlet, others would not be put forth by its authors. In either case, in so far as it is asserted that these tables show that for the wages paid the American workman, as a rule, adds more to the value of the manufactured product than his foreign competitor, it is easy to establish that these tables afford no basis for such conclusions. The table principally relied upon as a foundation for misleading articles which have appeared in the press is found on page 39 of this pamphlet, where a comparison is made of the amount of wages paid for every $1,000 added by manufacture in 31 specified industries carried on in the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom. This table purports to show that in 17 industries the amount of wages paid for each $1,000 added by manufacture was less in the United States than it was in England. As a careful study of the pamphlet itself will afford the means of completely refuting the inferences generally drawn from it, it is hardly just to state that the table was prepared with intent to deceive, but it is subject to the criticism that it would be likely to mislead any person who merely examines it, and that it has mislead many.

Elsewhere in the pamphlet, on page 41, it is stated that "owing to the higher level of prices in the United States that foregoing comparisons, being based on values, is more favorable to the United States than would be one based on quantities if such could be made." This is stating very mildly a matter which utterly destroys the usefulness of the table for purposes of comparison. On nearly all the goods manufactured in these industries prices are from 30 to 50 per cent higher in this country than abroad, as shown by the fact that importations of such goods are constantly being made and a duty paid thereon to this amount. When allowances are made for the value of these goods, expressed in American prices, the result is at once to reverse the showing of this table, if, indeed, any showing could be made in such manner.

For example, prices of woolen goods, which are among the manufactures listed, will average more than 50 per cent higher in this country than abroad. It may be said that it is impossible to work out exactly how much has been added in United States values, and possibly this is true, but for that very reason it is impossible to properly use this table for the purpose of comparison of the efficiency of the respective workmen.

If attention is directed to another portion of the table than that which relates to the United Kingdom, it at once shows what absurd results will be reached by using the figures used therein for the comparative efficiency of labor. The table not only gives the amount paid for each $1,000 added by manufacture in the United States and the United Kingdom, but also for Canada. Of the 29 industries for which the comparison is so made between the United States and Canada all but 8 in the list show that the amount of wages paid in Canada for each $1,000 added by manufacture is not only less in the last-named country, but very much less in most instances, and in two cases less than half what is paid in the United States. Applying the line of reasoning and peculiar inferences which some well meaning but not overlogical gentlemen have applied to this table, it would be found by the same process that workingmen in Canada were so much more efficient than in the United States that ordinarily $2 paid in wages to Canadians would equal $3 paid to Americans in producing power, and in some lines of manufacture the American wage cost for equal output would be twice that of the Canadian. There is much more reason for applying this method in the case of Canada and the United States than in the case of the United States and Great Britain, because the daily wage and scale of values are nearly the same in the two countries; but such a conclusion is so in variance with well-known facts that the comparison would be received as more in the nature of a joke than as a statement of fact.

The use of this table for the purpose mentioned reminds one of Mark Twain's calculations from statistics as to the shortening of the Mississippi during the years he was navigating it. Following the average for those years, he was able to demonstrate that a century ago the river stuck out over the Gulf into South America, and that a century in the future it would shrink until its mouth would be about at Cairo.

So far as the table referred to is concerned, a little consideration clearly brings out the reasons why it can not be used for the purpose of determining comparative efficiency. Some of these reasons appear in the pamphlet itself and some have already been stated. It will be observed that no attempt is made to show how much it costs in the respective countries to make exactly similar articles in quality and quantity. It is well known that in one country an industry may be largely confined to highly finished products, and in another to coarse machine-made articles. These tables afford no basis for comparing the kind or quality of the articles produced. Nothing can be ascertained as to whether they are highly finished, needing much labor in proportion to the value of the finished product, or whether their nature is such that one man can feed the raw material into one end of a long series of machines and another man at the other end can take out the finished product; so that the amount of labor is trifling compared to the resulting value, although the expense for the machinery is necessarily high. The only proper way to make such comparisons is furnished in the report of the Tariff Board on wool. Here we find that the cost of weaving per yard on the same kind of woolen cloth is from two to three times as much here as in England, and the same is true of total conversion costs. This fact is not disputed, yet we are asked to infer from this table that the American workingman in the woolen mills gives more return for his wages than the Englishman. It is well known, as stated in the pamphlet, that in certain lines more highly finished articles are produced by the English factories than in the American, and necessarily where a large amount of hand labor is required the proportion of wages to the finished product is higher. It also appears from the pamphlet that in making up this table the figures as to the cost of materials in the United Kingdom included the amounts paid to other firms for work given out. This was not done with reference to the United States, for the reason that no separate statement thereof was made. The effect of this would be to greatly lessen the returns for the United Kingdom and is sufficient by itself to show that a table based thereon afforded no proper basis for comparison. The real test can only be the quantity of similar work performed under practically similar circumstances in all respects. The pamphlet does not pretend to even estimate this.

There are some concerns that mine iron ore and make pig iron from it. From the pig iron another makes steel; others from the steel billets make bars or rods, and from the bars and rods another concern makes wire and hoop iron, and so forth, in various forms. The great Steel Trust carries on all of these and many other operations from the ore to the finished product in forms too numerous to mention. It is obvious that if a concern that carries on all of these processes simply deducts the cost of the ore from the value of the finished product, that the amount added by manufacture will be very high as compared to the returns where several processes are performed by different firms and the cost of the material with an addition for each process is deducted as many times as there are different firms engaged in its production. Or to take a simpler illustration, one concern manufactures every part of an automobile. Another concern makes only certain portions thereof and buys the remaining parts and assembles them. It is perfectly apparent that the workmen in the last-named factory may be just as efficient as those of the first, but according to the methods of the Department of Commerce they would fall far below. In no country do single concerns carry on so many different processes or use such expensive equipment as in the United States, and both of these matters render any comparisons based on the amount added by manufacture to the cost of the original material no measure whatever of the efficiency of the workmen even in the same class of industry.

On page 42 of the same pamphlet is found another table, giving for each wage earner the amount of wages, horsepower used, and value added by manufacture for all industries in the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom. This table also seems to have been used in making a comparison of the efficiency of the wage earners in the respective countries. Here again the table furnishes in itself an illustration of the absurd and inconsistent results that will be reached by using these returns for such purposes.

As above stated, a comparison made by using the figures on page 39 of the same document, showed that the Canadian workman was very much more efficient than the American, but according to the table on page 42 there is only a slight difference, and that difference is in favor of the American workman instead of to his disadvantage.

If the census returns for the same matters from the various States were used for the purpose of making the same kind of comparisons, the result would show a marked difference in the efficiency of the respective workers in many cases where they were separated only by a State line. Who believes that Arizona has the most efficient artisans, and that its workers in manufacturing are nearly three times as efficient as those of Wyoming? Who thinks the factory hands of Minnesota nearly twice as efficient as those of Vermont? Yet this is what such comparisons of the State census returns will show, although everyone knows that there is little difference in the average efficiency of our workingmen throughout the whole country.

It is not difficult to give reasons why the comparison of such statistics furnishes no evidence as to efficiency. How useless it is to compare the wages expended in a State where flour is its greatest product with the same returns from one whose chief manufactures are cutlery or other lines requiring much labor and using material of no great value. In flour making $1 spent in wages will add $5 to the value of the material used. The expense arises largely from the investment in the plant, and that of the power. In certain other lines the amount of wages is so large that it is not far from the total value added by manufacture. Nations differ even more than our States with respect to the kind of industry which each develops. It is as useless to compare the totals of all industries united from different countries as to compare the special industries mentioned. The difference would only be in the degree of inaccuracy.

There are, however, some interesting and useful facts contained in this document. Thus we find that the British Board of Trade Report shows that the average hourly wage for labor in the United States is 140 per cent higher than in the United Kingdom—in other words, that wages in this country are nearly two and a half times as much as in the United Kingdom—and that as compared to Germany and France the ratio is still higher. It also shows that while rent is higher in this country, and that food prices, without making any allowances for the better living of the American workman, are higher in this country, the precentage of total income spent by the American workman for these items is much less than abroad. It follows, therefore, that he not only lives better, but after paying for necessaries has more left than his English brother.

It may be conceded that in some lines of industry the efficiency of the American is greater than the European. In some branches of manufacture which were originated in this country the foreigner has as yet failed to overtake us. On the other hand, it is equally true that in many industries which have been developed for centuries in Europe we are so lacking in trained workers that the American makes a poor showing in efficiency as compared to the European worker. The document referred to only serves to emphasize the necessity of a tariff commission which will obtain the facts upon which an estimate can be based as to the cost of production at home and abroad, and from which a conclusion may be properly drawn as to the amount of tariff necessary to maintain among our workingmen the American standard of wages and living.

HOMES FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS POOR.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] be allowed to address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] be permitted to address the House for not to exceed one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss briefly this morning the movement which is now going on in Washington to provide better homes for the industrious poor.

Every great municipality has its own peculiar housing problem. These housing problems are in great part the result of the growth of the municipality in wealth, the rise in land values, and the rise in the standard of living that follows.

As soon as a city begins to grow and land values become an important element some of the population who are well to do, and frequently those who are in very moderate circumstances, move gradually out from the down-town sections to the suburbs, where they can find the surroundings and conveniences of modern civilization and refinement. That generally leaves a large section of the city, wherein land values have grown very high, devoted primarily to the uses of business. Those business uses include, of course, the office buildings, the retail section, and the financial district; but they also include the hotels, many apartment houses, and a large number of buildings designed for human abodes for a more or less transient element of the population—not always a dependent element, frequently a prosperous element, but still a more or less transient element of the population.

All through the business sections of every great city there is another residential section. It is the residential section of the poor, that section which with a sweeping injustice we sometimes denominate "the slums." It is the section where the irregularly employed poor must live; where people must live who must be close to where there is a chance for a job; where people must live who can not afford to pay car fare to and from their work, whose employment is at irregular hours, perhaps, and on irregular days; where people must live who are temporarily out of employment and who have not the necessary credit and the necessary facilities to rent for a fixed term one of the better homes farther out.

Now, that class is sweepingly denominated the slums. I am optimist enough to believe that the so-called slums shelter a large percentage of worthy people. While that class of property shelters the criminal and the semicriminal element of the city, it also unfortunately shelters a great percentage of the industrious poor. I undertake to say that two-thirds of the dwellers in the so-called slums do not belong to the criminal nor to the semicriminal class. They are the class of toilers who are the by-product of the wealth and progress of the city itself.

We take ample care of the well to do; we beautify the city for the rich, we tempt them to move out in the beautiful park districts of the city, and yet we take no care of a part of the problem that is just as necessary to the vital commercial life of the city, the industrious, floating, irregularly employed poor. We allow them to drift into the slum sections of the city.

The city of Washington was laid out originally on very generous lines. The streets are broad; great avenues and squares; large blocks of ground for residential purposes. Evidently the men who laid out the city of Washington believed that it would always have a semirural aspect, that the dwellings would be surrounded by large, spacious grounds and lawns, and that there would be a semirural life, and so they laid it out on that generous plan for those purposes. The blocks are large, and they include the regular alley which used to be and still is a feature of the regular American city life. I undertake to say that the alley is an economic anachronism. There may have been a time when the residents needed an alley, when every man had a back garden of limitless expanse, usually flanked at the rear end by barns and outbuildings which sheltered the animals—horses, cows, and other domestic animals. In those days probably an alley was a necessity to a resident district. To-day the alley is useless in a resident district, and it is only necessary in a city as a back passage to a warehouse, a store, or a hotel.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is that the policy pursued in the gentleman's own city—Kansas City—subdividing property and not providing for alleys?

Mr. BORLAND. In the new subdivision; yes. Unfortunately, our old section is laid out in the usual way of American cities.

Mr. MANN. Is that because of the topography of the city?

Mr. BORLAND. Not always.

Mr. MANN. I hope no such propaganda will come to my city. I think every civilized community in subdividing property provides for alleys, and always will.

Mr. BORLAND. That is more a question of taste and opinion. I find that residential property not having alleys is cleaner and more wholesome than residential sections having alleys, for this reason: Mr. A will keep his premises adjoining his alley in a very creditable condition. Possibly Mr. B and Mr. C will do likewise as long as they occupy their own premises.

Mr. B moves away and rents his premises, and the renter does not feel the same interest in keeping the alley opposite his premises in the same condition, and no one property owner in the block can control the general condition of the block. He must, of course, rest upon the enforcement of the ordinary sanitary laws.

Mr. MANN. Is not that also true of streets as well as alleys?

Mr. BORLAND. Not so true, because streets are more open to inspection, and they become more offensive if neglected.

Mr. MANN. Why are they any more open to inspection than alleys?

Mr. BORLAND. They are used for different purposes also. Alleys are used for the purpose of taking away ashes and garbage and for various purposes to relieve the street from traffic of that sort.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri, as I understand, thinks that it is more desirable to place the ashes and the garbage upon the sidewalk of the street in front of the house while awaiting removal than to have them placed in the alley in the rear of the house.

Mr. BORLAND. No; the gentleman from Missouri did not say that.

Mr. MANN. Then where does the gentleman put the garbage and ashes while waiting for them to be carried away? In New York City they put them in the streets where they have no alleys.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Illinois is from a great city, and I will undertake to say that I can go into the city of Chicago and find a dozen blocks that have no alleys in them, but have bricked-paved passageways along the side of the house, for instance, to the back of the house, where ashes and garbage may be removed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think so; thousands of them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this proposition of doing away with the alleys. It is a new question, or would be a new one in my locality. Where I come from there is quite a sentiment in favor of enlarging the lots or the sites of the homes of the working people so that it will be possible for them to have fruit gardens or patches where they may grow vegetables, and also a place for a few chickens. That seems to be the disposition on the part of the real estate men in my district, and I have approved of that. Of course my district is in the outlying part of the city of Chicago. In fact, I have been trying to encourage that so far as I can, and to encourage the half acre and acre lot proposition with alleys, with large back yards so that the children of the working people may be able to have sunshine and air and grow to more healthy and better citizens. I am interested, and I will be glad to hear from the gentleman further in regard to doing away with alleys. If it is of any advantage, of course we want to know it.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak at any great length on the proposition of whether alleys were or were not desirable in residence sections. I think that in a section of the city where there is space enough to really have a back yard and a garden an alley has its uses. When we come to the down-town sections of the city we very soon find that the alley becomes instead of a convenience a menace, and that is what has occurred here in the city of Washington and I want to point that out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What will the gentleman do to replace the uses of an alley in case of fire? An alley has its uses now in case of fire.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, yes; there are a great many uses that an alley has as a back passageway of some form. It has a great many uses behind any building, particularly a store or a hotel.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state that I have in mind now a place which has been blocked up by objectionable houses to which the gentleman has referred, and the houses ought to be removed, so that protection may be given to the property in front.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that is unquestionably true. The situation here in the city of Washington in regard to alleys is this: These blocks, as I said, were of very generous size. I understand that after the Civil War, when Washington began to fill up rapidly with people they began to build on these broad, handsome streets, and the frontage of the street being the most valuable part of the property it was built up on as narrow a line as possible. Some of the houses are very narrow, occupying the full frontage allotted to them, and they run up three or four stories or more in height.

That left a back part of very generous proportion, the interior of these great squares, practically useless until some genius discovered that the ground inside of the block, being very accessible to business, to residences, and to hotels, had a commercial value, had a rental value, and then they began to construct these alley tenements. I understand most of the tenements were constructed between 1875 and 1890. They are in many cases of a somewhat substantial character; that is, they could not be condemned at that time under the building laws and many could not be condemned to-day under the building laws. They are not all in a dilapidated or dangerous condition. Some were adapted from other purposes—warehouses, sheds, and barns—for the purpose of residences, but many of them seem to have been constructed for the very purpose of alley tenements.

Along about 1892, I understand, a law was passed in the District forbidding any further construction of alley tenements on alleys less than 30 feet wide, with certain other limitations. This law had the virtual effect of forbidding the construction of alley tenements, because no alleys existed that met the requirements where buildings could be constructed. Many of these old buildings, however, have been remodeled since that time and repaired, but all tenements now are at least 25 years of age, and some of them probably as much as 40 years old. They will average more than 30 years old, so that these buildings are not modern, they are not sanitary, do not have the light, air, and facilities that they should have, and they have stood here a problem to the District of Columbia for this reason. Take cities like the great city of Chicago, with its teeming industrial population in its squares where there is a congested population. That congestion arises from the presence of manufacturing districts, where persons are crowded together in limited quarters within reach of their earning power and for other reasons that the city struggles against and struggles with a great degree of success. Here in Washington there is no such industrial congestion, but this whole population is scattered all through the main sections of the city. It permeates the whole city, with the exception of the newer outlying suburbs. I have a little map, or a little sketch, here, in which you may be interested, showing these black spots, or squares, which contain inhabited alleys in the District of Columbia, and it shows there is hardly a section of this city, no matter how crowded it may be with a self-respecting, clean, refined population, but what there is directly adjacent to them these alley tenements. The fashionable district of the city, all of the apartment-house district of the city, are directly in contact with this alley section. In addition to that, of course it permeates the business section of the city, to which the great army of workers must come and make it their workshop during the business hours of the day; so that it is impossible in the city of Washington to separate the population from the contagion of the alley slums. It is not the same in some of the great industrial cities, where there will be industrial suburbs or industrial sections separate and distinct from the residential section. Here they ramify and permeate the entire city.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman used an expression just now "contagion of the slums." Do I understand the sanitary conditions of those sections are——

Mr. BORLAND. I was just about to touch upon that.

Mr. KEATING. When the gentleman does touch upon that will he give some light as to what the health department has been doing in regard to this matter?

Mr. BORLAND. So far as I am able to do so. The death rate in the city of Washington, according to the census of 1910, was the third highest in the United States. It is 19.8 per thousand.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman passes from that can the gentleman give us any information as to who own these tenement houses?

Mr. BORLAND. I have it here; I shall come to it in a moment.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is going to come to that later?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. The death rate of the whole District of Columbia is the third highest in the whole United States.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state to what he ascribes that?

Mr. BORLAND. I was just about to touch upon that. The District of Columbia, of course, includes more than the city of Washington. It embraces a large rural section and a large suburban section, so that when we say that the death rate of the District of Columbia is the third highest in the United States we are making a very strong indictment against the crowded portions of the city.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the death rate here is the third highest in the United States. Just what does he mean?

Mr. BORLAND. I mean that there are only two municipalities whose death rate exceeds that of Washington, according to the report of 1910.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean only two municipalities, or only two municipalities of a certain population?

Mr. BORLAND. I mean only two municipalities.

Mr. MANN. I venture to say that the gentleman is mistaken about that, or that there are no figures which show the death rate in many of the smaller municipalities.

Mr. BORLAND. I am stating what I have been informed. I have had the figures shown to me, and I could name the two municipalities—I do not think it necessary—which have a higher death rate. It may have been accidental in those cases. Of course, when I say the death rate in the District of Columbia is high and near the top of the list, it is an indictment against the central portions of the city, and a very strong indictment indeed.

When I came to find out where this death rate was highest, as shown by the figures, I found that the death rate in the alleys is 160 per cent of the death rate on the resident streets. The death rate in the alleys runs over 30 per 1,000; so that it is the infection of the alleys that brings up the death rate of the District of Columbia. It not only brings up the death rate of the alley population, but it brings up the death rate of the population who live in houses on streets as well, for we find that the death rate of the streets, not including the alley tenements, is higher than the death rate of the average municipality of the size of Washington in this country. It is two or three points higher than the death rate of the great cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Without naming the two municipalities which the gentleman referrred to where the death rate is higher than in Washington, do those two municipalities contain an outlying rural population similar to this?

Mr. BORLAND. No; they do not. They are congested cities.

Mr. SIMS. Then the comparison would not be altogether fair.

Mr. BORLAND. The comparison is not quite fair. It is still stronger against the District of Columbia than the simple figures show.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What objection is there to naming those two municipalities that have a higher death rate than Washington?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman can look them up. I will name two municipalities that have a low death rate. They are Minneapolis and St. Paul. I am glad to give them credit for that. They are entitled to it.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman know that the principal city of his own State, St. Louis, has a very low death rate?

Mr. BORLAND. I know that the death rate of St. Louis is down to nearly 13 per thousand, which is very creditable and of which I am very proud.

Mr. BRYAN. Is not the gentleman willing to state that neither of the two cities having a death rate higher than the city of Washington is located in the State of Washington?

Mr. BORLAND. They are not. Now, I want to state some further concrete facts, because facts are what we are after. I could tell you many stories of the actual conditions in these alley tenements. Some of them are in a deplorable and revolting condition. They are the natural incubators of crime and disease. They are so because of the fact that they are hidden away from the inspection of the police and the health officer. The owners of these alley tenements have been placing a tremendous burden upon the rest of the municipality in compelling it to try to police and keep sanitary those alley tenements.

Many of these alley tenements are built in the form of a letter "H," so that until you have gone 75 or 80 feet through a 10-foot passageway between high walls or high board fences, when you turn suddenly into the inhabited portions of the alley, it is impossible to see the ramifications spread out before you.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Has the gentleman a list of the owners of these alley tenements?

Mr. BORLAND. I have a partial list. I think there is a complete list.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman propose to disclose the names of those owners?

Mr. BORLAND. Some of them. I want to say that these alley tenements have been bought and sold on the market. They have passed sometimes into the hands of nonresidents, frequently into the hands of widows. They are in the hands of all classes of people who ordinarily seek investments in rental properties.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that the alley property yields large returns on the investment?

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably.

Mr. KAHN. And is not that the reason why people of moderate means invest their money in that property—because they get such a large percentage in return?

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make an announcement that he has made several times before. The rule requires that when a Member wishes to interrupt another who holds the floor, he shall first address the Chair. At first it looks like there was not much sense in the rule, but when you come to consider it, it prevents quarrels, misunderstandings, ugly scenes, and sometimes fights. Of course, there is no danger of any such trouble here to-day, because a good-natured gentleman has the floor and the subject is not exciting any great amount of feeling; but the Chair has seen circumstances and conditions where it was entirely different.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. Can the gentleman state what is the death rate in this House?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know exactly; I am not able to inform the gentleman. Of course, we do not have young children and strong, able-bodied schoolboys in this House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield.

Mr. SIMS. Before the gentleman gets away from this subject I want to suggest that, therefore, on account of the increased earnings of money invested in alley property the love of the almighty dollar is the real cause of it.

Mr. BORLAND. "The love of money is the root of all evil." That was written a long time ago. It is not money, but the love of money, that is the root of all evil.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman state what class of tenants these alleys have—whether they are mostly white or black?

Mr. BORLAND. The overwhelming majority of them are colored. I saw one building where there were six rooms in the building, two on a floor. The stairway led off from a little passage that led off from the alley. The passage itself was dark and the stairway was as black as night. That stairway went almost straight up like a ladder, and there were two turns in it to reach each floor. You had to light a match to get into the passageway and up the stairway. There were two rooms on each floor. In each room was an entire family—six families in the six rooms. One family had five members in it, and how many the others had I do not know. One of the rooms was so littered up with washtubs and broken furniture—people sitting on the broken furniture and on the bed—that it was impossible for two additional people to get into the room. These rooms rent for a dollar a week apiece—$4.50 for a room or $27 for the building per month. That building could be constructed for $700 or $800, not counting the value of the land.

I will not have time to call attention to all the charts here, but I want to pay acknowledgment to some ladies who have been so industrious in getting the facts. These alley tenements have attracted the attention of philanthropic charitable women. There have been alley commissions of all kinds. These women have gone into the alleys with a degree of moral heroism and physical heroism that is almost incomprehensible. They have gone into these alleys with their accumulation of crime and of drunken conditions that would appall a strong man. They go in the nighttime and on Sundays and at times when the population, the worst element of it, is particularly turbulent.

The general outline of alleys is about the same. They will have a saloon on the street and the corner of the alley. Inside the alley is a low store in the center of it, generally run by a white man who very frequently is the only white resident of the alley. The rest of the population is usually black, of the floating, transiently employed class. As I say, I do not think all or a majority or a substantial per cent belong originally to the criminal class. But the whole alley atmosphere debases and degrades them. It spares neither age or sex in the general demoralization and degradation of these low conditions. Into some of these alleys, after certain hours of the night, I understand the police officers go in pairs. They never venture in there alone for fear they would not have a chance to get out and report. There is no possibility of those on the outside seeing what is going on on the inside. There is found this huddled population swarming over the street or the paved portion of the alley, sometimes showing in the very center the open grating of the sewer in that narrow block. Here the children and adults swarm back and forth at all hours of the day and night, crowded up against the offal, the refuse, the garbage, the ashes, and the accumulation of that form of life. It is so easy for the collectors of garbage to overlook those corners, so difficult for those in charge to find when there has been an overlooking, so difficult for the officers to keep them in a sanitary condition.

After every investigation and sometimes a prosecution they will compel a particular owner in the alley to make certain repairs, and he does it just up to the narrow verge where he can escape the prosecution of the law, and within a few months it is back again where it started. There you are spending the money of the people and of the district in health departments battling against conditions that are almost impossible to deal with. Think of these buildings 20 and 30 and 40 years old, with their blackened walls. Think of the deaths from tuberculosis, cholera infantum, typhoid, pneumonia that those walls have looked down upon in the past 30 or 40 years. Think of the army of tenants that have passed through those buildings. I will undertake to say that two-thirds of the nursemaids, the cooks, the porters, and the hotel boys in this District come from and return to those alley tenements two and three and seven times a week.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman has made a tour of the alleys. Has he not found that in most of them there is a hydrant in the center of the block, from which all of the tenants in the alley have to procure their water and carry it into their houses?

Mr. BORLAND. Usually that is so.

Mr. KAHN. And has he not found house after house where the women inhabiting them take the family washing for the residents of the city of Washington into the unclean surroundings?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I have seen, and I know that the gentleman has seen, women's and children's clothing hanging up in those yards and across those ramshackle porches, and even in those damp, dank rooms clothing that would be taken back as clean the next day to some family of children or women.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman has been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia of this House. Does the gentleman know that there is now authority of law for the health commissioner to proceed to condemn these alleys on account of public health?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and I am obliged to the gentleman for that suggestion. I am going to touch on that matter in a moment. Something was said about getting at the actual facts about who owns the property and what kind of looking property it is. I will not have time to call attention to all of these charts which are gotten up by some of these investigating ladies, but they are open to the inspection of anybody who cares to look at them. I will use this which I have in my hand as an illustration. It is one prepared with a good deal of care by Mrs. Albert Norton Wood, wife of a retired naval officer, who has taken some interest in these matters. Here is Madison Alley and here is Chew Alley, and they are both in the same block. This is Madison Alley and this is Chew Alley, and these are not the worst so far as the formation of the street is concerned. They happen to be pretty bad in respect to the tenements that occupy them.

I want to state something about the statistics in respect to these. There are 13 occupied houses in Madison Alley, and those houses shelter 90 people. Of those the colored people are 85 and the white 5, and the adults are 56 and the children 34. The number of deaths that occurred in that alley in 1912 was 7. The number of arrests was 73 out of a total population of 90, of which arrests 27 were women. The number of complaints investigated by the sanitary inspector during the year 1912 was 16. Sixteen complaints in 13 houses for the sanitary inspector, and that is the burden that is put upon the officers of the District of Columbia by the owners of these alley tenements—16 sanitary complaints in 13 dwellings in 12 months.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. What do the authorities do to improve these conditions that prevail in these alleys?

Mr. BORLAND. Well, they say they have remedied 12 out of 16 complaints and found 4 unfounded. When they say they found 4 unfounded they mean the fellow had not gotten himself over the ragged edge of the law. Now, that is all it means. It does not mean the property was restored to a livable condition, but it means that a police court prosecution would fail in that case.

Mr. LOBECK. The property owners would interest themselves in defending themselves against the inspector.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, frequently. Nearly every complaint of an inspector brings about a bitter contest with the property owner or his agent or both, and frequently from other property owners. This little picture in the center represents one family in Madison Alley. There is a boy 10 years old and two smaller children. These are the children of a washerwoman, who goes out into your family or my family and does the family washing. She leaves these children penned up on the top of this porch here so that they can not get out. There is a fence put around here so they can not get out. That little boy is left there to take care of these other two, and he is 10 years of age. Although he is 10 years of age he has never been inside a public school provided by Congress in the District of Columbia. What are you going to do with that boy later on? You are going to provide a penitentiary for him; you are going to provide handcuffs for him; you are going to provide an army of officers for him; and you are going to pay them out of the taxes levied upon the honest industries of God-fearing people of this District and this country. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Have not we juvenile courts here for the protection and care of these kind of children?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and I want to say they are doing a wonderful work. I want to say we are manufacturing criminals, we are manufacturing helpless invalids, we are manufacturing crooks and sots, we are filling the hospitals, and we are filling the jails, and the juvenile court and charities are dealing with this overwhelming oncoming army as well as they can. [Applause.] But they are being overwhelmed with criminals and imbeciles and sots, and there is an increased number of them being forced upon their hands every year.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman know that about one-third of the population of Washington city consists of negroes?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; 90,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman know about 76 per cent of the crimes committed in Washington are committed by the Negro race, although they comprise only one-third of the entire population?

Mr. BORLAND. I think that is quite possible. I find about 16,000 of the 90,000 live in these alleys. These inhabited alleys have 3,000 dwelling houses in them, each house having something over 5 people.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will permit, in connection with the horrible description he has given, I think he should also emphasize the fact that one-half the municipal expenses here are paid by people who do not live in the District.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; one-half of the municipal expenses of this city are paid by the people of this District and half by the people who do not live in the District, so we are taxing 90,000,000 of American citizens for this condition of affairs here. Now, something has been said in regard to charity workers and juvenile courts. There has been wonderful work done by them in the last few years.

No man feels stronger sympathy than the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], the able Representative from the great municipality of St. Louis, toward the aims and purposes of these institutions, but these charity workers who have done so much for these alleys make but one report, and that is that they can not combat the alley conditions. They say as soon as they help one family to raise in its moral tone and restores its self-respect and raises its economic standard it moves out of the alley. The vacancy thus created is immediately filled by another family, sometimes from the country, sometimes a good, straight, honest family that has been brought to that condition by sickness or lack of employment or some other recent cause, which goes to the alley tenement. There it soon sinks to a lower moral level and then these same noble workers, these same noble women, go through the same hopeless task again of raising another family and another brood of children out of the horrible moral depths to which they have fallen and start them again upon a career of good citizenship. It is too big a battle, they can not maintain that unequal struggle. Now, as to these alley conditions. I have said that there is no section of the District or city where a family, no matter how self-respecting and industrious they may be, can escape this alley contagion.

I have said that these alley dwellers are largely of the servant class, who go to the homes of their employers in the morning and return to these tenements in the evening, every day.

There are plenty of drawing rooms in this city that have never been open to Members of Congress. I undertake to say there are plenty of drawing rooms in Washington that I have never been in and never will be in. But I undertake to say that there is not a drawing room or a home in Washington which is not open to alley contagion, and which alley contagion does not enter. It not only enters those homes which in many respects have the power to protect themselves, but it enters the homes of your constituents and mine, who come here to perform service for the great General Government of the United States. There are 40,000 people gathered here on the pay roll of Uncle Sam, coming from every section of the country with their families to make their homes here.

In many cases, living on humble salaries, they must find homes on streets adjacent to these alley tenements. Their back doors, their back yards, their back gates must open upon these noisome, crime-breeding, moral cesspools of the alleys. They find it impossible to keep their children out of the alleys, even when they are at home, in their own neighborhoods, and certainly impossible when they are on their way to and from school. Why, I have one picture here which shows a schoolhouse at the very corner of one of these alleys, where a great many of these arrests have been made. Here is a picture of the east half of Fenton Court. There is another half of Fenton Court which I could not get into this picture. The names are not all filled in on Fenton Court, because we did not have time. There is a public school right at the corner of that alley, and that alley has become one of the playgrounds of the children of that neighborhood. In 1912 there were 83 arrests in that half of Fenton Court, 83 arrests in the children's playground of the Blake School. There is not a family in Washington that can escape the alley contagion.

I have spoken more especially about the physical conditions of disease, about the contagion of pneumonia, and typhoid, and cholera infantum, and tuberculosis, those four great alley specters that stalk abroad at noonday from every one of these alleys; but there is this great crime-breeding, this great moral incubator of crime. There is this place that is filled with every form of human vice and degradation, and which is so crowded and so hidden from the ordinary inspection of the law officer and of the passerby in the street that it is impossible to turn the necessary white light of publicity upon it. Now, what is the remedy for these conditions?

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOBECK. Were not these alleys so laid out in the original survey as to enhance these conditions, or make them possible?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; that is true. I thought I had brought that out. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it. Many of these alleys are in the shape of a letter "H," so that when you get in there you run into two, three, or four blind courts, and those places are utterly impossible to be policed and kept clean. They are worse than the ordinary class of straight alleys. Here is one instance, Bladen Alley, between Ninth and Tenth and M and N Streets. This picture shows two men fighting in the part of the alley showing that "H" formation, and a policeman on his beat at the corner of the street within 75 or 80 feet. It is one of the most instructive pictures I ever saw illustrating that condition of affairs. You can see that it would be utterly impossible for that police officer to get at those men without going halfway down the block through a 10-foot alley, then around the "H" formation, and by that time they would have disappeared out of the other entrance to the alley.

What is the remedy for all this? Somebody will say, "Well, transform them into parks." That is a good thing in a great many instances. Other people will say, "Well, suppose you do turn them into parks; your alley population will go elsewhere and form new slums, and then you will have to make new parks."

I am frank to admit that the cleaning of the alleys or the elimination of the inhabited alleys is only part—although it is, I think, the larger part—of the problem. There is also the problem of rehousing. The only solution I have seen of that is the one so successfully made by the Washington Sanitary Housing Co. I went to see some of their houses. They began operations several years ago. They have two classes of houses. They will take a portion of the city and turn it into what is practically a minor street—a narrow street with sidewalks, curbing, and lights, like other streets, with water, gas, and sewer connections, and open at both ends. Here is one of these minor streets through the center of a block. On that they have built some very substantial apartments of brick and frequently of stone, with stone steps, concrete walks, iron handrails, with very little wood—very little framework—to get into a state of dilapidation or to be carried away or to be chopped up for kindling wood. They are very serviceable and very permanent. They have two classes of property, one that rents for $13.50 and the other for $14, the 50 cents difference being made by a bay window in some tenements. They consist of three rooms and a bath. There is a waiting list for these apartments. They are adapted to the white mechanic, to the white artisan, and they are filled with the best class of self-respecting, clear-eyed, and clear-headed honest toilers I have seen anywhere, inside or outside of the District of Columbia.

They have another set of apartments that are plainer but very similar in facilities. They have three rooms and a bath, furnished with modern conveniences. They are adapted to the colored people, and they have a waiting list for those. They are in beautiful condition. The little back yards, very small, are usually in the pink of condition. There is an emulation or self-respect that goes with that sort of a thing. It is very far from being a pauperizing charity; it is a long way from being a pauperizing charity. From these buildings, well constructed, well cared for, they net 5 per cent income. That is not enough to attract the owner of alley tenements. It necessarily appeals more strongly to a sense of philanthropy, a wise sense of philanthropy—a sense of philanthropy that does not wish to pauperize but respects the beneficiary, which recognizes the fact that self-respecting people want to earn their own way and want to pay for their own advantages at a fair rate. Here is the great advantage about that sort of thing: I saw, not very strange to say, in all districts where alley slums occur, little bits of oases, a little bit of a place where some householder had fixed up a clean little garden, and where there was really an attractive little home. You see frequently on these alleys some self-respecting family will have quite an attractive little place—a clean garden and a clean back door and a clean kitchen and an attractive place. But what can one person do in a block? It must be done generally and on a scale that will put the entire street or block in a condition that will raise the moral tone and raise the self-respect of all the inhabitants. Now, these darkies that inhabit the homes of the Washington Sanitary Co. are an average lot; they are not selected. They are the average tenants that have had to go out of the alley slums.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that the rental of these sanitary houses that the gentleman is speaking of is no greater than the rental that the people pay in the alleys?

Mr. BORLAND. Not a bit. The house in Madison Alley that I spoke of pays a rental of $27 a month for those rooms without any conveniences, against $8.50 for three rooms with a bath and gardens all around them. It is actually cheaper. The only difference is this, as the gentleman from San Francisco recognizes, that there is a class—the transient poor class, irregularly employed poor—that sometimes can not rent from month to month, but must rent from week to week. But the house problem remains the same. We should provide some system of accommodation even for the irregularly employed poor that will prevent them from being slum tenants and semi-criminal. Because a man is frequently out of employment, because he is occasionally sick, because he has the bad taste to die and leave a widow and several small children, does not relieve the community of the burden of seeing that that family becomes good citizens. It increases the moral responsibility of every true legislator. The greatest thing we can do is to cure the moral sore. We must find remedies that reach the cause of the moral disease, and the cause of the social disease in this case is the alley tenement in the District of Columbia. Those alley tenements must be eliminated. They must be eliminated in the interest of the people of the District of Columbia, they must be eliminated in the name of the honest toiler and worker of the District of Columbia who does not live in the alleys. They must be eliminated in the interest of your constituents and mine who come here to serve our common Government, and they must be eliminated in the interest of the great God-fearing mass of the American people, who demand that such conditions must not continue in the Capital of the great Nation of which we are all a part. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman not believe that our constituents at home would much rather pay taxes to relieve such a condition as this than to build six and eight million dollar driveways for the rich to use?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows what I think about that. I think that we have spent enough money for the rich in the city of Washington, and it is time now that we spent a little money for the honest, self-respecting poor. [Applause.] We have beautified many spots in the District of Columbia, and we are constantly urged in the most honeyed tones to beautify other spots in the District of Columbia; but now we are to have a chance to relieve and sweeten some of the homes of the helpless and industrious citizens of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. But Congress will never be importuned to accept an option on one of these slums in order to build a monument to a gentleman who wants to build up and beautify the city of Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think not. I do not think any of these alley-slum owners will importune us to take an option on their property. I think that they will resist bitterly any effort on our part to do so. That has been the experience in the past in all of our cities. I think in the end they will probably be paid 25 to 50 per cent in advance of the actual value of their property and that, notwithstanding that fact, they will carry the case to the Supreme Court of the United States in an effort to test whether the proceedings were regular and as to whether or not we have violated the Constitution. I think we will have to face that, and everybody who has made a reform has faced that. Notwithstanding that, notwithstanding the irritation and friction that will result or may result from any real, substantial, basic reform the time has now arrived when we must begin that reform.

We must eliminate these alley slums; there must not be any more alley population in the great city of Washington. We must turn these alleys into minor streets, and those that are capable of being opened through and widened and sidewalked and planted with trees should be treated in that way. Nearly all of them are capable of that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think that a large portion of the sanitary conditions that exist in these slums could be relieved by an efficient administration of the District affairs by those in authority?

Mr. BORLAND. I realize that fact.

Mr. HOWARD. And does the gentleman know of another city in the world, not only in the United States, but in the world, with a population of 331,000, that has a great army of 25,000 people employed in its municipal government to do the very work of which the gentleman speaks in respect to conditions that exist in the city of Washington? I know of my own personal knowledge that these conditions do exist.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have two answers to that. The first answer I made a little while ago was to the effect that these alley slums have produced conditions which it is almost impossible for the health and police departments to cope with, because those conditions accumulate faster——

Mr. HOWARD. Why?

Mr. BORLAND. Because in the formation of these alleys it would take an extraordinary number of men, both in the police and the health departments, to enforce even the plainest regulations.

The second answer I desire to make is that four years ago I served one term on the District Committee. I have since served on the Appropriations Committee. I believe that $14,000,000 to run the District of Columbia is an extortionate and extravagant amount. I believe that we do not get the efficient service out of that $14,000,000 that we ought to get, and I do not propose to justify here or elsewhere the expenditure of the money. I am not in sympathy with the constant cry that goes up from the District that we do not have enough money, and I am going to touch on that point right now.

Mr. HOWARD. From the gentleman's own observation, does he not know that no other great municipality in this country would permit for 10 days the insanitary conditions to exist that exist in the city of Washington?

I know that the great city of Atlanta, which I have the honor to represent in part, has no such condition as I have seen with my own eyes here or that could exist under the watchful eyes of the police and sanitary departments of that city.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I think that is true; but I want to say to the gentleman that the result of my personal investigation convinces me that the alley conditions were such that it was not only almost impossible to cope with it from the health and police standpoint, but it was useless to try to cope with it from a police standpoint. There is no reason for the purpose of preserving a little alley property or the profits of a few alley tenement owners to continue conditions which are almost impossible to provide sufficient money with which to cope.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will permit, I understood the gentleman to say, in his judgment, the alley conditions are worse in this city than they are in other cities of a similar size in the country.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; what I said was this, that it is more widespread and more general; that there are very few cities where the slum district, so called, is so generally diffused and so immediately in touch with the rest of the city as in this city.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the gentleman's observation in regard to the alleys in these slum districts in regard to their being paved or not?

Mr. BORLAND. Most of them are paved, and paved within the last five years.

Mr. WILLIS. That does not obtain in the other large cities of the country.

Mr. BORLAND. No; there are a great many unpaved alleys in the other large cities.

Mr. WILLIS. While I agree entirely with the gentleman that there ought to be some amelioration of these conditions I think that the gentleman's statement that the conditions are worse here than in other large cities is not warranted by the facts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri may be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, I realize the force of what the gentleman from Ohio says. Slum conditions are unfortunately present in every growing municipality; if they were not present, it would not be a growing municipality. I tried to start by prefacing my remarks that it was one of the conditions of growth and increase in wealth and increase in living conditions that took the best of the population out from contact with the slums. Every city has its battles, and they are worse at some times and places than at other times and places, but the industrial conditions that bring them about elsewhere are not present in the city of Washington. The industrial conditions that exist in other cities and with the influx of the foreign population do not exist in Washington. The great railroad and manufacturing suburbs do not exist here, but you have a purely residential section here in which no slums ought to exist at all. Any slums in Washington are bad slums. That is the plain unvarnished truth about it. Now, as to the question of the elimination of these. In my judgment it is a useless expense to undertake to police the conditions we have here. It is a useless expense to try to reclaim this criminal population by juvenile courts, hospitals, and visiting nurses. It is a useless expense to try to maintain proper sanitary regulations that would keep conditions livable and proper in these slums. The cheapest, sanest, and best way in the long run is to eliminate the whole alley slums. It will have to be done. They can be in many cases, I believe, turned into minor streets. To-day the blocks are too large; there is no necessity for having so much waste ground back of these blocks. They can be opened at both ends and filled with a clean, respectable class of tenants.

Mr. WILLIS. I just wondered what is the practical solution. Now, take a typical example—for instance, Snow's Court, which the gentleman has seen. What is the solution of such a situation? What are you going to do about it?

Mr. BORLAND. I was just telling you just now. I understand there is a bill introduced to turn it into a playground, and I think perhaps it is a good thing.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to ask the gentleman would he be willing to vote for a bill to turn that alley into a playground, one-half or one-third of the expense to be paid by the Government?

Mr. BORLAND. What does the gentleman mean to imply when he says one-third of the expense to be paid by the Government?

Mr. MANN. I say, would the gentleman be willing to have his constituents contribute toward relieving the situation in Washington?—my recollection being that the gentleman has always opposed having the Government pay anything toward the maintenance of the playgrounds in the District.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to tell the gentleman exactly how I feel about that. If the District of Columbia were already bearing a burden of taxes greater than the property should bear in order to maintain a city government here, if property in the District of Columbia was being closed out under the hammer, if conditions here were bad and there was a lack of taxable wealth in proportion to the burdens of government that had to be borne, such as exists in other municipalities, it would be the bounden, sworn duty of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself to tax the 90,000,000 American citizens to see that proper conditions were maintained here. If, on the other hand, property in the District of Columbia is higher relatively than in other communities of its size, if it is not overtaxed, if there is an abundance of taxable wealth in the District to meet every civic problem, if its civic problems are less in proportion than the civic problems of other municipalities from which the gentleman and myself come, if it has less problems to deal with and more taxable wealth with which to meet those problems, then it is iniquitous and wrong for us to lay our hands upon the taxable wealth of the people of Chicago or the people of Kansas City to repair the results of the lack of taxation which has gone on in the District of Columbia.

I undertake to say that from two sources of taxation levied upon the wealth of the District of Columbia, which will not reach a single wage earner in the District, I could raise in five years enough money to eliminate every slum and rehouse every slum family in the District of Columbia. I would raise it first by applying the general inheritance-tax law of Missouri, Illinois, and New York to the District of Columbia. I would raise it, second, by taxing the intangible property, the stocks and bonds which now are exempt from taxation by the laws of the District. I did not intend to go into that question, because I am going into it more fully at some other time. But when the gentleman asks me if I would couple with a moral reform a proposition to tax my own people, I have but one answer in the ultimate for that: I will tax my own people and justify myself before them if the problem can not be solved in any other way. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman admits that the Government owns a large amount of property in Washington which, if owned by private individuals, would be subject to taxation, and which is not now subject to taxation. Yet, as I understand, the gentleman's position in the past and in the present—and I ask for information whether that is his position—the gentleman, while he wishes to do away with these horrors which he has described, is not willing to have any part of this expense based upon property of the United States in the District of Columbia, but proposes to have it all paid by private property in the District and by taxation upon that property, notwithstanding the agreement—which is not really an agreement——

Mr. BORLAND. No; it is not a real agreement——

Mr. MANN. But which we refer to as the agreement that the District shall pay half the expense and the Government shall pay half the expense of the maintenance of the District of Columbia and its government.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, I have expressed myself to the House on that subject before, and hope to do so again. The fact that the District of Columbia, away back in 1874 and 1878, went into bankruptcy, and the Government of the United States took it out of bankruptcy and has now made it the wealthiest city per capita in the known world does not constitute any contract any more than if you give a man $10 to keep him from being broke and to help him get home it constitutes a contract that you will give him another $10 to-morrow. There is no moral or legal obligation there, and the gentleman from Illinois will readily admit that there is not even a legal obligation.

Mr. MANN. I think there is a moral obligation, and a legal obligation at present, undoubtedly.

Mr. BORLAND. The fact that the Government of the United States owns a large amount of acreage in the District of Columbia which it does not use in competition with private owners of property is no criterion. The United States Government owns Lafayette Park, pays for the lighting and policing of it, and puts no burden for it upon the District.

The Government does not use the park in sight of the Arlington Hotel for any purpose in competition with property owners, but the fact that the Government owns it makes the hotel site worth a million dollars more than it otherwise would be worth. Nobody does anything on the park that competes with the property owners adjoining, but the existence of the park has made valuable the Arlington site—made it more valuable than any other hotel site in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Government pays for the maintenance of Lafayette Park, without any expense to the District of Columbia?

Mr. BORLAND. Lafayette Park is one of the parks carried by the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. Is it?

Mr. BORLAND. My understanding is that that is so.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that one-half is charged to the District and carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill with the other parks?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but the title is in the United States. When the gentleman from Illinois computes the acreage owned by the United States Government, on which he says it ought to pay taxes in aid of the private owners of property, he computes the acreage of Lafayette Park and he also computes the triangular pieces at Connecticut Avenue, Rhode Island Avenue, and Massachusetts Avenue that are marked plainly United States reservations, and which are only put there to enhance the surrounding property, because the United States makes no use of it in any way that competes with the adjoining property owners.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri confuses what I said with what somebody else has said. I have said nothing about acreage or that the Government ought to pay taxes. The gentleman says that I compute the acreage; I have done nothing of the sort and made no such suggestion.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The Government does own a large number of buildings in the District of Columbia on which it pays no taxes. That is what I said. I have always found, as far as my life goes, that many people are willing to reform somebody else at their expense. My test of the man who is willing to reform is whether he is willing to reform partly at his own expense.

Mr. BORLAND. That has been answered. I have been in this House four years under Republican rule, and served two years under a Republican chairman of the District Committee. I did not see any attempt to reform at anybody's expense while I was on the District Committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought not to bring that indictment against himself.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that the entire amount of taxes paid per $1,000 on property assessed for taxation in this District is not more than half of what it would be for all purposes in the city of Chicago or Kansas City?

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman speak for Kansas City and not for Chicago, because as to that city the statement is not true.

Mr. SIMS. Well, the gentleman from Illinois has challenged the statement.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further, for I think the discussion is wandering far afield. The property question of the District of Columbia deserves consideration at the hands of this House, and I want to promise the gentleman from Illinois that it is going to get it, and it is going to get it during the Sixty-third Congress.

I want to say that if this alley elimination had to be done at the expense of the charitable people who subscribe out of their own pockets it ought to be done, but it would be a disgrace to allow it to be done in that way. If it had to be done at the expense of the people of the United States it ought to be done, but it would be a disgrace to allow it to be done in that way. It ought to be done at the expense of the property owners of the District of Columbia, who have been growing in wealth and in prosperity by reason of the presence of the Federal Government and the increase of value of property here on that account.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOBECK. Is it not a fact that every alley that was cleaned up would immediately benefit the adjoining property owners?

Mr. BORLAND. There is no doubt about it; I was about to touch upon that point.

Mr. LOBECK. That was the effect when you cleaned up Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. It was done by condemnation, and the cost was assessed on a benefit district. Now, we have a law in this District, passed in 1906, that gives them the right to open alleys and turn them into minor streets, but it provides that all the damages must be assessed against the four abutting blocks; it makes an arbitrary benefit district.

That will not work in the District of Columbia, unfortunately, and for this reason: Each one of the four abutting blocks is very apt to, and in most cases does, have an alley problem of its own and it is not in a position to bear any of the burdens of eliminating any of the conditions of some other block. In fact, the Supreme Court has thrown some doubt on the legality of that kind of procedure. There must be a law providing for the opening of these alleys and turning them into minor streets, providing for the assessment of the benefits on the benefit district as far as the jury can assess them, and the balance, if any, upon the general fund of the District. I am not now going to go into the constitution of that general fund. I think we ought to provide an honest means for the apportionment of the general fund, but it must be assessed against the general fund as between the general fund and the benefit district, and that is the only way in which these alleys can be opened up legally and with any possible effect.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] has well pointed out, the benefits accruing to the property abutting on the street and backing up on these noisome and crime-breeding alleys are greater than would appear at first glance. The jury would go down and look at a piece of property, a little frame or brick dwelling of six or seven rooms, occupied by a modest family, paying $17.50 a month rent, and they would say that that piece of property could not bear many benefits; that you could not put much benefit on that without confiscating it. The reverse of that is true, however. The proper view of the matter is that that property rents for $17.50 a month or $20 a month, because of that noisome alley, because that makes it undesirable, and only people of very modest purse are compelled to live in that class of property. If you were to eliminate that alley you would immediately raise the rental value of that little piece of property $5 or $10 a month, and then you would have a new basis on which to compute the benefits that would absorb the damages caused by the opening of the alley.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think his proposition would raise the rent to such an extent that the people who live in those cheap houses would have to get out because they could not pay the increased rent? Would not the gentleman then create a new condition in that respect?

Mr. BORLAND. Not necessarily. I think that there is so much of that property that the natural laws of competition would regulate that. It could not raise it beyond what the rent-paying power of the ordinary tenant would be.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman recognizes the fact that $5 a month to a workingman is a considerable amount.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course.

Mr. KAHN. And when you increase his rent $5 a month there is a question whether he can stand the raise, and if he can not stand it, where are you going to put him?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has introduced a bill to turn Snow Court into a public playground and park. Does he think he is going to raise out of all proportion the rent of the property about there so that no self-respecting white man can live there?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course not; and neither do I think that.

Mr. KAHN. On the contrary, I contend that the abutting property should pay some of the benefits; that the District of Columbia should pay some of the benefits; and that the Government of the United States should pay some of the benefits. But the gentleman's proposition is to have the property pay all of the benefits.

Mr. BORLAND. No; the gentleman has evidently misunderstood me. I stated expressly that from a personal inspection of the matter I was convinced that it was impossible to provide a benefit district that could carry all of the damages that would be caused by the opening of the alleys, and that there must be a residue charged against the general fund of the District, however that general fund might be constituted. I do not think the gentleman and I disagree on that proposition There is going to be a residue of expense that is not absorbed by the benefits in the benefit district.

Mr. KAHN. I disagree with the gentleman so far as the proportion to be paid by the General Government is concerned.

Mr. BORLAND. I have not spoken of any proportion. I have spoken of the jury assessing all of the benefits they found, levying the unassessed benefits against the general fund, and that, I believe the gentleman will agree, is the only practical solution of the alley problem.

Mr. KAHN. I understood the gentleman to say the fund of the District.

Mr. BORLAND. I said the general fund however constituted; I did not go to the question of how it was constituted. I differ with the gentleman on other things, but he and I seem to agree on this alley proposition. When we come to the general fund we will fight it out when we come to it, but on this alley proposition I am glad to find that we are in substantial agreement.

These alleys, then, must be eliminated. They ought to be eliminated and turned into these minor streets, and the rehousing of these people ought to go on just as fast as possible. Why, it does not make any difference what the cost is. From a practical standpoint we can dispose of these details, of course. We know where to put them. Every man here has had more or less experience as to where they ought to fall and could fall with no great hardship. The greatest cost we are paying is in the cost of human lives, the cost of wrecked hopes, the cost of blighted careers, the cost of deformed, imbecile, invalid, and crippled children, the cost of ignorance and vice and crime that permeates the whole community, and that cost is heavier than the cost of dollars and cents. There is no cost so heavy as the cost of vice, as the cost of ill health, as the cost of ignorance and of crime. It is the heaviest cost that any community in the world bears. The greatest asset that a nation or a city has is its men. The greatest crop that the Nation raises is a crop of sound, healthy children, and if it does not raise that crop it does not make any difference how many splendid palaces or Greek temples adorn its capital. It must raise a crop of men, of honest, self-respecting toilers, of men of intelligence, of men of moral backbone, of men of physical courage and nerve to solve the great problems, men to grow under an advancing civilization step by step, men to bless the community in which they live.

Why, we want men who will be a blessing to the community that has given them birth; we want men who will advance the great standard of civilization and plant it higher and higher upon the ramparts of free government. We want men not criminals and not imbeciles, not cripples and not ignoramuses, but men of intelligence and skill; moral, strong men who can live under the great Stars and Stripes and live in the Nation's Capital. There is a story in the old classic days that when the purse-proud Roman matron went to the mother of the Gracchi and boasted of her jewels, that simple wife and mother of soldiers, who had an humble plain home and spun her own clothing, went to the courtyard, called to her lusty boys, gathered her arms about them and said, "These are my jewels." [Applause.] So the great American Nation can gather its arms about the honest self-respecting workingman, the man wherever he lives and however he works, who tries to earn a living to take home to his family on Saturday night, it can gather these men into its arms and say to all the nations of the world, "These are America's jewels." [Loud applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Thursday, May 29, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint and concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Cornelius Roach, secretary of state of the State of Missouri and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the following pages contain a full, true, and complete copy of a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri entitled "Joint and concurrent resolution asking Congress to call a constitutional convention or to submit to the several States, through a congressional joint resolution, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States correcting the manner in which the constitutionality of State enactments shall be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States," and that the journals of the proceedings of the house and senate of the forty-seventh general assembly show that said joint resolution was adopted.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson this 15th day of April, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] CORNELIUS ROACH,
Secretary of State.

House joint and concurrent resolution 23, Forty-seventh General Assembly.

Joint and concurrent resolution asking Congress to call a constitutional convention or to submit to the several States, through a congressional joint resolution, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States correcting the manner in which the constitutionality of State enactments shall be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Whereas a single judge of an inferior Federal court has time after time nullified and amended the solemn enactments of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Missouri and of other States of this Union, and has even destroyed provisions of the constitutions of the States made after the most deliberate thought and study in convention or by the sober verdict of the whole people; and

Whereas this manner of destroying and amending the deliberate enactments of a sovereign State has no specific warrant in the Federal Constitution, and is not in keeping with the dignity of this State or of any other State of this Union; and

Whereas it is not in keeping with the spirit of free institutions that the ruling of an inferior Federal court shall nullify the deliberate acts of the people of a whole State: and

That in order to correct these evils an amendment to the Federal Constitution, to be known as Article XVII, be proposed to the several States for their ratification or rejection, to wit:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein) as follows: That we apply to the Congress of the United States and respectfully ask that an amendment to the Federal Constitution to correct these evils be proposed to the several States for their ratification, to wit:

To the Congress of the United States:

In pursuance of the rights reserved to themselves by the sovereign States of this Union, we, the representatives of the State of Missouri, regularly met in general assembly, do hereby apply to you and respectfully ask that you either call a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing to the several States of the Union the amendment to the Federal Constitution given below, or that you propose to the several States for their ratification, according to Article V of the Constitution of the United States, said amendment, to wit:

"ART. XVII. No inferior Federal court shall have jurisdiction over questions involving the constitutionality or the validity of any State law; but a law of any State, when called in question as violating the Constitution of the United States or as conflicting with any Federal statute, shall be certified immediately to the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall be given precedence over all other business before said court. No Federal court shall issue any writ of injunction restraining the execution of any State law, and no appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States involving the validity or the constitutionality of the law of any State shall operate as a supersedeas. Every question involving the rights of a State or the validity or constitutionality of a State law shall be decided by the concurring opinion of every member of the Supreme Court."

And be it further resolved, That every State in the Union be respectfully requested to join with us in this memorial to Congress, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the governor and secretary of state of each State and to such general assemblies of States as are now in session and to all other general assemblies of States as soon as they shall convene, and that copies be sent to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 13, as amended by the senate.

Whereas certain lands located in the Big Pasture, Wood Reserve, and other pastures allied therewith and located in Comanche, Tillman, Kiowa, Caddo, and Stephens Counties, in southern Oklahoma, were thrown open to settlement in 1906 under the homestead laws;

Whereas the settlers on said lands were compelled to purchase the same at an auction sale to the highest bidder;

Whereas the purchasers were required to comply with all the conditions of the homestead laws; and

Whereas we believe that it is an injustice to the purchasers of these lands to be required to pay for the same at the prices at which they were purchased, which in most cases were more than the full value of the land, and at the same time be compelled to homestead the same and comply with all the requirements of the homestead laws: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the Senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby petitioned and earnestly requested to permit the settlers and purchasers of said land to perfect and secure title by paying the Government therefor the minimum price of $5 per acre; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each of the Representatives and Senators from the State of Oklahoma.

Passed the house this 23d day of April, 1913.

J. H. MAXEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Passed the senate this 29th day of April, 1913.

C. B. KENDRICK,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the Territorial Legislature of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas it is desirable that annual sessions of the legislature be had, each session to be limited to 60 and 30 days' duration, one session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of measures in general (60 days), while the other session be devoted to the consideration of financial measures and appropriation bills (30 days), and that the present compensation of $10 per diem to the legislators be continued: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to amend the organic act of this Territory so as to accomplish this desired object, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Delegate to Congress from this Territory; and be it further

Resolved, That the Delegate to Congress be requested to prepare and advocate in Congress appropriate legislation to accomplish this desired object.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, April 30, 1913.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was this day adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii.

H. L. HOLSTEIN,
Speaker House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. BRYAN presented a resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners of Duval County, Fla., favoring an appropriation to reimburse that county for money expended in the improvement of the St. Johns River, Fla., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have received a communication from the Board of County Commissioners of Duval County, Fla., transmitting a certified copy of a resolution, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the communication and accompanying paper was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF DUVAL COUNTY,
Jacksonville, Fla., May 24, 1913.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As directed by the board of county commissioners, in session this day, I am inclosing herein certified copy of a resolution, which was unanimously adopted.

Yours, very truly, FRANK BROWN, Clerk.

Whereas the county of Duval, in the year A. D. 1893, issued bonds in the sum of $300,000, the proceeds of which were used in the deepening of the St. Johns River; and

Whereas the said bonds are still outstanding and unpaid, and an obligation upon which said county of Duval has since the date of issuance been paying interest; and

Whereas the improvement of navigable streams is within the jurisdiction of and an obligation upon the United States Government for which appropriations are made from time to time by Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Duval, State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to reimburse the said county of Duval for the money expended, as aforesaid, upon the improvement of the St. Johns River, a navigable stream of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of Florida's United States Senators and Congressmen with the request that they urge action thereon.

I, Frank Brown, clerk of the board of county commissioners, Duval County, Fla., do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a resolution which was unanimously adopted at a meeting of said board, held at their office in the courthouse, city of Jacksonville, Fla., on Saturday, May 24, 1913.

Witness my hand and seal of office this 26th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] FRANK BROWN,
Clerk Board of County Commissioners, Duval County, Fla.

Mr. WORKS. I present the memorial of Alfred Wellington Jones, remonstrating against the reduction of the tariff on sugar. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUGAR BEET TALKS.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Although I am attending strictly to business, producing sugar from sun and atmosphere, I have to say to Uncle Sam, "Protect me, and I will do you good; on the other hand, break down my industry, letting in tropical sugars, and calamity will follow."

My history in America has been like the "toad-getting-out-of-the-well" sum in arithmetic of schoolboy days—I have been enabled to make progress in the daylight of Republican politics, but fell back in the night of Democratic free-trade propaganda while being played into the hands of Wall Street cane refiners. The result is I am about 75 years behind the times in "crawfish progressive" America.

It was different in truly progressive Europe, where the first Napoleon, 100 years ago, had the sagacity to see the economic value of producing from home soil in France the nation's sugar.

In this connection he saw, as in a vision, conservation of resources and soil fertility as well.

Statistics show that food production in the United States is not keeping pace with the increase of population, hence the principal reason for the high cost of living. Neither is this condition peculiar to the United States.

The money sent abroad for sugar alone, not to mention other foodstuffs, judiciously laid out in rotation of crops would so increase the fertility of our soils as to make us practically independent of other nations in that regard.

The raising of sugar beets brings about many advantages—first, beet sugar is distinctively first, last, and all the time a labor crop, and some of the benefits to our farmers are:

Beets find a sure market; require little capital to raise them—wealth mined from soil; the poor man's crop, the factory making cash advances while growing; assured price before planting; whole family employed; for owner of land, rotation improves it; other farmers find market for other crops which they raise, sold to growers; intensive cultivation; beets the best resistant crop on alkali soils; by-products valuable as fodder and fertilizer; beets the best conservator of the soil under rotation of any crop.

Development benefits all American consumers, because, being a labor crop, money is put in circulation in immediate vicinity. Although sugar is the cheapest food product of equal sustaining quality, eventually sugar will be cheaper to the consumer when all produced at home, as it already is cheaper than it would be were it not for the beet sugar now produced.

Why the tariff should not be reduced: Tariff should foster a labor crop; tariff should protect the farmer from tropical planters; tariff should keep $100,000,000 at home by producing with American labor all the sugar we, as a Nation, consume; tariff should remain to protect vested interests, both North and South; tariff should remain to permit the white man to produce white sugar with labor paid a white man's wages in a white man's country; tariff should remain, for free trade in sugar will, as sure as thunder sours milk, blight our beet-sugar industry, besides wiping out the Treasury surplus.

Who will suffer? Directly and indirectly all of our 100,000,000 people.

ALFRED WELLINGTON JONES.

Mr. WORKS presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Pasadena, Cal., praying for the enactment of sound banking and currency laws, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WEEKS presented a petition of the Frank Ferdinand Co., of Boston, Mass., praying for the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal act exempting American coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1604) granting a pension to Henry Hatch, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1591) granting a pension to George R. W. Battis, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1590) granting an increase of pension to Lewis G. Whiting, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1585) granting a pension to Julia N. Jewett, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1581) granting a pension to Rebecca J. Manning, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1582) granting a pension to Sarah M. Stone, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mary Kehoe, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of F. H. McNett, of Aurora, Ill., and the petition of Josiah Bellows, of Washington, D. C., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to adopt Senate joint resolution 131 and H. R. 16808, introduced during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Whereas the following resolution, S. J. Res. No. 131, was introduced in the United States Senate during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress by Senator LA FOLLETTE:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"The Congress, whenever a majority of both Houses shall deem it necessary, or on application of 10 States, by resolution adopted in each of the legislatures thereof or by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, to be submitted in each of the several States to the electors qualified to vote for the election of Representatives; and the vote shall be taken at the next ensuing election of Representatives, in such manner as the Congress prescribes. And if in a majority of the States a majority of the electors voting approve the proposed amendments, and if a majority of all the electors voting also approve the proposed amendments, they shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution," and

Whereas the following bill, H. R. No. 16808, was introduced in the House of Representatives during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress by Congressman LENROOT:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 237 of 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States and the decision against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States. The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ," and

Whereas the welfare of the people of this Nation will be promoted by the adoption and enactment of said resolution and said bill: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature memorialize Congress to adopt said resolution S. J. Res. 131 and said bill H. R. 16808; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted by the secretary of state to the presiding officers of the respective Houses of Congress and to the United States Senators and Congressmen from this State.

MERLIN HULL,
Speaker of the Assembly.
THOMAS MORRIS,
President of the Senate.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
F. M. WYLIE,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
THE STATE OF WISCONSIN,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, J. S. Donald, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of joint resolution No. 63–A has been compared by me with the original enrolled act on file in this department, and that the same is a true copy thereof, and of the whole of such original enrolled act.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 20th day of May, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.]

J. S. DONALD,
Secretary of State.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to enact a law setting aside certain islands in the Great Lakes for the purpose of establishing thereon bird reserves.

Whereas the people of the North Central States, particularly the States bordering on the Great Lakes, desire and deem it necessary that there be extended further protection to bird life in said States; and

Whereas the wild lands in said States are rapidly becoming settled and the former unoccupied lands in said States are rapidly becoming occupied and devoted to agricultural, industrial, and other pursuits; and

Whereas there are at the present time a great number of unclaimed and unoccupied islands and reefs in the Great Lakes which will soon be occupied and settled, and which would afford appropriate and ideal places for bird reserves: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to enact a law or laws setting aside such unoccupied or unclaimed islands in the Great Lakes which have not been already set aside by Congress, for the purpose of establishing thereon bird reserves, and turning over to the respective States the islands in said lakes whenever such States are ready to take over such islands and improve and care for them for the purposes herein named: Be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Chief Clerks of the two Houses of Congress and to the United States Senators and Congressmen from Wisconsin.

MERLIN HULL,
Speaker of the Assembly.
H. C. MARTIN,
President of the Senate.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
L. M. WYLIE,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Richard Olney, Charles W. Eliot, A. Lawrence Lowell, Moorfield Storey, Samuel J. Elder, John D. Long, Henry L. Higginson, and 19 other citizens of Boston, Mass., praying for the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal act exempting American coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of the Cigar Makers' International Union, of Jacksonville, Fla., remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE PARADE.

Mr. JONES. On behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia I desire to submit a report, pursuant to Senate resolution 499, relating to the woman's suffrage parade of March 3, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Washington what shall be done with the report?

Mr. JONES. I suppose it should be printed. There is no legislation pending in reference to it. It is a report made to the Senate on a subject referred to the committee. I move that the report (No. 53) be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 40) appropriating funds to pay expense of delegates to conference of landowners and water users, under the several reclamation projects; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

REORGANIZATION OF CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to offer a bill. Before sending it to the Secretary's desk I wish to make a brief statement. It has to do with an order issued by President Taft on the 4th of March of this year to reorganize the customs service. That order was issued in pursuance of a provision which found its way into the sundry civil appropriation act, passed August 24, 1912. The provision is as follows:

> The President is authorized to reorganize the customs service and cause estimates to be submitted therefor on account of the fiscal year 1914, bringing the total cost of said service for said fiscal year within a sum not exceeding $10,150,000 instead of $10,500,000, the amount authorized to be expended therefor on account of the current fiscal year 1912; in making such reorganization and reduction in expenses he is authorized to abolish or consolidate collection districts, ports, and subports of entry and delivery, to discontinue needless offices and employments, to reduce excessive rates of compensation below amounts fixed by law or Executive order, and to do all such other and further things that in his judgment may be necessary to make such organization effective and within the limit of cost herein fixed; such reorganization shall be communicated to Congress at its next regular session and shall constitute for the fiscal year 1914 and until otherwise provided by Congress the permanent organization of the customs service.

The order authorized by this general legislation upon an appropriation bill came into the Senate, as a matter of fact, after the term of office of President Taft had expired by limitation of law. Of course that does not make any difference, because the courts, if that were all that was the trouble, would hold as conclusively binding the Journal of the Senate.

I desire to make the statement upon the introduction of this bill, because it is my purpose to request that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, instead of the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Commerce or some other committee to which it would more naturally go. My reason for making that request is because it seems to me it is very doubtful if this order is valid, and for two reasons. In the first place, the provision of the law places a condition upon the President in executing the order. The condition was that the total cost of the customs service should not exceed $10,150,000. The statement attached to the President's order shows upon its face that the total cost will be $10,381,000. So the first proposition is that the order did not bring itself within the provisions that authorized it.

Another—a relatively small question—is that whereas the provision that Congress enacted authorized the President to consolidate collection districts, the order issued by the President authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint deputy collectors and to fix their salaries. I do not undertake to say, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Treasury may not be authorized to do that. I know that under the constitutional provision lesser officers may be appointed by the courts, by the President alone, or by heads of departments, and that it is competent for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue such an order fixing salaries and appointing deputy collectors. But Congress did not provide in this law that the President should redelegate the power given to him to his Secretary of the Treasury.

Beyond all that, Mr. President, I ask that the bill may go to the Committee on the Judiciary, because it seems to me to violate section 1 of Article II of the Constitution, which places the legislative power in Congress. In other words, it occurs to me that this is a delegation of legislative power under the decisions of the Supreme Court and under the rules uniformly laid down by the Supreme Court.

I am aware that the court goes as far as it can to uphold an act of the legislature, especially as to the ascertainment of facts, for carrying out the purposes of Congress. I think nowhere in the books can the statement of the limitation or of the power of Congress to delegate legislative power be found more clearly laid down than in the decision of Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649, text 693), in which the Supreme Court quotes from the Supreme Court of Ohio, as follows:

The true distinction—

as Judge Ranney, speaking for the Supreme Court of Ohio, has well said—is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

The question therefore arises: Has Congress by this provision made the law and only left to the President the ascertainment of a fact upon the determination of which the law goes into effect? Not at all. The President may or he may not make that order. He may or he may not abolish districts. He may or he may not consolidate districts. He may in some instances abolish some districts established by Congress, some of them for a hundred years, and leave others as they are to-day; yet the President has not undertaken to do anything more himself than to create the districts, appoint the collectors of the districts, and then redelegate the power, if he ever had that power, to the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries and to appoint the deputy collectors who are to have charge of many of the ports. Neither has he come within the limit of cost. The purpose of the act is perfectly evident. In 1912 the cost of the customs service was $10,500,000. In 1913 this act was passed; and it provided that if the President could save $350,000 of the amount of $10,500,000 expended in 1912, he might make the order. The President does not undertake in his message to Congress to state that he had done that thing. He says:

Whereas,

* * * * * * *

I was authorized to reorganize the customs service and cause estimates to be submitted therefor on account of the fiscal year 1914, reducing the total cost of said service for said fiscal year by an amount not less than $350,000.

That is true; but he was not authorized to issue his order unless he brought it within the maximum amount specified in the act itself.

Mr. President, my State is quite largely interested in this order. From one end of Florida to the other is 900 miles. There are two ports in that State that collect customs amounting to nearly $3,000,000 annually, at neither one of which will there be a collector. I am not complaining that by this order collectors of small ports are legislated out of office by the President, and not by Congress, for the purpose of trying to get them back into office, but in the city of Tampa, where are collected nearly $2,000,000 of revenue, a deputy collector will be in charge and his superior officer will be more than 200 miles away. Key West, where there are nearly a million dollars collected, will be in charge of a deputy collector, with his principal over 500 miles away.

I do not complain, however, if an officer qualified and authorized to act for the collector can be in charge of those ports, but it is a very serious matter, if this order is ineffective, that great ports shall be turned over to a person designated by the Secretary of the Treasury who has no legal existence.

The question has been asked of me, Who could object; how could the question be raised? Well, Mr. President, it seems to me the question is, How could it help from being raised? Is it possible that collectors of customs at all the ports in this country, if this order is invalid, are going to lay down their offices and walk out because a man comes and demands the office who has no legal right or power to demand it?

Again, many forms of statements must be filed with the collectors of these ports. They are required to be made under oath. If this order is invalid, no prosecution or punishment could follow the false making of a single one of those affidavits.

The collector of a port is given very large power, and necessarily so, in the administration of the tariff laws of the country; but if a man who has no legal authority undertakes to exercise it, I can not understand how we can expect his assumed authority will not be questioned.

Therefore, Mr. President, it has occurred to me that if President Taft's order is wise, if it should be carried into effect—and I understand the present Secretary of the Treasury is in favor of that—it is the duty of Congress to make it valid by itself enacting the legislation, and not to leave this matter to be determined upon an Executive order. If action is to be taken, it must be done before the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to ask a question for information. I understand the provision to which the Senator from Florida refers is in the appropriation act of 1912.

Mr. BRYAN. It is in the sundry civil act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. OVERMAN. In pursuance of that provision there was, as I understand, a reorganization. Does not the sundry civil act for the year beginning July 1, 1913, recognize that reorganization and make appropriation in accordance with the reorganization? That is the point as to which I wanted to ask the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not sure about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it does, does not that really, in effect, enact it into law? That is the point I wish to hear the Senator on.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think so, Mr. President. I think the mere fact that Congress legislated to carry into effect an invalid provision of the law would not make the provision itself valid.

The bill I have proposed to introduce, Mr. President, is exactly the order the President issued, with the single exception that in my State, where he created only one district, I propose for the four large ports of the State to create a district for each; and I thought it was worth while and of sufficient importance, to call the matter to the attention of the Senate, and to ask that the bill may go to the Committee on the Judiciary for them to consider these legal questions; so that we may know whether the order is valid or not; and, if not valid, that it may be corrected before it is too late.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to another provision in which this Executive order may violate the Constitution of the United States. He has stated the difficulty with the ports of his own State. In the case of Delaware the customs district has been entirely abolished and all of our ports have been placed in the district of Philadelphia. The provision of the Constitution of the United States to which I desire to refer the Senator is in the ninth section of Article I, which reads as follows:

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

Mr. President, the ports of the State which I have the honor in part to represent have been open to the commerce of the world and the commerce of the world has come to those ports for a period of 125 years. Those ports have been operated and open under the supervision of the citizens of that State. The Executive order of the President has, I think, given preference to the port of Philadelphia and the ports of Pennsylvania over those of the State of Delaware by making us entirely subordinate to the collector or the proposed collector of that district, who will take charge on the 1st of July.

I am extremely glad that the Senator from Florida has called the attention of the Senate to this very serious matter, and I sincerely hope that the reference to the committee which he has asked for will be made. I shall be glad to appear with the Senator before the Judiciary Committee and to advocate a favorable report on that bill, including a provision which will maintain in their integrity the customs districts in each and every State of this Union, so that the Constitution may not possibly be infringed on that point. I am surprised that the matter has come up so early. I had intended to prepare, and have been preparing, a brief on this subject, which I hope at some time to submit to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. I will appreciate very much the assistance of the Senator.

I now introduce the bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2392) to reorganize the customs service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSING COMMISSION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WORKS. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) providing for a housing commission, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a commission of five persons, three women and two men, who shall serve without compensation, to devise plans and the means of caring for and housing the indigent, improvident, and needy population of the District of Columbia, to be known as the housing commission.

It shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and report to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress with his own views thereon and any suggestions he may desire to make, the following:

First. A suitable location for a sufficient number of model sanitary houses for the accommodation of such persons as should be cared for under the direction of the National Government.

Second. The kind and probable cost of such suitable houses as may be needed for the proper housing and care of such persons.

Third. The best means of renting or otherwise providing such houses for persons able to make compensation therefor.

Fourth. The best and most practicable way of policing, superintending, and securing proper care and sanitation of such houses and the grounds provided for their construction and of improving the moral and sanitary conditions of the people so provided for.

Fifth. Any other data or facts that the commission may desire to submit and suggestions it may desire to make as to the kind of legislation needed to carry out such plan as it may report for the better housing and care of such persons.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, earnest efforts are now being made to eliminate the inhabited alleys and slums in the city of Washington. With that effort I am in entire sympathy; but when we have done that our work is only half done. The National Government is doing this by condemning the land in such places and converting the property into public parks. The practical effect of it is to forcibly eject the tenants living in these places from their homes. There is no provision made for them anywhere else; they will have to find the best places they can, and rents in the city of Washington are so exorbitant that these people, with the means they have, can not rent suitable and sanitary homes. As the Government has deprived them of the homes they have and turned them out of doors, it should provide some means by which they can be housed. This should not be done as a matter of charity, but the Government should provide cheap and sanitary homes for people of this class, where property can be rented to them and afterwards cared for and kept sanitary and clean.

Some charitable and public-spirited citizens of Washington are doing what they can to meet this problem, but I think it is a matter that should be dealt with by the Government. I have for that reason introduced the joint resolution, which involves no expense to the Government, but simply provides for the appointment of a commission to act without compensation and to ascertain the facts and make suggestions as to the best way to provide for this class of people. I take it for granted that there are generous and interested people in Washington who will be glad to serve upon this commission to bring about that result.

Mr. President, my solicitude for the inhabitants of the city of Washington is not confined to what we are pleased to call the "lower class." There are a good many of the rich and well to do who are living in insanitary houses in this city at the present time. We have rows and rows of what are known as attached houses. They sometimes extend the full front of a square, and, I think in some places, they entirely encircle the square. There is no means of ventilating these dwelling houses except from the front to the rear. There are thousands of rooms in houses of that kind in this city that are never touched by a ray of sunshine and that are only ventilated by the passage of the air through some other rooms to reach them, and often it is the kitchen.

The Government never should have allowed the construction of such houses. It should be a criminal offense to erect, maintain, sell, or rent houses of that kind. No man should be willing to live in one of them and bring up his children. Every family in the city of Washington should have free light and sunshine on all sides of the house, and should have at least a small plot of ground. Of course, the Government can not condemn all of these houses and destroy them as it does in the case of the poorer classes, but it can prevent the construction of any more of them; and that this may be done, Mr. President, I am going to offer a bill dealing with that phase of the housing question. I ask to have the bill printed in the RECORD. It is very short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from California inform the Chair what disposition he desires made of the joint resolution?

Mr. WORKS. I would be glad to have it taken up if I can have unanimous consent to do so at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent——

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is about to object, and I ask to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply wanted to say that I think all bills and joint resolutions ought to first go to committees. The Senator is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think the joint resolution had better be referred to that committee.

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection, if the Senator prefers that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. I ask that the bill now introduced by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2397) to provide for the construction and location of dwelling houses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to construct or maintain in the District of Columbia any dwelling house or other place of abode nearer than 6 feet of any other such house or abode, or to construct or maintain any number of dwelling houses connected or attached together, commonly known as attached houses, or to construct or maintain any apartment house nearer than 20 feet of any other dwelling house or other place of abode, and no house or building of any kind, to be used as a dwelling place, shall be constructed or maintained nearer than 15 feet of the inside line of the sidewalk fronting the lot upon which it is constructed: Provided, That this act shall not apply to buildings already constructed.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall construct or maintain any house or other building in violation of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and every day that such house or building is maintained in violation of this act shall be a separate and distinct offense.

SEC. 3. That it is hereby made the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to see that this law is enforced.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURTON presented two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

LUCY ST. JOHN TATE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 96), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Lucy St. John Tate, sister of William W. St. John, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Coast Defenses of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 97), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same are hereby, authorized, during the Sixty-third Congress, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, and to employ such assistants as may be required to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that such committee or subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate or during the vacation of the Senate at any place in the United States.

POSTMASTER AT SALEM, OHIO.

Mr. BURTON. I submit a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 94) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested and directed—

1. To transmit to the Senate all papers relating to the appointment of a postmaster at Salem, Ohio.

2. To investigate and inform the Senate whether such postmaster was recommended under an agreement that, if appointed, he would, as a condition of such appointment, publish a Democratic newspaper.

3. To inform the Senate whether it is the policy of the department that postmasters shall devote the whole of their time to the duties of their office; and if so, whether such condition was imposed in the case of this office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not rise to object, Mr. President, but to ask that the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I will object, and ask that the resolution go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

VALORIZATION OF COFFEE.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution (S. Res. 95) was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 21st day of April, 1913, the Senate passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

"First. Copies of any and all requests asking for the dismissal of the case of the United States of America, petitioner, against Herman Sielcken and others, defendants, heretofore pending in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

"Second. Copies of any and all agreements that were made by the parties to said action during its pendency providing for its discontinuance or its dismissal.

"Third. Copies of any and all correspondence regarding the maintenance or dismissal of said action.

"Fourth. Copies of any and all reports that were made by any agent or special attorney of the Government investigating the existence of any trust or combination in coffee or any scheme or plan for the valorization of coffee.

"Fifth. The names and addresses of the parties purchasing the coffee involved in said suit, together with the price and the amount purchased by each.

"Sixth. Copies of any memoranda, correspondence, letters, or documents on file in the Department of Justice pertaining to or connected with the settlement and dismissal of said action.

"Seventh. Any additional statement that he may desire to make touching any of the above matters;" and

Whereas the Attorney General in his response to said resolution entirely ignored the fifth paragraph thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the names of the persons and parties purchasing said coffee involved in said suit, together with the prices and the amount purchased by each; and be it further

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what assurances have been given him of the alleged sale of said coffee, by whom such assurances were given, and if such assurances were given in writing, then to send to the Senate copies thereof.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on the resolution proper, I think I ought briefly to explain to the Senate one of the reasons why I think it necessary that the resolution should be passed.

At the time of the passage of the other resolution, which, I think, was on the 21st day of April, I supposed—and I think it was generally believed—that the suit involving this valorized coffee had been dismissed. It was on the 16th day of April, I think, that the Attorney General issued a public statement that I understood to mean—and I think was generally taken to mean—that the suit had been dismissed. However, I learned just recently that, as a matter of fact, the suit had not been dismissed, and the motion to dismiss it was not filed in court until last Tuesday. The New York Sun of Wednesday, May 28, prints the following statement of what occurred at the presentation of the motion:

Assistant District Attorney Guiler, in asking for a dismissal of the suit, yesterday said that since the institution of the proceeding the Brazilian Government has taken up the matter with the United States through the proper channels in Washington, and as a result an agreement was reached whereby the coffee was sold. The sales were to more than 70 bona fide purchasers, located in several States.

As has been called to the attention of the Senate, the Attorney General, on the 16th of April, made a statement that the coffee had been sold; but nowhere did it ever appear, and nowhere was I ever able to obtain any evidence as to the bona fides of the sale—the names of the purchasers, the amount that each one purchased, or the price paid for the coffee that he bought.

It has occurred to me that possibly since the passage of that resolution and since my remarks the other day in the Senate upon the subject the Attorney General may have secured additional information. In responding to the resolution which was passed on the 21st of April, the Attorney General entirely ignored this particular paragraph of the resolution, and did not give to the Senate any facts as to the names of the purchasers or the price of the coffee or how and when it had been sold. If he has obtained the information since, or if through any neglect or failure he failed to report before the facts in his possession, then he should do so now, in order to determine, if possible, whether or not there had been a bona fide sale of the coffee in dispute in that suit.

In my mind, at least, there is no doubt; and I do not see how there can be any doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that if there was a bona fide sale according to the agreement the names of the purchasers ought to be known to the public, the price they paid ought to be known, and the amount that each purchaser bought at the sale ought to be known. If those things are all secret, I do not see how it can be claimed that it was a bona fide sale; and if it was not a bona fide sale, then the Attorney General was under no obligation, under the agreement, to dismiss the suit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CANADIAN WOOLEN INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 49).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here a short history, taken from the Daily Trade Record, showing the effect of the tariff upon the Canadian woolen industry. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not understand what the Senator said the article was taken from.

Mr. SMOOT. The article is from the Daily Trade Record, a paper published in New York City. A member of the staff of that paper visited Canada and gathered the history of the Canadian woolen industry from the time the Canadian tariff was changed in 1898 up to the present time, and this simply gives the history of that matter.

Mr. REED. It is merely a newspaper article?

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I stated.

Mr. REED. I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BAUER & CO. V. JAMES O'DONNELL (S. DOC. NO. 47).

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to ask to have the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bauer & Co. (chemical company) against James O'Donnell, for which there have been numerous calls, printed as a public document, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room. It is the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the patent case. There is a large demand for it, and I think it ought to be printed as a document. I send the order to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Bauer & Co. v. James O'Donnell (No. 951, October term, 1912), decided May 26, 1913, be printed as a document, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

TARIFF ON LIVE STOCK AND MEATS (S. DOC. NO. 48).

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here a statement signed by the officials of the American National Live Stock Association, the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, the National Wool Growers' Association, representatives of the Utah stock raisers, and the Cottonseed Crushers' Association of Texas, setting forth the reasons prompting these associations to request the adoption of an amendment to the pending tariff bill making the meat-inpection laws of the United States applicable to imported meats. Attached to the statement is a copy of the proposed amendment.

I have not studied the subject myself; I am not familiar with its merits; but it is one of such importance that at their request I desire to ask that this statement, with the amendment, be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. KENYON. I have received a number of letters in the form of petitions or resolutions from various lodges and labor organizations in the State of Iowa. I think I shall ask to have one of them inserted in the RECORD, and I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
JULIEN LODGE, NO. 379,
Dubuque, Iowa, May 19, 1913.

Hon. W. S. KENYON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reading from the columns of the daily press in the past, we noticed comment about the present tariff revision and threats in the event that the tariff reduction would become a law that the wages would be forced downward. As we heartily agree to the tariff legislation as a means to lower the cost of living, the undersigned committee on legislation, for our organization and for the welfare of labor in general, unanimously indorse the proposed method of the President of the United States and Secretary Redfield, of the Department of Commerce, of investigating such wage reductions.

Very respectfully,

[SEAL.] PETER R. MARTIN,
[SEAL.] OTTO WELLMAN,
Committee on Legislation.

TARIFF DUTY ON SUGAR.

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to give notice that on June 2, at the close of the morning hour, I shall address the Senate on the pending tariff bill, with special reference to the interests of the Sugar Trust and the refiners in destroying the domestic sugar industry.

COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY (S. DOC. NO. 50).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of May 26, 1913, requesting the President "to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, a copy of the report submitted to him on March 25, 1913, by the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency on the apportionment of appointments made from the registers of the Civil Service Commission of the apportioned service at Washington," I transmit herewith a copy of the said report.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 29, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and printed.

Mr. SMOOT. The message of the President transmitting the information was ordered to be printed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make an inquiry in regard to that, as applying not only to this but to similar communications. I make the inquiry now, because I am particularly interested in the report, and I wish to have an opportunity to examine it. Where it is ordered printed does it mean that it is printed in pamphlet form or in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. It is printed in document form as a document.

Mr. NORRIS. So that it will be accessible to Senators through the document room?

Mr. SMOOT. It goes directly to the Senate document room.

Mr. NORRIS. While I am on the subject and for general information, how many copies will be printed under the rule?

Mr. SMOOT. This could hardly be designated as a public document.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I understand it is not a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. There is generally printed the number likely to be called for.

Mr. NORRIS. But who determines that? Is there not any rule as to the number to be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no absolute rule as to that.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask, then, what is the practice?

Mr. SMOOT. The practice is that the printing clerk judges as to how many copies would be really needed and orders that number, but if there is a further call for copies, then, of course, they are ordered, up to $200 worth, by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any information about the practice of the clerk in that respect in a case of this kind? How many would he order printed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator what the rule has been. Generally more have been printed than have been called for.

Mr. NORRIS. That, of course, is not the question I am asking, and I am not particularly interested in that. I wanted to know what the practice was. If anyone else knows, I shall be glad to be enlightened.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I can not state exactly how many would be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF ATTEMPTS TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 92, submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on the 27th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That there be appointed by the Vice President a committee of five Senators to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained at Washington, or elsewhere, to influence proposed legislation now pending before the Senate. The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists, attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends; and in giving the name of the lobbyist to give the particular bill upon which he is working, and if it be the tariff bill the item he is seeking to change.

The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill, and the inquiry shall include the character of the representation and the circumstances under which it was made in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation.

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and to send for persons and papers in the prosecution of said investigation.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Hughes	Overman	Smoot
Bradley	James	Penrose	Stephenson
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Sterling
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Stone
Burton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Sutherland
Catron	Kern	Reed	Swanson
Chamberlain	La Follette	Robinson	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Root	Thompson
Crawford	Lewis	Saulsbury	Thornton
Cummins	Lodge	Shafroth	Tillman
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Townsend
Fall	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Vardaman
Gallinger	Myers	Shively	Walsh
Goff	Nelson	Simmons	Weeks
Gronna	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Works

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city on important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it has been stated in some of the newspapers that the resolution now before the Senate had for its purpose some partisan advantage. I desire to disavow immediately and emphatically any such motive upon my part. I am not conscious of any ulterior purpose whatsoever. It is entirely immaterial to me what party the investigation may help or what party it may hurt. I care not what person may fall under the condemnation of the investigation or what person may be vindicated by the investigation.

It will be taken for granted, I hope and believe, that the members of a legislative body ought to be guided solely by a desire to advance the public welfare. There are differences of opinion among Senators with respect to the tariff bill now before us. Some Senators believe—and believe with the utmost sincerity and the highest good faith—that it will promote the public interests. There are other Senators, with like high motives and with like sincere faith, who believe that its effect will be disastrous to the American people. In this conflict of opinion, which is common and natural, it is of the highest importance that the vote of every Senator upon this bill shall register his informed and conscientious judgment upon its merits. It is of not less importance that the country shall believe that every vote cast in the Senate as the bill passes through its various stages is the expression of an honest conviction intelligently formed.

I need not say more with regard to the general conditions which surround us.

There have been, as we all know, hundreds of people in Washington within the last two or three months endeavoring to influence the conclusion to which Senators are gradually arriving respecting the merits of the bill as a whole and respecting the justice of its individual items. I would not venture to say how many have been here upon that mission, but there have been a great many, and there are still a great many such persons—I will come presently to ascertain or to inquire what they ought to be called—who are interested in the conclusion which the Senate shall finally reach upon this especial measure.

For instance, I represent a State that probably has as little direct concern in the tariff as any State in the Union. I represent a State that can probably care for itself without any assistance whatever from legislation as well or as completely as any State in the Union. Yet this bill had barely reached the Senate until there came into my office a committee composed of three of the best known and the most estimable men in my State. They constituted a committee raised by what is known as the Corn Belt Meat Producers' Association, an association made up of the farmers of my State, who would be horrified if from any source they were characterized as lobbyists attempting to improperly influence legislation. They came here to protest against admitting meat free and at the same time putting a duty on cattle. I acted simply as their guide to the subcommittee room presided over so graciously and, I am sure, so fairly by my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. They were received in a perfectly proper way; they were received kindly and decently, and they stated their case to the members of the subcommittee. What impression they made I do not know, nor need I inquire. They did not confine the submission of their case to the subcommittee in formal session. They laid the facts, as they understood them, before every Senator with whom they could secure an audience; and having done so, like the good people they are, they went home.

I do not know whether their visit here accomplished anything or not; that is yet to be ascertained; but I do not want the people of this country to receive the impression that there was anything wrong in those men from my State coming to Washington for the purpose of putting before individual Senators or a committee of Senators their case as they understood it and explaining how the proposed change in the tariff law would affect them.

The same thing occurred with regard to a committee raised by the employees and the employers in a business in which pearl buttons are manufactured. They came here, and I did for them precisely what I did for the committee of farmers. They laid their case before Senators and before the proper committee, and they went home. I could not find it in my heart to criticize them for the effort they were making to sustain what they believe to be a valuable industry in which they are engaged, in which their capital is employed, and to which their services are given.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. KERN. I rose only to inquire whether the word "lobbyists," as used in the resolution, was intended to refer to men of the character indicated by the Senator, and I ask the question because in looking at the language of the resolution I find it states that—

> The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall not myself attempt to define the meaning of the word "lobbyist." I intend in a moment or two to present the definition which a very well known and commonly accepted lexicographer gives to that word; and one of the things I hope this committee will do is to define, for the use of the American people, the meaning of the word "lobbyist," so that those people who have a right to come here and have a right to be heard may not be reproached with this term, and so that we may be able to separate, in the public mind, the sheep from the goats, and condemn the one without consigning the other to the pillory.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator, which is whether it would be in harmony with the purpose he has in mind to add, on line 6, after the word "lobbyists," the words "and any other persons"?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will consider that presently, Mr. President. Just now I am not——

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that amendment in line 6 of the first paragraph of the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think probably that would be a wise amendment, although the committee would have no difficulty in entering upon and discharging its duties without it. However, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. The thought I have in mind is that there is so much doubt as to what constitutes a lobbyist, and there might be some individual here who might have been guilty or might not of improper motives, but perhaps would claim he was not a lobbyist; and so that the resolution may cover the whole situation, I make that suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly I shall not make any objection to increasing the breadth and scope of the resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will offer that amendment.

Mr. ROOT. The second paragraph of the resolution covers that.

Mr. PENROSE. It will not do any harm to put those words in line 6, as I suggest.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall have no objection if, after I have finished, the amendment is offered.

Likewise, Mr. President, there were a great many people in our State who seemed to feel that it was unjust to put a duty on oats and to admit oatmeal, rolled oats, and other like products free. They came here and labored earnestly with those having the matter in charge and with Senators, who must determine whether that is a wise adjustment of the tariff schedules.

There have been hundreds, Mr. President, of such people here on one side and upon the other; and it seems to me, inasmuch as it has been given out that lobbyists are attempting illegitimately to influence the Senate and to change the bill, that we ought to look into the matter and inform the country whether we believe that the people who come here under such circumstances have a right to come, or whether they are to be disparaged and condemned with the term "lobbyist." Whatever that word means, it does not sound good in the American ear. Whatever may be its technical definition, no man cares to be called a "lobbyist." Somehow or other we have gradually formed the conclusion that a lobbyist is doing something selfish, corrupt, or personal, as distinguished from promoting a cause upon its merits.

I have taken the time to copy from the dictionary—Webster's, I believe—these definitions, and I consulted, I think, a recent edition.

> Lobby: The persons, collectively, who frequent the lobbies of a legislative house to transact business with the legislators.

Of course that is not comprehensive enough. The word originated on account of work of that character being done in rooms adjacent to a legislative hall and to which members of the legislative body could be called for conference or for conversation, but long ago the word escaped any such narrow bounds as that. The most successful, the most corrupt, and the most effective lobbyist I ever knew never went within a half mile of the Capitol Building. It is not necessary that a lobbyist shall be physically adjacent to a legislative body or in a so-called lobby. The word has come to mean a kind of service rather than a place in which the service or in which the act is performed. But I read further:

> Persons, collectively, not members of a legislative body, who strive to influence its proceedings by personal agency, whether in a lobby or elsewhere.

Again:

> To address or solicit members of a legislative body, in the lobby or elsewhere, with intent to influence their votes by personal agency. The term "lobbying" does not necessarily imply any corrupt influence, and in some States of the United States statutory provision is made for the registration of persons so engaged in accordance with the conditions provided. At common law it is held illegal as against public policy, irrespective of whether corrupt or not.

I think it is high time, I think this is the most opportune time, to investigate the subject, so that we may distinguish the lobbyist—the man who ought to be stamped with a public sign of some kind, in order that he may be known wherever he is pursuing his vocation—from the other men of the country who come here for the purpose of influencing legislation in a way that is recognized by every man to be not only legitimate and lawful but praiseworthy.

Again, Webster says:

> To urge or procure the passage of a bill, measure, etc., by personal influences addressed to the individual legislators; also to influence (a legislator) by such means.
> Lobbyist: A member of the lobby; a person who solicits members of a legislature to influence them in the exercise of their functions.

While these definitions are not very satisfactory—they are a little vague—yet they convey to my mind a meaning; they do trace the difference; they do mark the line between the legitimate and the illegitimate attempt to influence legislation.

In this connection I desire to have the Secretary read what really induced the offering of this resolution. I ask the Secretary to read from an article published in one of the Washington newspapers on Monday afternoon last—a statement which, according to its terms, was issued from the White House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is read will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much interested, Mr. President, in this matter. I trust this investigation will result in giving a definition of "lobby" and "lobbyist" that will be satisfactory to the Senate and to the country. The definitions the Senator gave are not very enlightening, and I want to read a definition from the Century Dictionary, which would seem to indicate that every man who comes here and has been here is a lobbyist. It is this:

> Lobbyist: One who frequents the lobby or the precincts of a legislative or other deliberative assembly with the view of influencing the votes of members.

It does not say "corruptly influencing," but with a view of influencing in any way members of the body to vote for or against a bill or an item in a bill. That is not satisfactory to me, and I apprehend it is not satisfactory to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that if this committee should find themselves wise enough to give a definition that would be more satisfactory than any the Senator has read from Webster or than the one which I have read from the Century Dictionary, they would be doing a great service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am sorry. I will repeat that the definitions given by the Senator from Iowa from Webster's Dictionary as well as the one which I have read from the Century Dictionary do not seem to be very satisfactory. I think they will not be satisfactory to any Senator; and I said if this committee in their wisdom shall be able to evolve a definition that will be satisfactory to the Senate and to the country, they will have done a great service, because I can not believe, as the broad definition in the Century Dictionary would seem to imply, that any man who frequents the precincts of a legislative body with a view of influencing the votes of Members can properly be termed "a lobbyist" unless he undertakes to act corruptly or by illegitimate means.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I should like to suggest that the important word in that definition is the word "frequents."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. A broad distinction is necessarily marked by that word between one who comes here legitimately to represent an interest which concerns either himself or some one whom he represents, and another man whose business it is to frequent legislative corridors with a view by any means—frequently, as this term has become associated in the public mind, improper means and corrupt means—to influence legislation; in other words, a man who is a professional. So I do not think there is much doubt about what that definition means. It seems to me to be a very correct one. If a man comes here legitimately to represent an interest which is to be affected by legislation, he is not engaged in an improper business and is not subject to criticism, while, on the other hand, a man who makes that his profession, and who is ready to endeavor by any means which may be practical in their effect to influence legislation by frequenting the halls or corridors for that purpose, is a lobbyist. The other man is not a lobbyist in the sense in which we generally consider the term to be opprobrious.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from Georgia for that suggestion. It occurred to me that there was that differentiation and that it might well be taken into consideration. A man who frequents the lobbies naturally comes under the definition of a lobbyist, while a man who comes here simply to make a suggestion about an item in a tariff bill or about a general bill, for instance, as the friends of labor legislation are in the habit of doing, ought not to come under the ban.

I thank the Senator from Iowa for permitting me to put in this definition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now ask for the reading of the extract from the newspaper which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The President's statement in full is as follows:

"I think that the public ought to know the extraordinary exertions being made by the lobby in Washington to gain recognition for certain alterations of the tariff bill. Washington has seldom seen so numerous, so industrious, or so insidious a lobby. The newspapers are being filled with paid advertisements calculated to mislead the judgment of public men not only, but also the public opinion of the country itself. There is every evidence that money without limit is being spent to sustain this lobby and to create an appearance of a pressure of public opinion antagonistic to some of the chief items of the tariff bill. It is of serious interest to the country that the people at large should have no lobby and be voiceless in these matters, while great bodies of astute men seek to create an artificial opinion and to overcome the interests of the public for their private profit. It is thoroughly worth the while of the people of this country to take knowledge of this matter. Only public opinion can check and destroy it.

"The Government in all its branches ought to be relieved from this intolerable burden and this constant interruption of the calm progress of debate. I know that in this I am speaking for the Members of the two Houses, who would rejoice as much as I would to be released from this unbearable situation."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, personally, I can neither affirm nor deny the truth of the statement just read. It is natural that I can neither affirm it nor deny it, because not only am I an obscure Member of this body, but I happen for the time being to be a member of the minority, and I assume that whatever influences of this sort have been used have been directed toward the dominant part of this body. I know that if such influences have been used, they have been entirely unavailing. It is not conceivable that any Senator here could fall under the influence or be swayed in the least degree by such a lobby as that described in the statement I have just had read; but this is the time to discover of whom this lobby consists, of what it consists, and what it is trying to do; this is the time to make it impossible that there shall ever gather together another such lobby as is there described. If it is now in existence—I do not know whether it is or not, but if it is—let us expose it so that the whole country may know not only what has been done but who has done it, and never again will a President of the United States feel impelled to state to the country that a great measure is in danger of being modified or amended under an influence such as he has suggested.

Therefore, I hope, Mr. President, that we may hold this investigation. There is nothing like publicity to destroy not only the effect of lobbying such as is there described, but there is nothing like publicity to destroy the lobbyist himself, for such a lobbyist can not live in the full light of the exposure that would follow the investigation which I have proposed. I earnestly hope there will be no opposition to the adoption of the resolution, and that, when adopted, we will carry the inquiry forward with zeal and with promptitude, so that before we even begin to debate the tariff bill we may know whether these influences are still at work.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I simply wanted to ask my colleague if he thought 10 days would give sufficient time to make this investigation. In view of all the other matters on hand it seems to me that 10 days is a very brief time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feared, Mr. President, that 10 days would not be enough; but so hopeful am I that it can be done before we begin the consideration of the tariff bill that I put the minimum limit. I am quite willing that the time shall be enlarged, but I suggest to my colleague that if the committee finds it impossible to complete the inquiry within the 10 days it could then apply to the Senate for an enlargement of the time.

One thing more, and I am done. I have not asked for an appropriation for this investigation. I do not know whether it can be carried on without an expenditure from the contingent fund of the Senate or not, but I think it can be. I believe there is enough patriotism here, enough unselfishness here, to carry on this investigation without the expenditure of a penny. Every Senator upon the other side, and most of the Senators on this side, are provided with three employees. Most of them are, I take it, stenographers; and we can do this work without incurring any expense. But if it is necessary to incur some expense and have it defrayed from the contingent fund, then the committee, when appointed, ought to ask the Senate for that authority. I ought not to ask the Senate for it, but the committee can ask the Senate and can show its reasons for doing so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better to have this resolution sent to one of the standing committees of the Senate already provided with clerks and stenographers and everything else? If we create a select committee, I am afraid it will be necessary to go to some expense that would be totally unnecessary if the resolution were sent to a standing committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not at all particular about that. I want the investigation made, and I asked for a special committee because many Senators who may be on a standing committee to which this resolution would naturally be referred are so employed now that they could not give the necessary time to it. I hoped the Vice President would appoint upon this committee Senators who could give the subject their undivided time and attention, and thus hasten the conclusion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should think either the Judiciary Committee or the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which are at this time comparatively unemployed, could make this investigation thoroughly, if the Senator will substitute either one of the two for the select committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. In answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I will say that I should prefer a special committee, even if it did require a payment from the contingent fund; but, of course, I would rather have the matter investigated by a standing committee than not have it inquired into at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the proper time I shall move to substitute one or the other of these committees for the select committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as definitions have been inserted, I should like to call attention to and have printed in the RECORD the definition given in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, because I think it comes nearer to the popular idea of a lobbyist:

One who makes it a business to procure the passage of bills pending before a legislative body.

Then he quotes the definition in Bryce's American Commonwealth:

One "who makes it a business to 'see' members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to the promoters." (1 Bryce Amer. Com., 156.)

Then there are cited the various judicial decisions on the subject and the various judicial definitions. I suggest that the whole paragraph be printed in the RECORD, because I think the reference to the cases will be useful for the purposes of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, it will be printed as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A contract for the employment of personal influence or solicitation to procure the passage of a public or private law is void (21 Barb., 361; 16 How., 314; 34 Vt., 274; 15 Oreg., 330), as contrary to sound morals and tending to inefficiency in the public service (93 Wis., 393) if by its terms or by necessary implication it stipulates for or tends to corrupt action or personal solicitations (69 U. S., 45; 98 Ind., 238; 36 N. Y., 235; 40 id., 543; 127 id., 370; 18 Ohio St., 469; 149 Pa., 375). And if the contract is broad enough to cover services of any kind, either secret or open, honest or dishonest, the law pronounces a ban upon the contract itself. (2 McArth., 268.) It is not required that it tends to corruption If its effect is to mislead, it is decisive against the claimant. It may not corrupt all, but if it corrupt or tend to corrupt some, or if it deceive or tend to deceive some, that is sufficient to stamp its character with the seal of reprobation before a judicial tribunal. (5 W. & S., 315; 7 id., 152; 59 Pa., 19; 100 id., 561.) But it has been held that though the contract contemplates the use of personal solicitation, yet if no personal influence is brought to bear upon the members and no dishonest, secret, or unfair means employed to accomplish the object, it is not illegal. (86 Cal., 542.)

Where the agreement is for compensation contingent upon success, it suggests the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the desired end. The law meets the suggestion of evil and strikes down the contract from its inception. (69 U. S., 45; 98 Ind., 238; and see 60 Minn., 26.) But if the contract does not by its terms or by necessary implication contain anything illegal or tend to any violation of sound morals, the fatal element should not, through an overzealous desire to fortify against the deplorable effects of lobbying contracts, be injected into it by mere suspicion and conjecture that the party intended to do an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means. Presumptions in human affairs are in favor of innocence rather than of guilt, and this rule applies in testing a contract. (93 Wis., 393.) In the last two cases, brought by the same plaintiff, the contracts were somewhat similar; but in the first the decision was based mainly on what was done under and before the contract was entered into, whilst that of the latter was upon the construction of the contract.

A contract for services as an attorney before a legislative body is valid (22 Kans., 692), and where it contains an agreement to labor faithfully before such body to effect the desired end it is not necessarily illegal (34 Vt., 275). It is allowable to employ counsel to appear before a legislative committee or the legislature itself to advocate or oppose a measure in which the individual has an interest (36 N. Y., 241, followed in 52 How. Pr., 144), and an agent may be authorized by the legislature to prosecute claims on behalf of the State which require the procurement of legislation for a contingent fee (164 Mass., 241). Services which are intended to reach only the reason of those sought to be influenced rest on the same principles of ethics as professional services and are no more exceptionable. They include drafting the petition which sets forth the claim, attending to the taking of testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments and submitting them orally or in writing to a committee, and other services of a like character; but such services are separated by a broad line of demarcation from personal solicitation, and though compensation can be recovered for them when they stand alone, yet when they are blended and confused with those which are forbidden the whole is a unit and indivisible, and that which is bad destroys the good. (21 Wall., 441.)

In Massachusetts, by statute, lawyers or agents endeavoring to secure the passage of a bill must file written authority from their principal; in California lobbying, openly practiced, is declared by the constitution a felony, and in Georgia a crime.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the manifest purpose of this resolution. Especially am I interested in having a correct and authoritative definition of the word "lobbyist," so that the men who are here for entirely proper purposes may not be stigmatized in any way, as they seem to be by the language of the resolution.

I am about to offer an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which I think will in no wise limit the inquiry or interfere with its scope.

The first part of the resolution, down to and including line 11, provides for the constitution of the committee and confers upon it general powers. The second part of the resolution provides an instruction as to taking the statements of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them concerning pending legislation, the character of the representation, and the circumstances under which it was made, in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation. The third part requests the President to furnish the committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th of May, and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes of legislation, and so forth.

The second part of the resolution, commencing with line 12, on page 1, and ending with line 4, on page 2, requires this committee to hale before it every Senator and compel him to disclose the names of all men who have made representations to him on any subject or on the subject of the tariff. I will say to my friend from Iowa that if that were undertaken to be done a very large part of this session would be consumed. I am sure I should occupy some hours myself if I were to undertake to recount to the committee the names of all the men who have talked to me on the various phases of this tariff bill, and undertake to repeat to the committee all the representations they have made to me on these various subjects.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say that I think the Senator from Indiana does not quite catch the import of that paragraph.

Mr. KERN. I am only assuming that the language conveys the meaning intended.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not take long, I am sure, to put down the names of all those the Senator could remember. Those whose names he could not remember, of course, could not be put down.

Mr. KERN. That is obvious.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it would only include the character of the representations and the circumstances under which they were made. I do not think anybody would construe that to mean that the Senator from Indiana must attempt to put down the conversations he has had with all the people who have come to him upon the tariff question, but what we want to know is whether anybody has come to the Senator from Indiana making a representation which was not a fair and legitimate representation to influence legislation.

How can we discover it unless we take the word of the various Senators? Moreover, if it did take the Senator four or five hours to do it, in my judgment he could not render the people of this country a more valuable service than to help restore, if it ought to be restored, the confidence which the people of the country ought to have in the Senate of the United States, and to destroy the idea that we were about to enact legislation under the influence of bad men and for bad motives.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KERN. In just a moment.

The language to which I am referring requires the committee—to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill, and the inquiry shall include the character of the representation and the circumstances under which it was made—

That is, as to each representation—in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KERN. I beg pardon for a moment.

I think it would be very difficult for a committee or for the Senate to draw a conclusion as to whether an attempt to influence legislation was a proper or improper attempt if it was not known specifically what was said by the lobbyist or by the advocate of certain interests to the Senator.

I first yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I wanted to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if under this resolution Senators would not be required to search through their correspondence and get all their letters and telegrams, because, of course, representations need not be made orally. I should like to ask the Senator if it was his purpose to require Senators to do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope Senators will not be overtechnical or hypercritical in interpreting the language that is being used. If any Senator can point out any method by which we can ascertain whether he has been approached by any lobbyist concerning any legislation now pending before the Senate that will not require some such disclosure as I have suggested, I shall be very happy to adopt another plan that will be less burdensome. But what I am trying to find out is whether any Senator has been approached by a lobbyist, and whether it has been sought to bring to bear upon him any influence that is unfair, dishonest, illegal, or illegitimate. How can we do that without having those Senators say something?

Mr. BRYAN. Then, as I understand, it is not the Senator's intention to require us to go through our correspondence and search out the names there?

Mr. CUMMINS. I had not correspondence in my mind at all when I drew the resolution. I just thought of the hundreds who have been swarming around Washington and around the Capitol here in the last two months, all of them eager to make representations concerning their business to Senators both in committee and out of committee; and I wanted to know whether among all those hundreds there were some who were using improper methods and so conducting themselves that they could be called lobbyists, and therefore would fall under the just condemnation uttered by the President of the United States in the statement made by him.

Mr. KERN. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas for a question.

Mr. BRISTOW. Referring to the wording of the second paragraph, I was going to inquire of the Senator from Indiana as to how we would know whether lobbyists had improperly approached Senators with a view of influencing their votes or their action upon legislation unless we knew who the men were, the character of their representations to the Senators, and the subjects upon which they were made. There might be a difference of opinion as to whether it was a proper or improper influence, and in order that that may be determined it seems to me we must know what was said and the subject of the conversation.

Mr. KERN. In what I said, Mr. President, I was leading up to the amendment which I propose to offer. I made some criticism of the language of these two parts of the resolution. I had already stated that the first part of the resolution confers ample plenary power upon this committee to reach the facts sought. Keeping that in mind, keeping in mind, now, the second provision, that the committee is required and instructed to bring each Senator before it instead of leaving that matter to his own judgment, and that the third section is in the nature of a cross-examination of the President of the United States, I offer an amendment which I should like to have read at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the amendment is read, may I be permitted to say a word?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. KERN. The amendment fits in so closely that unless it inconveniences the Senator I should prefer to have it read at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] moves to amend the resolution by striking out all after line 11, on page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made. All persons appearing before the committee are required to testify under oath.

It is further resolved, That the President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its investigation by giving to it any information in his possession with reference to the subject matter of the investigation which he considers it proper to make public. The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and send for persons and papers in the prosecution of the said investigation.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I submit that the object to be attained is provided for in that amendment, and I think it makes the language a little less objectionable. There is no purpose in offering this amendment either to curtail the power of the committee or to narrow the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to say in regard to this resolution that I have no objection to any correspondence I have, and I feel sure that no Senator has any objection to any correspondence he has being given to the committee; but it seems to me there is an effort to put the President in a false position in connection with this resolution in the speeches that have been made. The President has not by insinuation, he has not even indirectly, intimated that a single Senator in this body was improperly approached. He says he knows he is speaking for all of the Members of the House and Senate who wished to be relieved from this lobby. The only thing the President has said is that there is a large lobby trying to influence public opinion and to create the impression that the sentiment of the country is so-and-so on legislation, using the newspapers, and by their numbers and by their insistence trying to create a false evidence of public opinion. He calls on the public that he thinks agrees with him in tariff reform and tariff reduction to let their ideas be known. The President has not in any way by insinuation intimated that any Senator has been improperly approached. I am perfectly willing to have any investigation. The more rigid and the more thorough it is, the more it is pleasing to me. But I am not willing to have the President put in the attitude of having made an accusation that Senators, either as a body or individually, have been improperly approached.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Virginia read the resolution? I think he must have taken its sense from some one who has misinterpreted it. The resolution does not impute anything to the President. It simply asks that the President shall furnish the names of the lobbyists referred to in the article which has been read at the desk. It does not say the President has made a charge that Senators have been improperly influenced, but he says there is a lobby, and I assume that having ascertained it he knows of whom it is composed, and I ask that he give us the names of those people so that we may deal with them, inasmuch as we only have any power to deal with them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, and the morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution we have had under consideration be taken up for further consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no regular order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that Senate resolution 92 be taken up by the Senate for consideration.

Mr. KERN. I think there will be no objection to going on with the resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from Arizona will not insist on displacing the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. My request was made upon the suggestion of Senators sitting near me, but I withdraw the same.

Mr. KERN. I think there will be no objection to proceeding with the resolution by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; then I withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. As I was stating, the President has no objection to any investigation. But the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, and also the second resolution requiring each Senator to come before the committee with his correspondence and the representations made to him, can have no other purpose except to leave the impression that the President has charged that Senators were being improperly influenced.

The only thing contained in the interview of the President, as I previously stated, is that there was a large number of attorneys or lobbyists trying to create a false public opinion as to the sentiment of the country in regard to tariff reform.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is not a lobby intended to create a public opinion—a lobby intended to influence the Senate? For what purpose is a public opinion being created if it is not to influence the legislation that is now pending before the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the President has an idea that persons are active in trying to create a false public opinion; by their activity, by their use of papers, he states in his interview, they are trying to create a false public opinion as to the wishes and sentiment of the country in connection with tariff reduction. His interview simply calls on the public to let their views be known, to let their wishes be ascertained, in order to show that this is a false public opinion.

I have no objection, and no one on this side has any objection, to a thorough and complete investigation, but we are satisfied that the interview of the President does not permit the construction which some gentlemen try to put upon it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I am clearly within the facts when I state that a majority of the Senate and of all the people who read the President's article are of the opinion that his statement was made for the purpose of influencing certain Members of the Senate who it was supposed were hesitating about supporting the tariff bill as it passed the House. After the President's statement a Democratic Senator will hesitate before he votes for amendments, even though he conscientiously believes in them. I have no evidence or knowledge that there is or has been any corrupt lobby operating here in connection with the tariff. But the President has intimated that there is, and certainly his party, which constitutes the majority of the Senate, can not afford at this time to split hairs as to what the language of the resolution of investigation shall be. The President has insinuated that a lobby, one of the greatest ever known, one of the most corrupt, is here in Washington and elsewhere for the purpose——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Wait a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has misstated the language used by the President.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am stating what is the clear understanding of everybody.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator said the President intimated that there was a corrupt use of the lobby.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That it was an insidious lobby—a lobby with unlimited money; and I can think of nothing more corrupt than where those two things exist—an insidious lobby with plenty of money—and that it is creating a false public sentiment in the country which is having an effect or may have an effect upon legislation.

The President ought in all fairness to specify what he has on this subject, and I think it is our duty as self-respecting Members of the Senate to request him in no uncertain language to submit such information as he possesses and which induced him to make his statement.

I repeat, there is no misunderstanding about the purpose of his interview. Gentlemen may refine the language as much as they please; he simply had one object in view, and that was to give the impression that a lobby was influencing the Senate, improperly, of course.

We have a right to know on what he based his insinuation. Senators ought not to haggle a great while about the language that it should use in this resolution. There is no reflection upon the President in this proceeding. We simply ask him to submit to the Senate the knowledge that he has which induced him to make the statement and which will form the basis for an investigation on the part of the Senate. If he knows the things which he has charged, he ought to submit them to the Congress, in order that the committee may work intelligently and proceed at once with the investigation. There should be no evasion or false modesty indulged.

I certainly hope that we can pass a resolution which means something and which the committee can use as the basis for their most important work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as has been said more than once in this debate, there may be a difference of opinion as to what constitutes an insidious and an improper method of approaching legislators. I have in mind, and every Senator here may well have in mind, because I doubt not it has been his experience as well as mine, that certain great and rich and powerful life insurance companies of the country have sent broadcast all over the country printed slips, to be signed by every policyholder whom they have, asking them in another circular to sign and date the same and send it to their Senators and their Representative, with the view undoubtedly of influencing legislation and with the view undoubtedly of creating in the minds of Senators and Representatives the impression that there was a great upheaval of public sentiment in revolt against the idea of taxing what are called mutual insurance companies. That similar things have taken place with regard to other matters concerning which the income tax and the other features of the tariff-bill deal is known to every one of us.

I think that the language used by the Senator from Indiana is more comprehensive, more searching, broader at any rate, than the language used by the Senator from Iowa, and will bring within the scope of the resolution every possible subject of legitimate inquiry.

The only objection I have to the resolution is the creation of a special committee, which I regard as unnecessary. It might come about that we would have to spend three or four hundred dollars or more out of the contingent fund. The Judiciary Committee of this body is composed upon the whole of its best and its most astute lawyers, men who are in the habit of making investigations and carrying on cross-examinations.

I shall therefore move an amendment, Mr. President, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa while I read the amendment. I move that there be stricken out in lines 1 and 2 the following words:

> There be appointed by the Vice President a committee of five Senators—

And that the resolution shall then be made to read as follows:

> That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is authorized and instructed—

The first part of the resolution would then read:

> That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is authorized and instructed to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained—

And so forth.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the Senator any objection to inserting in his amendment the exact language of the Executive, that there is a numerous, industrious, and insidious lobby?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, I would have no objection to inserting——

Mr. SHERMAN. Further, I should like to know who they are who are likely to consume by their predatory tactics some of us new Senators in office before they are identified.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to answer the Senator from Illinois. He has asked me a question. If we are in earnest, Mr. President, about this matter, and if you are honest about it, and if you desire to ascertain the truth, we are not going to begin it by ironical flings at the President of the United States; and there could be no object at all in inserting that language in this place except just that identical purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask a further question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The effect of it would be something absolutely alien to the investigation itself. It could accomplish no good. The Senator knows that this side of the Chamber is not going to hurl reflections at the President, either by innuendo or otherwise.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Mississippi——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that language is ironical and useless, why does the Chief Magistrate of the country use it in applying it to a legislative body?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say that the language was ironical, and so forth. I said its use in this connection would be ironical. I might very well quote a part of the Lord's prayer in an ironical way, but the language of the Lord's prayer would not be ironical. I am now trying to get the matter before the Senate so that it can be properly investigated. I believe the Committee on the Judiciary is the ablest committee of the body and that it is best fitted to make the investigation.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I interpose a word there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want an investigation. I have no desire to reflect on anybody, and I am sure no other Senator has. I hope that feeling will not get into the consideration of the resolution. I prefer a special committee for the reasons I have stated, but that preference is but a slight one, and I, in so far as I can do it, am perfectly willing to have the Judiciary Committee authorized and instructed to do this work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator that I am further of the opinion that the Judiciary Committee would be a better committee for this purpose than any select committee that could be constituted, because they have been selected as the lawyers of this body.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would ask the Senator from Mississippi to change his amendment slightly so that a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee could carry on the investigation. It would be impossible to get a full committee——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that. I will modify it so as to read:

> That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, or a subcommittee appointed by that committee, is authorized and instructed—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to accept that amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] should be adopted. I will point out the advantages of it, or at least one, which, I think, will be recognized. The purpose of the resolution, as has been disclosed by the utterances of the author of it and by others in debate, is to reach those who may have attempted to use any improper influences to affect legislation.

Now, the language used in the first paragraph down to line 11 does recognize the distinction between lobbyists such as are included within the definition read by the Senator from New Hampshire, those who are frequenting legislative halls for the purpose of affecting legislation, and, on the other hand, those who are attempting to simply represent legitimate interests and in a legitimate way present those interests to legislators. I say that distinction is properly recognized in the first paragraph, but in the second paragraph it is not. It is the second paragraph that is sought to be displaced by the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The Senate will recognize that in the first paragraph persons concerning whom the investigation is sought to be made are denominated as lobbyists, and we will not be in doubt as to the persons whose acts are sought to be investigated, but in the second paragraph it will be noticed the language is—

> The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill, etc.

That would necessarily include all that the Senator from Florida inquired about. It would include every communication which has been made to any Senator. While none of us have any objection to that scope of the inquiry, so far as it could relate to our disclosing every communication which has been received, it is evident that such an investigation would be interminable. I certainly have no objection to having the disclosure of every communication which I have received, and yet

I am satisfied it would take a good long time to present the letters, to say nothing of the oral communications I have had, all of which have been representations made to me by persons in a legitimate way of their legitimate interests, and matters which it would be immaterial to bring to the attention of the Senate with the view it now has in this proposed investigation. But if the language of the second paragraph should be retained that would be necessary. It is a direct instruction to take from Senators, under oath, the names of all persons who have made any representations. It seems to me that language would certainly not only be objectionable but it would be entirely foreign to what is the purpose of the Senate in the adoption of the resolution. What is the purpose of the Senate? As I understand it, and about which I presume there is no doubt, it is to try to ascertain whether there are any parties who are correctly denominated as lobbyists—those who make a profession of trying to influence legislation, those who frequent the corridors for that purpose, who are here and being maintained for this purpose. The language used in the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is this:

> The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons—

Which, of course, would include the persons denominated in the first paragraph as lobbyists—

> by such persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made.

That, it seems to me, covers the entire ground. I would simply suggest one amendment to that. I think the use of the words "such persons" is not liable to any serious misunderstanding; but in order to make the purpose and the designation more explicit and to leave no possibility of doubt, I would strike out the word "persons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "lobbyists," so that it would read:

> The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such lobbyists to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made—

And so forth.

I would suggest to the Senator from Indiana—I do not see him here at this moment—to strike out the word "persons," in the second line of his amendment, and to insert the word "lobbyists," so that there can be no doubt as to the purpose and scope of the investigation.

I will make a suggestion in reply to the statements of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. The Senator from Kansas suggested, very pertinently, that it would be impossible to judge as to whether the representations were improper unless the representations were disclosed. That, of course, would lead to an investigation as to all representations; and I would suggest that properly the matter might be met when the Senator appears before the committee by him being asked the question, "Has anyone approached you or made any representations to you other than of a legitimate character—such as you recognize to be legitimate? Has any professional lobbyist approached you?" If he said "no" and there was in the possession of the committee any facts which led to the belief that there were such, of course, upon cross-interrogation, that matter could be brought to light and disclosed; but——

Mr. BRISTOW rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, it would be certainly impracticable, within the scope of 10 days or a year, for a committee to hear everything that had been said to a Senator or to hear everything which has been represented to him through letters or otherwise in regard to this matter. It could only be done by interrogating him as to whether or not there had been anything which, in his opinion, was improper or of that nature.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Georgia speaks about inquiring of a Senator as to whether or not a lobbyist had appeared before him. How are we to know who a lobbyist is, or how do you determine who is a lobbyist?

Mr. BACON. I can imagine in my own case, if the Senate will pardon a personal allusion, if I should appear before the committee and I were asked the question, "Has any lobbyist approached you?" I could say with absolute confidence, "No"; because I can say that I have not been approached by anyone, except by persons who have been in the representation of a legitimate interest in which they were personally concerned, and I do not consider such persons to be lobbyists.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. On the contrary—if the Senator will pardon me a moment—if the committee had information that there were around here certain persons who were professional lobbyists, they might ask me, "Has Mr. So-and-so ever spoken to you?" "No." Or they might ask me any other question which might elucidate whether or not I had been improperly approached; but it must necessarily be left at first to a general statement on the part of a Senator whether he had been so approached, and if he had he could disclose that fact.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it seems to me that the policy suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] would very much limit the scope of this inquiry. In order that the Senate might know whether or not a lobbyist had approached the Senator from Georgia it seems to me that we ought to know who had approached the Senator from Georgia and what the conversation was. Then the committee could judge whether or not it was a proper conversation or whether or not the party was a lobbyist. If you leave it to a Senator to determine whether or not a lobbyist has approached him, you simply limit this inquiry so that the Senator might get up and confess that a lobbyist had importuned him or that he had not. If a Senator submits the names of parties who have come to him, stating the business upon which they came and what they said, then the committee and the Senate will know and form their own judgment as to whether or not they were proper proceedings or improper proceedings.

Mr. BACON. It is not proposed by the terms of this resolution to limit the inquiry to the suggestion made by me. I am simply talking about what would be the practical way in which the committee would proceed. If the committee had reason to doubt what I said, it would have perfect power to say, "Well, Mr. BACON, produce the name of every man who has talked with you." There is nothing in the resolution which would prevent it. If, on the contrary, the committee thought they could rely upon my own judgment in the matter, possibly they would not go further than that, but if the committee had reason to doubt the accuracy of my judgment as to whether or not the man was a lobbyist or whether or not I had been approached by those who were lobbyists, the committee would, in connection with the part of the resolution which it is proposed to retain, have full power to go on and examine me as thoroughly as they wished as to everybody who had spoken to me and as to every communication which had been made to me.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Indiana will accept the amendment which I suggest, which is to strike out the word "persons," in the second line, and to insert "lobbyists," so as to make it certain. Otherwise it might lead to some misunderstanding. Of course I shall not press the amendment if the Senator from Indiana does not desire it.

Mr. KERN. I will state that if the word "lobbyist" had a well-defined meaning, I should not hesitate about the substitution.

Mr. BACON. The first paragraph which the Senator from Indiana proposes to retain speaks of lobbyists only.

Mr. KERN. I understood that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was accepted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I find that the amendment which I had intended to propose is not necessary, and I have withdrawn it, not on the floor of the Senate, but in conversation with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I called the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact that the second paragraph contained the breadth that he thought the whole resolution should have, and that it was, therefore, not necessary to insert the amendment in order to reach the purpose which the Senator from Pennsylvania desired to accomplish. I accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. BACON. I think it practically means the same thing, but I simply desired to put it beyond any question; but as there is some doubt as to whether or not the amendment would be acceptable I shall not offer it. I do think, however, that the amendment as it stands is certainly not only an improvement but absolutely necessary, unless we propose to impose a burden upon this committee which it would be impossible for them to bear and to open an investigation which it would be impossible for them to correctly make.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a very few minutes. I can not understand this shrinking on the part of Senators—because there is no other conclusion to draw—from stating to this body with whom they have been conferring. I offered a resolution for that information last week, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance, but nothing has been since heard of it.

I probably have had as many persons calling on me about the tariff bill as has any Member of this body. The State which I in part represent here is close to the Capital, and there is hardly a paragraph in the tariff measure which does not affect the State of Pennsylvania; but I am prepared this afternoon or to-morrow, or whenever this committee meets, to furnish a complete list to the committee and to the Senate of the full name, occupation, and address of every caller who has entered my committee room or met me on the street or in the hotel to make any representations concerning the tariff bill. Why should not other Senators be willing to do the same thing for the enlightenment of the country in this condition of absolute secrecy regarding the framing of the tariff bill and under the grave charges and innuendoes which have been made by the President in the newspapers?

To say that a Senator is to judge in the secrecy of his own mind as to whether he has been approached by a lobbyist seems to me to be an absurdity. Many Senators may be unsophisticated as to lobbyists; they may not recognize one when he comes along. [Laughter.] These gentlemen are generally well dressed, of attractive demeanor, of cordial manners, and of a hospitable turn of mind, and are not the persons to impress an unsophisticated Senator with the sinister character of the design which lurks beneath their pleasing exterior. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's very minute description of lobbyists discloses the fact that he is intimately acquainted with them.

Mr. PENROSE. I am thoroughly acquainted with them, Mr. President. In 15 years' service in this body, and with considerable activity in tariff legislation, I know the lobbyist probably as quickly as anybody in this Chamber. I also know the business man who comes here with extravagant claims and ridiculous assertions to influence Congress and tariff legislation, and, so far as I am concerned, I have never paid any attention to anybody except one in whose patriotism, loyalty to the Government, and knowledge of the subject I had complete confidence. Only the other day we saw in the Washington papers an account of a gentleman of pleasing exterior who undertook to get indorsements for a candidate for the high position of an ambassador to one of the foreign governments, and Senators, apparently without guile, absorbed the suggestions of this plausible gentleman. [Laughter.]

Gold bricks are floating around the Capitol, Mr. President, and we have a number of new Members in this body. Now, it would be very mortifying to these new Members, these unsophisticated gentlemen, if they should appear and under oath testify that they did not consort with a lobbyist and that hideous intimacy should afterwards be disclosed [laughter] in some accidental manner along the line of the episode in connection with the selection of an ambassador to France or to England already referred to. For the protection of these very Senators, it seems to me that they ought, without reservation, to state who has been here. He may have been an importer interested in the free list; he may have been a southern gentleman interested in the cotton schedule, or he may have been a bad man from Pennsylvania interested in modifying the metal schedule. [Laughter.]

But let us have the information made public, and let, at least, there be one feature of the tariff discussion with which the whole American people can be familiar and on which a flood of light may fall, and that is the people who are here in Washington conferring with Senators individually or as a committee.

We heard during the campaign from the stump about the fact that the plain people of the land were not admitted to the councils of the Nation when a tariff bill came up. Perhaps we can find out where the "plain people" or their representatives are. I have not noticed undue crowds in the Union Station in my weekly pilgrimages to Philadelphia and my return to Washington. The only people that I have seen here are the wounded and battered and time-honored warriors who have been addressing themselves to Republican majorities in the Senate for the last 25 years. [Laughter.]

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. Let us have their names, and if among them there are hid away any obscure representatives of the "plain people" from some fastness in the mountains or remote village let their names be disclosed and let the majority Senators call our attention to them when the tariff bill is up for debate.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. KERN. I was about to ask to what Republican majority those gentlemen addressed themselves last fall?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand the Senator, Mr. President. If he will repeat his question, I will be very glad to answer it.

Mr. KERN. I say, I was about to ask to what Republican majority those gentlemen addressed themselves last fall.

Mr. PENROSE. I think those gentlemen last fall were in a kind of benumbed condition. [Laughter.] They thought the President was to be taken at his word, and that legitimate industry was not to be injured. All of them thought they were engaged in legitimate industry, and all of them thought that considerable tariff reductions would result in injury. The consequence was they stood like steers in an abattoir, unmindful of the slaughter awaiting them. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the basis of this resolution, as I understand, is the statement of the President. While I am in most hearty accord with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in advocating the resolution, it seems to me that it only goes into one portion of the facts contained in the President's statement. It might be well at the beginning to notice that the President's statement perhaps does not refer to the Senate in particular. If we are to take the evidence of legislators, the investigation ought to be held in reference to Members of the other House as well as with reference to Members of the Senate.

But laying that aside for the moment, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what to me appear to be the three important suggestions contained in the President's statement. First, his statement as to the existence of a lobby. Second, that—

> The newspapers are being filled with paid advertisements calculated to mislead the judgment of public men—

And also to change public opinion. Third—

> That money without limit is being spent to sustain this lobby and to create an appearance of a pressure of public opinion antagonistic to some of the chief items in the tariff bill.

Those are the charges made by the President; and it seems to me the resolution of the Senator from Iowa only undertakes to investigate one of them. Page 2 of the resolution, beginning with line 5, reads as follows—and it is the first place in the resolution where there is any reference or mention made to the statement of the President:

> Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May—

And so forth.

It strikes me that if we are to investigate that part of the statement and get from the President the names of those lobbyists, we ought also to investigate the other two propositions contained in the President's statement—one in reference to the publication of paid articles in newspapers having for their object the changing of public opinion and the influencing of public men, and the other statement that unlimited amounts of money are being used for the purpose of sustaining this lobby and carrying on this kind of a propaganda.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. If my resolution does not cover the phase of the matter just mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska, it is because I do not know how to use my mother tongue or my language. I have assumed that that was the most offensive type of lobbying—the lobbying that is intended to create public opinion, which, in turn, is to be used for influencing members of a legislative body; and I assumed, of course, that the investigation would cover all efforts made by these people to influence the legislative body before which the tariff bill is now pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree most thoroughly with the Senator that that kind of lobbying is the most offensive, and not only the most offensive, but it is the most harmful. But it strikes me that the Senator's resolution, if passed without any amendment on that subject, would not cover the investigation that it seems to me is more important than any other; that is, that we ought to know about the money that is being used without limit; we ought to know about the publication in the newspapers of advertisements intended to influence public opinion and to form public opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from Nebraska wants to reach the same end that I desire to reach.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not doubt it a bit.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if he will turn to the first paragraph he will find this sentence:

> The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think that is all very well, although that is followed by a provision that says they shall call before them all the Senators. Evidently that is one of the methods——

Mr. CUMMINS. That is one of the ways in which we will have to investigate.

Mr. NORRIS. Since the President's statement is the basis for all of it, would it not be more logical to go to the President and ask him to disclose the names of these men?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have asked him to disclose the names of these men.

Mr. NORRIS. And ask him to disclose the methods by which advertisements are paid for, and so forth?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that he does not know the methods any better than we do. He has stated the methods in his public statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt the President has at least some basis for his statement, and it seems to me we ought to go to the head of the charge and ascertain from the man who makes it the basis for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let us see; let us read this for a moment, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit it:

That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May.

Of course, he will also give the names, if he has them, of the men who are putting in these paid advertisements.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether he will or not.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why, they are lobbyists, are they not?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are the lobbyists to whom the President refers in his statement—the very men to whom he refers.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not sure about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. If we are not sure of that, we are not sure about anything.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the statement itself discloses that when the President refers to paid newspaper advertisements being used for the purpose of changing and influencing public opinion, he does not necessarily mean that it is being done by the lobbyists he refers to in the beginning of his statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Nebraska, of course, has not considered this further language in the resolution:

And any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

Mr. NORRIS. The last clause read by the Senator from Iowa would cover it in a general way. It is a general clause that would cover everything that could possibly be included in the investigation; but it is not a specific reference to what the President is perhaps referring to.

I have called attention to what I believe to be this particular weakness of the resolution in order to explain what amendment it seems to me ought to be made to the resolution. At this point I want to send to the desk an amendment I have prepared, which I believe will more fully carry out the theory and the idea of the resolution. It will come right after line 11, page 2, and will specifically refer to the particular matters I have mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that everything after line 11 has been stricken out.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. When was it stricken out, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] has moved to amend by striking out all after line 11——

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope that has not yet been adopted. I did not hear the motion put, and the argument upon it has not yet been finished.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered has nothing to do with the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did not the Senator from Iowa accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not. On the contrary, I very distinctly refused to accept it. I accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the way the Chair understood it; but the pending amendment is the amendment starting at line 11, and the proposed amendment——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit the Chair to state the condition of the record as the Chair understands it——

Mr. CUMMINS. The Chair is right. I accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment starts at line 11.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that is now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana, starting at line 11; so that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] must be an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. The Chair has not yet gathered the idea I have been trying to convey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has not gathered the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that I have not, but I have not offered any amendment on page 1. The Chair is talking about an amendment on page 1. I have offered an amendment to page 2, line 11. There are two lines 11 in this bill, as the Chair will see if he will examine it. One is on page 1 and the other is on page 2.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is stating the record as the Chair understands it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] moved to amend by striking out all after line 11, on page 1. That amendment is pending before the Senate, and, if adopted, will take the balance of the resolution from the Senate. Pending that amendment, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offers an amendment, which the Chair believes is not now in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I be permitted to be heard on that point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me be heard just for a moment. If I can have the ear of the Chair for just a minute, I think I can convince him that my amendment must be voted on before the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is voted on——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. NORRIS (continuing). Because it applies to the text which the amendment of the Senator from Indiana would strike out, and we must first vote on the amendment that goes to the perfection of the text of the bill before we vote on a motion to strike out. Therefore my motion would be voted on first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt about the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska; but the Chair still insists that it is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. May it be read for information? It has not yet been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment; and the Secretary will kindly read the resolution down to the point where the Senator from Nebraska offered his amendment, so that it may be understood.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] proposes to strike out, beginning on page 1, after line 11, the following words:

The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill, and the inquiry shall include the character of the representation and the circumstances under which it was made in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation.

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and to send for persons and papers in the prosecution of said investigation.

And in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out the Senator from Indiana offers certain other words. Pending that motion, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offers to amend the part to be stricken out as follows:

On page 2, after line 11, insert:

The committee is further instructed to investigate the charges made by the President in said statement in reference to the use of money to sustain said lobby, and in reference to the publication of newspaper advertisements intended to mislead public men and public opinion, and the committee is also instructed to ask the President for all the information in his possession bearing on the charges contained in said statement so made by him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no doubt the resolution as it now is or as I prepared it would give abundant and ample authority to the committee to do the very thing proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska; but I have no objection whatever to making my purpose still more specific and definite. Therefore, in so far as I may do it or can do it, I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will not be adopted. I think it would go far to emasculate the resolution and render the investigation futile.

I think this is a very serious situation, which is created by the public statement of the President of the United States. That statement opens with the words:

I think that the public ought to know the extraordinary exertions being made by the lobby in Washington to gain recognition for certain alterations of the tariff bill. Washington has seldom seen so numerous, so industrious, or so insidious a lobby.

That was published in the newspapers of Tuesday, the 27th of May, at a time when the tariff bill had passed the House, had been sent to the Senate, and was pending in the Senate. The efforts of a lobby can be understood only to apply to the Senate, and the effect of that statement must necessarily be that any Senator who votes to change the bill as it came from the House votes under the imputation put upon him by the President of the United States, before the people of the country, of having been influenced by a lobby.

I think it does not comport with the dignity and self-respect of the Senate of the United States to permit that imputation to pass without notice. I think this resolution should be adopted, and I think it should be adopted in such form as to indicate that the Senate is in earnest in intending that there should be a thorough, searching, and effective inquiry and exposure of whatever there may be to expose.

The two things in the resolution as proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] which are softened and in great part taken out by the amendment are the two things which I think it is our duty to insist upon. One is that the Members of the Senate shall make proffer of their testimony and their full disclosure to the people of the country of all communications with them which could, by any construction, form the basis of a finding or a suspicion that a lobby has been influencing them. We can not make that proffer except by a resolution of the Senate. No committee by its course of conduct can take the place of the Senate's own declaration before the people of the United States of its willingness and its desire under oath to make a full statement of the facts. I sincerely hope the Senate will not shrink from making that proffer of full disclosure.

The other thing which is practically taken out is a respectful call upon the President of the United States for the names, which, of course, he must have had in his possession before he made this public statement, and which will enable the Senate to make its investigation effective.

To my mind, the question between the resolution as offered by the Senator from Iowa and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana is the question whether we are in earnest or not; whether we mean the stringent and severe proceeding necessary to make effective our action, or whether we are willing that this shall go down the stream with the ordinary investigation and the finding of no results. I do not think the party of the President, the party in the majority, which is framing this tariff bill, can afford to emasculate this resolution; and I hope they will not amend the resolution in accordance with the proposal of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the Senator from Iowa accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and if so, is the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to be considered as an amendment to the resolution which includes the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Senator from Iowa had a right to accept the modification of the text of his resolution as proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, and that therefore the question pending before the Senate now is the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to the resolution as modified.

Mr. REED. To the amendment as offered by the Senator from Indiana I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first paragraph of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana add:

The committee shall further inquire and report—
1. Whether any Senator is financially interested in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill, and if so, to what extent.
2. Whether any Senator represents or is connected, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, association, or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will not accept my amendment to his amendment?

Mr. KERN. I have no objection to it, Mr. President. It seems to me, if we are going into the inquiry, it ought to be very full and very thorough. While I am on my feet, I want to say——

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Missouri why he does not offer that as an amendment to the resolution which I have proposed, which is broad and searching, and will be effective on the subject it covers? I would have no objection whatever to the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as an addition to my own, although it covers an entirely different field. I hope that the Senator will not try to strengthen the weakness of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana by the stringent proposition upon another subject which he has just offered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I intend to press this amendment as far as I am able, and if the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is not accepted by the Senate I will then claim the privilege of offering it to the resolution introduced by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. For a question, certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri, in order that there may be absolute fairness and that the Senators who are opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana but do want the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, that he has a right, I understand, under the parliamentary situation, to offer his amendment first to the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa, and it would properly be voted on first before the amendment of the Senator from Indiana would be voted on. So he can really offer it in both places and give both sides an opportunity to have the benefit of his amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the difficulty I have in agreeing with my friend from Nebraska lies in the fact that I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana improves the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, we have gone somewhat afield in this discussion. The question here is not whether an investigation shall be throttled in any way. If there is a man on this side of the Chamber who does not want to see a full, searching, and thorough investigation, then I am not aware of the fact.

I have no difficulty about the meaning of the word "lobbyist." I do not care in what sense the word is used; neither do I think the purpose of this investigation is to advise the new Members of the Senate who the lobbyists are, in order that they may escape contamination, as was suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. Somehow or other I have it in mind that the Senator who made that suggestion, coming from the party he represents and hailing from the great State of Illinois, is scarcely likely to be imposed upon by any lobbyist. If he is in that condition of unfortunate ignorance, I respectfully refer him to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who has evidenced a thorough and complete knowledge of the entire subject.

I was interested in the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania. His statement was to the effect that the city is full of these so-called lobbyists. He told us they were the same old battle-scarred veterans whom he had met in other days and upon fairer fields.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not say "fairer fields."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. In just a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is not quoting me correctly. I did not say "fairer fields." That expression is due to the Senator's poetic imagination.

Mr. REED. I said "fairer fields for the lobbyists than the fields that are now presented." That was my language, not the language of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I exculpate him entirely from having used so frank an expression.

The difference between the old days and the present time is that formerly the great manufacturing industries, the big trusts, the great combinations, came here and appeared before committees which believed in big trusts, in big combinations, in big profits, in big tariffs, and in big campaign contributions. The same gentlemen still come, but now, as I undertook to explain the other day, they must confront committees charged by the people of the United States with the pleasant duty of annihilating legalized loot.

The committees as now organized are determined to relieve the country from the exactions so long practiced upon them at the instance of the army of "battle-scarred veterans," to employ the tender phraseology of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr.

PENROSE], who for 20 years have been coming down to Washington to increase their profits by virtue of the policies and friendly interest of the gentlemen who represent the other side of this Chamber. They came here then to write their own bills and arranged to have their own confidential secretaries installed as the confidential secretaries of the Finance Committee. Truly we have entered upon new times, and I doubt not the "battle-scarred veterans" believe "the times are out of joint."

Mr. President, we need no longer attempt to disguise the fact that an attempt is being made to embarrass the President. That purpose was plainly disclosed by the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. I do not, however, ascribe the same sentiments to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], but the Senator from New York practically puts this case as a direct challenge to the President of the United States. He insists that President Wilson has been guilty of making a charge which impugns the honor and challenges the integrity of Members of this body. He insists that the honor of the Senate is directly involved, and that we must take cognizance of the President's statement and proceed to investigate into its truth or falsity.

Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator from Iowa had that purpose in view, but I do believe that the language employed by the Senator from Iowa in his resolution is subject to a construction somewhat similar to that given by the Senator from New York. Now, if it be a mistake to assume that the President of the United States has impugned the honor or the integrity of this body, then I ask whether we ought to adopt a resolution which can be construed or understood as an affront offered by the Senate to the President, who, I insist, has given no just reason for offense.

Mr. President, I have seen in the Senate in my short time here hours consumed over the phraseology of a resolution calling for papers or documents or information. I have never known a resolution to be passed which in any manner could be construed as an imputation against the President or as a suggestion of an investigation of the President's conduct. I have seen no man upon this side, when a President of a different political faith sat at the other end of the Avenue, attempt in any way to assume the position of an investigator of the President, and I do not believe we have reached a point yet where Senators upon the other side of this Chamber want to take that position.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Missouri turn to the resolution and point out where in the remotest degree it imputes to the President of the United States any wrongful or improper purpose or conduct?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has been reading, and I think he did not hear me, although I twice stated that I exonerated the Senator from Iowa from any thought or purpose of the kind referred to; but I did say that the debate had taken on that character, and I referred especially to the utterances of the Senator from New York. Now, to fully answer the Senator I shall need to go on for a moment, and I will endeavor to show——

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me say just before the Senator goes on that there is no word in this resolution disrespectful, disparaging, or critical of the President of the United States.

Mr. REED. I have said that the Senator did not intend it. I have, however, expressed the opinion that the language of the resolution is not fortunate, and I am about to discuss that phase of it.

Mr. President, the resolution I propose to discuss in a moment; but, first, I want to clear away, if I may so far trench upon what may be almost called the decencies of the occasion, as to ask my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to let me discuss a question which he himself suggested to me. I am imposing on his good nature, but as I am on my feet I beg his indulgence for doing that which he has just told me it was his purpose to do.

Let us read this statement of the President that has opened the vials of the wrath of the Senator from New York. Reading President Wilson's interview without prejudice, reading it in a spirit of fairness and candor, let us see whether it does, in fact, reflect upon the honor of Members of Congress. If it does, then I have nothing further to say; but if read fairly, if looked at through clear glasses and not through the mists of prejudice, it is not susceptible of the sinister construction insisted upon by the Senator from New York. Then let us, as fair men, give it the proper construction and cease crying out that the honor of Congress has been attacked. Here is the statement—

> I think that the public ought to know the extraordinary exertions being made by the lobby in Washington to gain recognition for certain alterations of the tariff bill. Washington has seldom seen so numerous, so industrious, or so insidious a lobby. The newspapers are being filled with paid advertisements calculated to mislead the judgment of public men not only but also the public opinion of the country itself. There is every evidence that money without limit is being spent to sustain this lobby—

Not to corrupt Members of Congress, but "to sustain the lobby." To sustain it how? The statement is clear on the point, viz, "they are filling the newspapers with paid advertisements."

I read on—> and to create an appearance of a pressure of public opinion antagonistic to some of the chief items of the tariff bill. It is of serious interest to the country that the people at large should have no lobby and be voiceless in these matters, while great bodies of astute men seek to create an artificial opinion and to overcome the interests of the public for their private profit. It is thoroughly worth the while of the people of this country to take knowledge of this matter. Only public opinion can check and destroy it.

> The Government in all its branches ought to be relieved from this intolerable burden and this constant interruption to the calm progress of debate. I know that in this I am speaking for the Members of the two Houses, who would rejoice as much as I would to be released from this unbearable situation.

The last line I have just read is a certificate to every man, woman, and child of the United States that the President has not impugned the integrity of Congress or any of its Members. It gives a complete cast and color to the entire article. What the President was complaining of was not that Members of Congress were being corrupted. What the President was charging was not that Members of Congress were being improperly approached with money or bribes.

The President was charging that there was a large number of men here who were endeavoring to manufacture an artificial public sentiment; that they were expending large sums of money to manufacture that sentiment by paid newspaper articles and otherwise. He was calling the attention of the country to the fact, in order that the country might understand how to read and how to understand the articles and arguments being put before the people of the United States by these interested lobbyists. He was giving the people of the country to understand that only one side was being represented; that large sums of money were being expended for advertising and other purposes. He was not challenging the integrity of either House of Congress. That such was the purpose of the President must be clear to every fair man who reads what the President actually said.

We surely ought to be willing to candidly view the acts of the Chief Executive of this great Nation. We ought, as just men, in weighing and measuring the utterances of the President, to have regard for the concluding words:

> I know that in this I am speaking for the Members of the two Houses, who would rejoice as much as I would to be released from this unbearable situation.

Mr. President, I submit to the candor of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, I submit to the candor and fair judgment of the people of the United States the words of the President I have just quoted, and I ask that they be taken into consideration along with the other portions of his declaration. I ask that it be also remembered that the statement was written by the pen of a man who has never been given to making loose charges or recklessly impugning the honor and integrity of the public men of the country. Thus viewed, there can, it seems to me, be found no fair man to longer dispute the character, the purpose, and the intendment of this article. Of course an unfair critic can select a single word from this article and find a sinister meaning in it; so you can take one word or one sentence from any document ever written, tear it from its context, and find in it cause for offense. But Senators in this Chamber will hardly indulge in that kind of criticism.

Mr. President, why do I prefer the amendment that has been submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]? I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to what I am saying, because I am in full accord with the Senator from Iowa in the fundamental thought of this resolution, because I believe his purpose is right, because I am in sympathy with this and every other resolution that will purge the reputation of Congress of every aspersion and every suspicion that may exist in the mind of any man or woman in the United States. I prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, because I think it is as complete and as full as is the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, that it will reach the point he desires to reach, and yet, at the same time, it is not subject to a criticism which I think lies against the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa. The resolution of the Senator from Iowa reads:

The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session.

That seems to imply, Mr. President, that it is necessary to investigate the Senate; it seems to imply not so much an investigation of lobbyists and lobbying as an inquiry into the probity of Senators. It seems to suggest that we suspect each other, and are therefore engaged in requiring each Senator to purge himself under oath.

For that reason I do not like the form in which this resolution is couched. Nevertheless I believe the committee should be empowered to go to every source for knowledge and to inquire of Senators, if they see fit so to do. I think they will so inquire. So, Mr. President, instead of that language employed in the resolution of the Senator from Iowa this is suggested:

The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made.

Thus the desired point is arrived at; but we do not reach it by language which may by some be regarded as self-stultification by the Senate. I do not think that the point I have just discussed of great importance. The matter is, after all, largely a matter of form.

I pass to the last clause of the Senator's resolution, which, I think, is subject to the objection that it does not treat the President of the United States with that delicate consideration which his office entitles him to receive, and I am sure it was no part of the purpose of the Senator from Iowa to treat him otherwise. The resolution reads:

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he refererd in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

Mr. President, that, in effect, is putting the President of the United States upon his trial and proof. It is, in substance, a demand that he shall come hither and produce the evidence. I do not believe that is treating the Chief Executive of this Nation with proper consideration. Other Presidents have occupied the presidential chair, and other Presidents have given forth public statements, and it has never been regarded as true that a President dare not open his lips without at once being called to the bar of the Senate and then and there required to answer for that which he has uttered.

Mr. President, I have in the past often heard it here asserted that the President of the United States should not be requested to furnish books and papers unless the request was coupled with the language, "so far as he may deem it consistent with the public interests." So this language has been suggested in lieu of the language proposed by the Senator from Iowa:

It is further resolved that the President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its investigation by giving to it any information in his possession with reference to the subject matter of the investigation which he considers it proper to make public.

I think that is a more respectful way to phrase a request addressed to the Chief Executive. I am very sure that the President of the United States, under that resolution, will lay before the committee of Congress everything he can lay before it with due regard for the public interests. He may have received some information in confidence; he may be, as we are, the recipient of information in such manner as to make it undesirable to name a particular individual who furnished some important fact; but at the same time he may be in a position, as many of us have been, to give valuable information to a committee or to a court or to an investigating body, at the same time retaining the name of our informant. I submit to the Senator from Iowa, whose candor and fairness I have always admired, if the language proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is not as effective for all practical purposes as that contained in his own resolution, and if it does not more clearly accord with that difference to which the present Chief Executive is justly entitled?

I am sure the Senate does not desire to do anything that would seem to be offensive against the very niceties of the proprieties, and I am sure the Senator from Iowa does not.

Now, Mr. President, I beg the Senate's pardon for so long taking its time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it would be impossible for me, I believe, to be disrespectful toward the President of the United States, for whom I feel a very great admiration and of whom and of whose good faith I hold not the least suspicion. I never dreamed, in preparing the resolution concerning which the Senator has spoken, that it could by any possibility be interpreted as disrespectful. There is not in it the least tinge of challenge. I do not think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] would be so effective. If I did, I would have no pride of authorship, and would be very glad to accept it. It is not so effective; but I am afraid that what is most desired is that the invitation shall come from a Democratic instead of a Republican source.

Mr. REED. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only reason I can imagine that would have prompted my friends on the other side in seeking to change the resolution.

Mr. REED. No; Mr. President, I think I can speak for the Senator from Indiana, and I will say that if the Senator from Iowa will offer the amendment as his we will accept it, so far as I have authority to represent anybody.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that if I had offered it in that form I would have found my friend from Indiana offering as an amendment the form of my original resolution, because there can not be any disrespect in this resolution; there can not be any challenge in it of the President of the United States, as such, that a lobby is here. The Senate asks him to give the committee the names of the lobbyists; that is all. What possible disrespect can there be to the President of the United States in such a plain, definite proposition?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me long enough to let me make a statement to him?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. This is not only not an attempt to have a resolution passed by this side instead of one offered from the other side, but I say to the Senator now that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is defeated I shall vote for the Senator's resolution, offering to it the amendment I have submitted to the amendment. The Senator is in error about an idea or motive so small as that being back of this matter. It is not as generous as the Senator usually is to make such a suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Missouri seemed to feel that from this side of the Chamber there came a challenge to the President; that we were attempting in some way to question his good faith and to ask him to do this thing because we believed he could not do it. I believe he can do it——

Mr. REED. He will certainly do it, then.

Mr. CUMMINS. To a degree, and I want him to do it, and I am quite willing to insert the word "respectfully." Then the resolution will differ from the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana only in this respect: We want the names of this lobby; I ask for them, and the Senator from Indiana does not. That constitutes the difference between the two forms. I am accustomed to deal candidly and openly, and when I want a thing I ask for it. If the Senate does not want the President of the United States to give the names of the men who are termed lobbyists, then, of course, we ought not to ask for their names. I want to know who they are, and I do not believe that anything but an overzealous imagination could read into this resolution anything other than the most complete respect and deference to the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to one feature. The Senator is a very alert and attentive Senator, and very few things have happened since he has been in this Chamber that have escaped his notice. I am quite sure that I can say with perfect confidence that since the Senator has been a Member of this body—and it has been much to the advantage of this body that he has been here—I am sure the Senator has never known of a resolution passing the Senate calling upon the President of the United States for any information, regardless of how certain the body may have been at the time it passed the resolution that the information was in the possession of the President, that that resolution did not contain the phrase "if, in his judgment, not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. CUMMINS. I will correct that at once. The moment the Senator from Georgia reminds me of that, I know that language ought to be there, and it is a mere oversight that those words are not in the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am glad to have that assurance from the Senator; but that is certainly one very important feature in this proposed amendment correcting what was not found in the original resolution—a proper regard to the courtesy which has always been considered as imperative in addressing any communication or any request to the President of the United States.

If that were all, of course the matter could stand in that way. But, Mr. President, what I desire particularly to take issue with is the extreme vigor with which Senators attack this amendment as being one calculated in any manner to abridge the fullness and thoroughness of this investigation. What is the purpose of the investigation? The purpose is as disclosed in the first paragraph of the resolution, and I will remark, in passing, that if the purpose were such as the oversensitive apprehension of the Senator from Iowa would indicate, simply to take away from the Republican side of the Chamber the credit of having introduced the resolution, the amendment would not be confined to one clause of his resolution, but would substitute something for its entirety; and there is no pretense of that; there is no such purpose whatever.

On the contrary, the resolution will still remain the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, and the first half of it is left in identically the words which he himself proposed. The purpose of that, which is thus disclosed in the language of the Senator from Iowa himself, is to ascertain who are the parties who constitute the alleged lobby. That is the purpose of it, as declared in the first part of the resolution.

The question I want to submit to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from New York is whether or not, in the proposed amendment, there is anything which will defeat that purpose or which will in any manner render the work of the committee less effective? Bearing in mind that that is the purpose—to ascertain the names of those who constitute this alleged lobby—what is the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana? It is this:

The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made.

I ask the Senators to suggest to the Senate any information required, either as to the name of the person to be discovered, or the character of the representation, or the person to whom the representation was made which could not be obtained under this language. With the committee clothed with that power, what name of a person could be withheld as not being authorized under the resolution as thus amended, what representation could be withheld as not authorized to be investigated by the resolution, and the name of what Senator could be withheld?

Senators grow earnest and eloquent in the charge that the purpose is to contract and narrow the investigation. With the purpose, as disclosed, to ascertain those three things, I ask the Senator from New York or the Senator from Iowa to suggest one single fact that could exist in connection with this matter the ascertainment of which could not be made under the authority granted in that sentence—one single supposititious case. I pause for a reply.

Is there a supposititious case that the Senators themselves can suggest to-day which might exist and which the committee would not have the power to bring out under that language? I do not think either of the Senators can do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will try to do it.

Mr. BACON. I shall be very happy to have the Senator do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The objection I have to the second paragraph, as it would be if the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] were adopted—the first paragraph of the amendment itself—is that it refers directly to the term used in the first paragraph, namely, "lobbyist"; and it would permit every Senator, or every other person, to put his own construction upon the act of influencing legislation and determine whether it was a lobbying act or otherwise. I want the resolution broad enough so that Senators will be called upon to disclose all the representations that have been made to them touching the tariff bill—I do not mean in detail, but I mean their character—and then the public and the Senate can determine whether those representations were of a lobbying character or were made in a lobbying way.

That is the difference between the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana and my resolution; and therein not only would the range of investigation be narrowed but the opportunity of investigation would be greatly foreclosed.

Mr. BACON. If the amendment which I suggested to the Senator from Indiana had been adopted the pending amendment might be subject to the criticism now made by the Senator from Iowa. I proposed, myself, to strike out the word "persons" and insert "lobbyists." The Senator from Indiana objected to it; I withdrew the suggestion, and that word is not in it. It uses the word "persons." I can conceive, myself, of no possible information which it is sought to secure by means of this resolution which would not be secured under the language I have just read; and it goes on further to require all persons appearing before the committee to testify under oath.

Now as to the second proposition, whether this is sufficiently full in the call made upon the President:

It is further resolved, That the President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its investigation—

What investigation? Why, the investigation as to whether or not any persons have attempted to influence this legislation. It is not an ambiguity by any means. The purposes of the invsetigation are set out in the first paragraph, as drawn by the Senator from Iowa himself. Those purposes thus alluded to in this clause of the amendment are designated specifically as those in which the President is asked to aid by giving his assistance to the committee. How?

By giving to it any information in his possession with reference to the subject matter of the investigation.

Mr. President, while that is couched in more courteous language, it is exactly the same in effect as if we asked for the specific information and requested that he give it, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interests.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FALL. I have been listening with a good deal of interest to the argument of the Senator from Georgia, and I should like to know why he prefers the amendment to the original resolution if the amendment does not change the original resolution. If it is the same thing, why change it? Why adopt the amendment rather than the resolution?

I have been listening with a great deal of attention; and I should like to know why the Senator prefers the amendment to the original resolution if there is no difference.

Mr. BACON. It is a question of taste, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. BACON. It is a question of taste. We think the language fully covers it, and that it is more respectful in every way, and intrusts the committee with this investigation in the more usual language, particularly the part of it which applies to the President of the United States.

I myself do not sympathize with any purpose to narrow the scope of the investigation. I do not think a man who comes here for the purpose of representing to a committee or to the Senate or to any Senator facts which relate to that which will affect his personal interests, or the interests of those with whom he is associated, has in any manner committed any impropriety. I do not understand Senators on the opposite side to make any suggestion of the kind; but I understand the purpose is to try to ascertain whether any improper or undue methods are being used for this purpose.

Before I take my seat I wish to say that we hear a great deal about the improvement in public and political morals and in political methods; and I want to express my very great gratification with the evidence which the Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber are to-day giving as to their increasing sensibility and sensitiveness upon the subject of improper influences being used in the procurement of legislation. Four years ago, when this Capitol literally swarmed with those who were interested in the tariff bill then under discussion, I recollect that day after day, for weeks, not one or two or dozens of men but streams of men were going from this Capitol building to the Senate Office Building, where the then majority members of the Finance Committee were holding their sessions, and from the office building returning to the Capitol Building. The charge was made on this side that such was the fact; that these influences were being brought to bear; and we had the highest evidence that such was the case through Senators rising in their places day after day and saying that this industry and that needed so much of protection, and that without it they could not live. With the charge thus made, we had no such extreme desire then on the part of Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber for an investigation as to the truth of that charge.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FALL. Did the Senator from Georgia at that time, or did any Senator on that side, ask for an investigation by resolution or otherwise?

Mr. BACON. There was no investigation made, because we made the charge and it was never denied.

Mr. FALL. I understand that the President of the United States differs from the Senator from Georgia, as I understand the statement of the President to be that there never have been so many lobbyists as now.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the Senator understands that is a matter of computation.

Mr. FALL. That is another matter of taste, then.

Mr. BACON. I do not recollect what the language is, but I will say that if there are as many lobbyists now as there were four years ago, this committee, when it begins its investigation, will have no trouble in finding them, because I know and every Senator who was here then knows that they were so much in evidence that a man had to shut his eyes not to be conscious of their presence. They were not only streaming between the Capitol Building and the Senate Office Building but they swarmed these corridors, and every man was here for the purpose of insisting that there should be this, that, and the other increase made in the pending tariff bill in order that he might have that much more of contribution from the general public for the purpose of maintaining his private business and promoting his personal prosperity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Hollis	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Hughes	Oliver	Sterling
Bradley	James	Overman	Stone
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Sutherland
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Catron	La Follette	Reed	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Robinson	Townsend
Clark, Ark.	Lewis	Root	Vardaman
Crawford	Lippitt	Shafroth	Walsh
Cummins	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	McLean	Sherman	Weeks
Fall	Martin, Va.	Shively	Williams
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Gore	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PAGE] is necessarily absent from the Senate to-day.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent by reason of sickness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I regard the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] as introducing a subject entirely foreign to the resolution which I originally offered, nevertheless there is no reason why such an inquiry should not be made. I am so solicitous that no one shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana—which narrows and I think paralyzes to a great degree this inquiry—on account of the presence of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, that I offer the same amendment to the resolution proposed by myself. It is the same amendment with these words added, which I think will follow the inquiry to its end. Where the amendment of the Senator from Missouri says:

> Whether any Senator represents or is connected, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, association, or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles—> and whether any such Senator has sought to influence any other Senator as to the duties upon any such article.

Mr. REED. Is that where the Senator's amendment ends? Did the Senator read his entire amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I read simply the addition which I have made to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Is the amendment the same as the one I offered, with those words added?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will ask the Secretary to read it at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa offers to modify the resolution by adding language which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to offer it to come in immediately after line 11.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has a right to modify it without offering it. He has a right to modify his own resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume I have that right, but I want the Senate to understand just what it is, and therefore I ask the Secretary to read it. It will be added after line 11 on page 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that, on line 11, page 2, the amendment which I offered has already been offered. So it ought to follow that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. Let it follow the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Iowa modifies his resolution as follows:

> Following the modification of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], accepted by him, add:
> "The committee shall further inquire and report:
> "1. Whether any Senator is financially interested in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill; and if so, to what extent.
> "2. Whether any Senator represents or is connected, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, or association or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles, and whether any such Senator has sought to influence any other Senator as to the duties upon any such articles."

Mr. LIPPITT. Before that modification is adopted, I should like to propose an amendment to it. In the first part, where it says the committee shall further inquire and report whether any Senator is financially interested in the production, and so forth, I should like to add the words "or professionally," so that the inquiry will read "shall inquire and report whether any Senator is financially or professionally interested," and so forth.

Further on, where it says "in the manufacture or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill," I should like to insert the words "or in any other legislation now pending or that has been considered during his term as a Senator."

In the second paragraph, where it says, "whether any Senator represents or is connected, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm," and so forth, after the word "connected" and before the words "directly or indirectly," I should like to insert the words "professionally or otherwise," so that it will read "whether any Senator represents or is connected, professionally or otherwise, directly or indirectly," and so forth.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator offer that to the amendment which I offered to the resolution? If so, I accept it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hoped the Senator would.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I believe that we will lose some of the strength of the inquiry, which I had hoped would be made with earnestness, nevertheless I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator if he would not also accept an amendment to inquire whether any Member of this body is in any way directly or indirectly interested in the welfare of any business interest in the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Or abroad.

Mr. FALL. Or abroad.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] as modified.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I can not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana because I believe that it is a limitation upon the proposed investigation. The amendment proposes to strike out all after line 11, on page 1. That which precedes it, and which it is important to consider in connection with it, I want to read to the Senate:

> The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends; and in giving the name of the lobbyist to give the particular bill upon which he is working, and if it be the tariff bill the item he is seeking to change.

Now comes the proposed amendment of the Senator from Indiana:

> The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons.

By whom?

By lobbyists. The Senate has been at some pains this afternoon to have incorporated in the RECORD of this day's debate the definition of the various lexicographers upon this term, and quite an elaborate argument was made by the Senator from Georgia for the limitation of the investigation to lobbyists.

Mr. President, the country has not forgotten, if the Senate has, that one of the worst scandals which ever touched this body grew out of a tariff bill where the corrupt influence that was used, or attempted to be used, was not by a lobbyist but by the head of a great trust, the owner of a great business. Surely, sir, the owners or part owners of the great protected interests should be brought within the scope of this investigation——

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. KERN. Would the substitution of the words "or any person or persons" meet the objection of the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana could be so altered in its terms that it would be as broad as the resolution proposed by the Senator from Iowa. But why not accept the original amendment? As perfected by the Senator who introduced it it is far-reaching and is now couched in even more respectful language in the paragraph addressed to the President than is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I do not believe that there ought to be any partisan lines drawn on this resolution. The communication which the President issued has been so construed by the press and the country as to call for prompt action by the Senate. The public is quick to suspect these protected interests. I have no criticism to make of the President, for whom I have the greatest respect. He must have had a basis for his statement. I believe that the Senate should insist upon the fullest, most searching, and thoroughgoing investigation which can be provided.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify my amendment. After the words "such persons," in the third line of the amendment, add the further words "or any person or persons," so as to read "such persons or any person or persons."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana as modified.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope it will be read, so that we can understand what it is; there has been so much modification to it.

Mr. STONE. I desire to say that I have been absent from the Senate during almost the entire session on committee work. I have just come in. I should like very much to have the question stated by the Secretary, so that I will know what I am to vote upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the question.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of the resolution after line 11, page 1, and in lieu of the words stricken out insert——

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me ask that the original resolution as modified be read and then the amendment, so that we may have both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read in compliance with the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The SECRETARY. The original resolution as modified reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee appointed by that committee, be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained at Washington or elsewhere to influence proposed legislation now pending before the Senate. The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends; and in giving the name of the lobbyist to give the particular bill upon which he is working, and if it be the tariff bill the item he is seeking to change.

The committee is further instructed to take the statements, under oath, of all the Senators as to the names of all persons who have made any representations to them during the present session concerning pending legislation, and especially concerning the tariff bill, and the inquiry shall include the character of the representation and the circumstances under which it was made in order to ascertain whether it was a proper or improper attempt to influence legislation.

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if, in his judgment, the same is not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish said committee with the names of the lobbyists to whom he referred in the public statement issued by him on the 26th day of May and any other information about them and their efforts to bring about changes in legislation now before the Senate which will promote the general welfare.

The committee is further instructed to investigate the charges made by the President in said statement in reference to the use of money to sustain said lobby and in reference to the publication of newspaper advertisements intended to mislead public men and public opinion, and the committee is instructed to ask the President for all the information in his possession bearing on the charges contained in said statement so made by him.

The committee shall further inquire and report: (1) Whether any Senator is financially or professionally interested in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill, or in any other legislation now pending or that has been considered during his term as a Senator, and if so, to what extent. (2) Whether any Senator represents or is connected, professionally or otherwise, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, association, or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles, and whether any such Senator has sought to influence any other Senator as to the duties upon any such articles.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and to send for persons and papers in the prosecution of said investigation.

The amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] proposes to strike out all of the resolution after line 11, on page 1, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert the following words:

The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons or any person or persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made. All persons appearing before the committee are required to testify under oath.

The committee shall further inquire and report: (1) Whether any Senator is financially interested in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill, and, if so, to what extent. (2) Whether any Senator represents, or is connected, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, association, or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles.

It is further resolved, That the President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its investigation by giving to it any information in his possession with respect to the subject matter of the investigation which he considers it proper to make public.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and send for persons and papers in the prosecution of the said investigation.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it seems that the amendments offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] are not incorporated in the amendment as perfected of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. That was the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I will say.

Mr. BRISTOW. They are accepted, of course, as a part of the resolution. I understand from the reading that the original resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa requires every Senator to state who has appeared before him in behalf of legislation, the names and the subjects that were discussed by them, so that the Senate may judge whether or not the influence was proper or improper, and it requires the President to give the names of the lobbyists referred to, if not incompatible with the public interest; but the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana does not require every Senator to state who appeared before him and what he talked about, and does not require the President to give the names of the lobbyists who are swarming the Capitol.

Mr. KERN. The amendment gives to the Judiciary Committee full, complete, and plenary power to make a full and complete investigation of all charges of this kind, and I think we have a Judiciary Committee that can be trusted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the reading of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and which was accepted, is not included. It should be included.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary is now incorporating it.

Mr. REED. The Secretary got it, I think, in the wrong resolution. It was accepted upon this side, but I did not understand that it was accepted on the other. If it was, then it ought to be incorporated in both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is now incorporated in both.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Secretary hears well. It was accepted on this side. He did not hear its acceptance upon the other side, although I did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CUMMINS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LIPPITT. Before that demand is put, I should like to know whether it is understood that the amendment which I offered to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and which was accepted by him, is a part of the original resolution and is a part of the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in both. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] as modified.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I am paired for the remainder of this afternoon with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. BURLEIGH's name was called). I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "nay," but I refrain from voting because of my pair.

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when Mr. PAGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PAGE] is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day, but he is paired upon this question and upon all other questions with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. Were my colleague present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota

[Mr. McCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily absent on business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently, not noticing the absence of my pair, but I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KERN (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I am requested to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." Under the circumstances, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WEEKS. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired on this question with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. If he were present, the Senator from Maine would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have announced my general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and vote. I vote "nay."

I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; and that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. He is absent, but he authorized me to vote on this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] was obliged to leave the city a few moments ago. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." As has been already stated, he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. LEWIS. I am requested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to explain that he was called away by necessary business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As has already been stated, I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has been called from the Senate on important business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have previously announced my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is necessarily absent because of sickness in his family. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 28, as follows:

So Mr. KERN's amendment to the resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before that question is put I would suggest to the author of this new resolution that possibly the Judiciary Committee had better be admonished to investigate itself and its own membership, as they will not have authority to do so under the resolution, as I understand it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope there will be no investigation of any Senator who shrinks from the investigation or who modestly wants to retire from the situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALL. Of course, in that view, I will withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. PENROSE. There seems to be a considerable backwardness on the part of Senators, according to what has happened, and I sincerely hope that the sensibilities of no Senator will be hurt during the conduct of this investigation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the permission of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, I will say that, so far as he is concerned, there is no apparent shrinking.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I have announced to the Senate that I shall be early and voluntarily before the committee with a full list of my callers.

The resolution of the Senator from Iowa having been completely emasculated, so that response to it is now entirely voluntary, those Senators who are guileless and innocent as to what a lobbyist is—and some of them have already been taken in during the short period of the special session—are at perfect liberty to withdraw from the scene of action. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE. Fortunately, Mr. President, very few of us have to offer apologies or explanations in advance. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out the word "ten," in line 6, and to insert "twenty," so that it will read "report within 20 days." The resolution has been added to, and it seems to me that it would be impossible to conclude the proposed inquiry in 10 days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. If you allow the time to remain at 10 days, it will hasten the work of the committee, and in the meanwhile if the committee find that they can not complete the investigation in 10 days they can come in and get further time; but giving a longer time will be merely an encouragement to the committee to go slow instead of going to work right away.

Mr. SMOOT. I will withdraw the amendment if any Senator thinks the work can be done within 10 days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we find that it can not be finished within the time specified, we will join with you in extending the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee appointed by that committee, be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained at Washington, or elsewhere, to influence proposed legislation now pending before the Senate. The committee is instructed to report within 10 days the names of all lobbyists attempting to influence any such pending legislation and the methods which they have employed to accomplish their ends; and in giving the name of the lobbyist to give the particular bill upon which he is working, and if it be the tariff bill the item he is seeking to change.

The committee is further instructed to ascertain the character of any representations made by such persons or any person or persons to influence legislation, the names of Senators to whom they were made, the names of persons making them, and the circumstances under which they were made. All persons appearing before the committee are required to testify under oath.

The committee shall further inquire and report: (1) Whether any Senator is financially or professionally interested in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article or articles mentioned in said tariff bill, and if so, to what extent, or in any other legislation now pending or that has been considered during his term as a Senator. (2) Whether any Senator represents or is connected, professionally or otherwise, directly or indirectly, with any person, firm, association, or organization engaged in the manufacture, production, or sale of any of said articles.

It is further resolved, That the President is respectfully invited to aid the committee in its investigation by giving to it any information in his possession with respect to the subject matter of the investigation which he considers it proper to make public.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and send for persons and papers in the prosecution of the said investigation.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next at 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate——

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I will withhold it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have given notice at several of the sessions of the Senate that I would call up, immediately after the disposition of morning business, Senate resolution No. 19, but the business of the Senate has been such that I have been unable to do so. I now give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall call up resolution No. 19 and move that it be then considered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive business the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FORREST GOODWIN, OF MAINE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Joseph Sinnott, Doorkeeper of the House, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. FORREST GOODWIN, late a Representative from the State of Maine, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, Mr. LOBECK, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. HILL, Mr. CRISP, Mr. DONOVAN, Mr. RAKER, Mr. GUERNSEY, Mr. HINDS, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma, Mr. GREENE of Vermont, and Mr. DYER as the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
May 29, 1913.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. FORREST GOODWIN, a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of 14 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The resolutions (S. Res. 98) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. FORREST GOODWIN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. GOODWIN at Skowhegan, Me.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed under the second resolution Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. CRAWFORD, and Mr. DILLINGHAM as the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 2, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the deep and everabiding gratitude which comes welling up from our hearts at this season of the year for our sacred dead. The sound of drum, the clash of arms, the roar of battle is hushed. In the silent bivouac of the dead they sleep "on fame's eternal camping ground." May the winds blow gently and the sun shine softly over their tents of green. We thank Thee that the Nation has not forgotten. They live in the hearts of the true; they live in the deeds they wrought. Their graves we strew with flowers; for them we sing our songs of praise. Long may their memory live, and longer yet their deeds inspire "our free-born sons with patriot fire"; and long may Old Glory float in peace over a people whose God is the Lord. So may Thy blessing be upon us, so may Thy providence guide us, by the memories of the past and the glories of the present, to a faithful service as citizens of a Republic whose genius is peace, happiness, and good will to all mankind.

Once more the mysterious visitor we call death has taken from this legislative body one of its Members, who promised faithful and efficient service to his State and Nation. Comfort us with the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul; and be very near to the stricken wife, that she may look forward to an everlasting reunion in a realm beyond the confines of earth. And glory and honor and praise be Thine, in the spirit of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 27, 1913, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. At what time?

The SPEAKER. At the regular time, 12 o'clock.

There was no objection.

WATER SUPPLY OF LOS ANGELES AND SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in parallel columns, the bill H. R. 4319 and the grant to Los Angeles, so as to show a comparison of the two, with a summary of points of difference between the two bills, so that they may be used by Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print certain bills in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, are these bills that have been introduced?

Mr. RAKER. One is a bill that has been introduced and the other is an act passed in 1906. I want the RECORD to show, in parallel columns, the difference between the Los Angeles act and the San Francisco bill, so as to avoid any question hereafter, and so that it may be easily accessible.

Mr. MANN. Does this relate to the Los Angeles Exposition proposition?

Mr. RAKER. No; this relates to the water supply of San Francisco.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

A statement showing that the proposed grant to San Francisco of right of way privileges through the public lands for the purpose of a municipal water supply, as contained in House bill 4319, introduced in the House of Representatives April 25, 1913, is substantially the same as the grant made by Congress to the city of Los Angeles for its municipal water supply. (U. S. Stat. L. 1905–1907, vol. 34, pt. 1, p. 801.)

(Important changes and new matter in italics.)

GRANT TO SAN FRANCISCO. (As amended.)	GRANT TO LOS ANGELES.
Granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.	An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timber Land Reserve, Cal., to the city of Los Angeles, Cal.
SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby granted to the city and county of San Francisco, a municipal corporation in the State of California, all necessary rights of way, not to exceed 250 feet in width, in, over, and through the public lands of the United States in the counties of Tuolumne, Stanislaus, San Joaquin, and Alameda, in the State of California, and in, over, and through the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, or portions thereof lying within the said counties, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining aqueducts, canals, ditches, pipes, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water to the city and county of San Francisco and such other municipalities on the Bay of San Francisco or adjacent thereto which may, with the consent of the city and county of San Francisco or in accordance with the laws of the State of California, hereafter participate in the beneficial use of the rights and privileges granted by this act, and for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining power and electric plants, poles, and lines for generation and sale and distribution of electric energy; also for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining telephone and telegraph lines, and for the purpose of	SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby granted to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., a municipal corporation of the State of California, all necessary rights of way, not to exceed 250 feet in width, over and through the public lands of the United States, in the counties of Inyo, Kern, and Los Angeles, State of California, and over and through the Sierra and Santa Barbara Forest Reserves and the San Gabriel Timber Land Reserve, in said State, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining canals, ditches, pipes and pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water to the city of Los Angeles, and for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining power and electric plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electric energy, together with such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may deem to be actually necessary for power houses, diverting and storage dams and reservoirs, and necessary buildings and structures to be used in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of said water, power, and electric plants whenever said city shall have filed, as hereinafter provided, and the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and constructing, operating, and maintaining roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transportation, and communication, together with such lands in said counties and also within the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, irrespective of the width or extent of said lands, as may be actually necessary for surface or underground reservoirs, diverting and storage dams, power houses, and necessary buildings and structures to be used in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of said water, power, and electric plants, telephone and telegraph lines, and such means of locomotion, transportation, and communication as may be established: Provided, That said city and county of San Francisco shall file, as hereinafter provided, a map or maps showing the boundaries, location, and extent of said proposed rights of way and lands for the purposes hereinabove set forth, together with the right to take, free of cost, from the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and the Stanislaus National Forest stone, earth, gravel, sand, tufa, and other material actually necessary to be used in the construction of its said water, power, and electric plants, and its said telephone and telegraph lines, and its said means of locomotion, transportation, or communication under such conditions as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, for the protection of the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest.

SEC. 2. That within three years after the passage of this act said city and county of San Francisco shall file with the registers of the United States land offices in the districts where said rights of way or lands are located a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way required for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act; but no permanent construction work shall be commenced on said land until such maps shall have been filed, as herein provided, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any changes of location of said rights of way or lands may be made by said city and county of San Francisco before the final completion of any of said work and operations so permitted in section 1 hereof by filing such additional map or maps as may be necessary to show such changes of location, said additional map or maps to be filed in the same manner as the original map or maps, and the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of extent of said proposed rights of way for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 2. That within one year after the passage of this act the city of Los Angeles shall file with the registers of the United States land offices in the districts where the lands traversed by said rights of way are located a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way, for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act; but no construction work shall be commenced on said land until said map or maps have been filed as herein provided and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any changes of location of said rights of way may be made by said city of Los Angeles within two years after the filing of said map or maps by filing such additional map or maps as may be necessary to show such changes of location, said additional map or maps to be filed in the same manner as the original map or maps; and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of said map or maps showing changes of location of said rights of way shall said maps showing changes of location of said rights of way or lands shall operate as an abandonment by the city and county of San Francisco to the extent of such change or changes of the rights of way or lands indicated on the original maps: And provided further, That any rights inuring to the city and county of San Francisco under this act shall, on the approval of the map or maps referred to herein by the Secretary of the Interior, relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States land office, as provided herein, or to the date of the filing of such maps as they may be copies of, as provided for herein: And provided further, That with reference to any maps heretofore filed by said city and county of San Francisco with the Department of the Interior or with the Department of Agriculture, or with any officer of either of said departments, that the provisions hereof will be considered complied with by the filing by said city and county of San Francisco of copies of any of such maps with the register of the United States land office, as provided for herein.

SEC. 3. That the rights of way hereby granted shall not be effective over any lands upon which homestead, mining, or other existing valid claims shall have been filed or made and which now in law constitute prior rights to any claims of the city and county of San Francisco, until the city and county of San Francisco shall have procured proper relinquishment of all such entries and claims, or acquired title by due process of law and just compensation paid to said entrymen or claimants, and caused proper evidence of such fact to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved under any act of Congress for the benefit of any parties other than said city and county of San Francisco or its predecessors in interest, and that no private right, title, interest, or claim of any person, persons, or corporations in or to any of the lands traversed by or embraced in the rights of way or lands granted to said city and county under this act shall be interfered with or abridged, except with the consent of the owner or owners, or claimant or claimants thereof, or by due process of law and just compensation paid to such owner or owners or claimants.

SEC. 4. That the city and county of San Francisco shall conform to all regulations adopted and prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior govoperate as an abandonment by the city of Los Angeles to the extent of such change or changes of the rights of way indicated on the original maps: And provided further, That any rights inuring to the city of Los Angeles under this act shall, on the approval of the map or maps, referred to herein, by the Secretary of the Interior, relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States land office, as provided herein.

SEC. 3. That the rights of way hereby granted shall not be effective over any land upon which homestead, mining, or other existing valid claims shall have been filed or made until the city of Los Angeles shall have procured proper relinquishments of all such entries and claims, or acquired title by due process of law and just compensation paid to said entrymen or claimants and caused proper evidence of such fact to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved under any act of Congress, nor affect the adjudication of any pending applications for rights of way by the owner or owners of existing water rights, and that no private right, title, interest, or claim of any person, persons, or corporation, in or to any of the lands traversed by or embraced in said right of way shall be interfered with or abridged, except with the consent of the owner or owners or claimant or claimants thereof, or by due process of law, and just compensation paid to such owner or claimant.

SEC. 4. That the city of Los Angeles shall conform to all regulations adopted and prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture governing the for-
